Addressing the conference over the weekend, Italian Foreign Undersecretary Raffaele Costa confirmed the government's support for the U.N. Security Council plan for elections in Namibia under international control. Any delay in these elections would only serve to perpetuate the presence in that country of foreign troops with the instability throughout the region that that implies, he said.

The conference delegates also approved a campaign to begin in Italy in a few days when thousands of postcards will be sent to the Pretoria government calling for the release of Winnie and Nelson Mandela and all political prisoners. Nelson Mandela, a 62-year-old black, is a symbol of the antiapartheid struggle in southern Africa. He has been in prison for 18 years. His wife Winnie, who also spent many years in jail, is currently under house arrest.

POLICE RECAPTURE ESCAPED FRONT LINE TERRORIST

AU012012 Rome ANSA in English 1957 GMT 1 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 1 Mar (ANSA) -- According to an as yet unconfirmed report, police yesterday captured Marina Premoli, the 41 year old woman terrorist who escaped from Rovigo jail on January 3. An anonymous caller telephoned ANSA's Turin office today to say that three "of our Front Line (leftwing terrorist group) comrades" fell into a police dragnet yesterday. The caller named Premoli among the three. Police supposedly arrested her in a Turin bar.

Premoli was one of four women who escaped the Rovigo jail after a terrorist commando blasted a hole in the prison [words indistinct] their flight. A passerby was killed in the action. Official sources have not yet either confirmed or denied Premoli's recapture.

BERLINGUER INTERVIEWED ON POLAND, THIRD WAY

PM261103 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 21 Feb 82 pp 1-2

[Interview with PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer -- date and place not specified]

[Text] [Question] With the publication of three lengthy articles in the CPSU's principal press organs, it may be said that the Soviet leaders' thinking on the stances adopted by our party has been expressed exhaustively. From time to time there have been replies by our newspapers, but perhaps the time has come to express an overall opinion on the Soviet criticism of the PCI. So we would like to ask you: Were you expecting this kind of response by the CPSU?

[Answer] We were expecting a response. We deemed it natural (and also correct) that a public debate on our stances on the part of the CPSU and also other communist parties be initiated. We have noted some change of language from one article to another.

We also take note of the assertions of wishing to keep open a dialogue and a debate. This has always been and remains our intention. However, we point out that a real and constructive debate is not helped by the distortions of our stances and the fact that they have not been made known to the Soviet people; no document, speech or article of ours has been published, even in summary form. We would have liked, and would still like, the debate to be or a truly democratic nature, and hence take place not only between leadership bodies and newspapers of the two parties but also, as happens here, among party members and among the public in the Soviet Union. But a debate of this kind should be based on directly communicating the respective stances. We have done so; the Soviets have not yet done so. Why? Are we to believe that at least part of our arguments would not appear so "sacrilegious" in the Soviet readers' eyes?

[Question] You have spoken of a distortion of our stances, made possible precisely by the lack of imformation. On what points has this distortion been practiced?

[Answer] On fundamental issues, such as our appraisal of the socialist societies, our position on international issues, our commitment to peace and against imperialism and even our stance on the Polish tragedy. On this last point the distortion has become falsification, since we have been accused of supporting extremist, adventurist and counterrevolutionary forces, as the imperialist secret services have. The fact is, however, that in all our stances on Poland not only have we never encouraged the extremists on either side but we have always maintained our appeal for a sense of responsibility, political moderation and the need for dialogue. This appeal converged with the positions of a broad sector of the Polish United Workers Party leadership group after Gierek was replaced and was based on the awareness of the real causes of the crisis and of its acuteness and therefore on the inalienable need for thorough political and social renewal. The disagreement with the Soviet comrades originated and continues only because they have been unable to take into account the real causes and real nature of the Polish crisis. There has been a complete failure to understand that only a thorough renewal could disarm the various extremist factions and make it possible to recover the workers' and society's trust in the party and in socialism.

This is one reason the argument that the introduction of martial law should be considered a measure that had to be taken as a "lesser evil" is definitely not convincing. Leaving all other considerations aside, it prompts further reflection. Of course we are not unaware of the problems of security for the Soviet Union, the legitimacy of its anxieties, the desire to have friendly, not hostile, countries along its borders. But I wonder whether a regime such as the one established in Poland on 13 December can provide any guarantees and reassurance in that direction to the Soviets. Indeed, it should be clear that neighborliness, solidarity in defense, understanding and mutual assistance between two nations demand as a precondition a sincere and deep-rooted friendship between their peoples, and the citizens' sincere adherence to shared interests and objectives. Does the present Polish regime guarantee all this, as far as the Soviet leaders are concerned? Can the Polish people be considered more friendly toward the USSR now than before?

[Question] Aside from the distortions of our positions, what struck you most in the content of the three articles' arguments?

[Answer] First the concept of interparty relations they express. The very title of PRAVDA's first article contains an unacceptable spirit of condemnation -- indeed, we spoke of anathema -- which goes far beyond intolerance, which can be unintentional.

In fact the Soviet articles resurrect and reaffirm the concept based on the assumption that there is an ideological and political orthodoxy valid for all and of which the CPSU sets itself up as guardian, thus essentially conferring on itself the role of world center and universal authority whose task it is to establish the conformity or error of a particular party's thinking and action. As you wrote in L'UNITA, there is an aspiration to pronounce a supreme political and ideological judgment, stemming from a "leadership" role which has in fact not been abandoned. However, we stopped believing and accepting that a long time ago.

Second, I was struck by the view of the problems of peace and international relations and by the way in which they were posed.

Finally, I was struck by the unfruitful way of tackling and facing the problems of Soviet society itself and of the countries allied to the USSR. The Polish case is discussed and the whole matter boiled down essentially to a few errors of management and to the intervention of forces hostile to socialism. The Soviet situation is portrayed in a defensive way, concealing the real difficulties and contradictions. I think this is abandoning the proper method of a specific analysis of the facts and closes the door to ways of overcoming those difficulties and contradictions. This is what worries us: with that mentality and that method, it is impossible to adopt the course of the renewal and reforms which we think are necessary and even possible, in the short term there is reason to fear new inflexibility and stubborness.

[Question] That brings us to the question which has probably aroused the most attention: The verdict on the Eastern bloc societies.

[Answer] You are obviously referring to the judgment on the "exhaustion of the motive force." Our intention with this assessment was certainly not to "reappraise history and to deny the significance of the major October revolutionary event" and of its enormous effects in emancipation and liberation struggles throughout the world. We ourselves are the offspring of that event, though not of it alone, since we have assimilated the essential part of the historical heritage and experiences of Italian socialism and, even back in Gramsci's time, began the most penetrating analysis of the originality of a socialist revolution in the West. We are very well aware that the fundamental ideas and values expressed by the revolution (and the same applies to other ideas and values expressed previously by the French Revolution) remain valid for all the forces of progress and socialism, and certainly for us: The transcending of class exploitation, the opportunity for the exploited to change from the situation of outcasts to that of the protagonists of history and of power, the struggle against national oppression, the introduction of planned management of the economy and so forth.

Our verdict on the exhaustion of the motive force does not refer to these ideals, which have become actions, real movements and historical gains and which still motivate the broad masses, just as the ideals of the French Revolution continued and still continue to exert their influence, beyond the context of events in postrevolutionary France. Our verdict refers to the specific development of the particular process that gradually took shape in Russia, amid a combination of gains and regressive factors, and refers more directly, in the present phase, to the real state of the societies, the organization of power and the political and social relations that now exist in the USSR and in the other European countries where, since World War II, there has been a change of social and political systems, which eventually adopted the forms of the Soviet model, apart from Yugoslavia.

I would like someone to prove (but with facts, specific facts) that these societies, despite certain differences, are now experiencing a phase of creative development and that what is happening in those countries is imparting a thrust to revolution in the West. We have not denied the importance of the transformation carried out there; we are very well aware that there are countries and national areas where the creation of new kinds of society, no longer capitalist or feudal, has in fact coincided with a real national resurgence. But how can one deny that for many years there have been increasing signs of stagnation, regression and even crisis? These are no- abstract ideological assessments but objective observations. If you don't proceed from a calm understanding of present-day reality and fail to seek its causes, you expose yourself to being surprised by recurring traumas. Furthermore there is a lull in regeneration in both the socioeconomic and the ideological and political fields: for instance, what contributions to the growth and theoretical innovation of socialism have there been in recent decades? On the contrary, we are witnessing widespread dogmatic conservatism, a paralysis of ideas that is hindering great and vigorous energies. In our opinion, this is one of the consequences of having made Marxism a state ideology.

It is all this that prompts us to say basically that in the phase now being negotiated by the world workers movement and the world as a whole the driving center of the development of socialism and of the advance of the ideological and practical revolutionary process has shifted elsewhere: to the emergent countries, where different and fruitful experiences are under way, and particularly to Western Europe, where the issue of "socialism at the high points of development" arises in specific historical and political terms.

But when we speak of the exhaustion of a phase we are also referring to a broader issue, which is not new to the PCI's deliberations either. That is, we are observing that the idea that the development of socialism can consist essentially of expanding the influence of the so-called socialist camp, which ultimately allocates to the communist parties and revolutionary movements a merely supportive and propagandist role, is no longer valid.

The facts show that while this blueprint has already been overthrown and transcended in places -- such as China, Algeria, Cuba, Vietnam and several other countries -- where genuine national and anticapitalist revolutions have been carried out, here in the West it has not provided the ways and means for the development of real revolutionary processes. In order to advance along this path it is necessary to call on new ideas, new forces and new generations, proceeding from the real contradictions that capitalism has created and is still creating, no longer solely on the periphery of its system but at its summits.

[Question] It is here that the following objection (expressed not only by the CPSU papers) arises: Does the PCI regard as irrelevant the contribution of the USSR and of the Soviet-type societies to the world socialist process, and is it urging them simply to wait until an impetus toward the "right" kind of socialism comes for them too from the West?

[Answer] No, that is not what we are saying. We do not believe in the least that all opportunities for development and regeneration are blocked in those countries. What kind of view of history and of social and cultural processes would that be? Of course we do observe that the prevalent tendencies today are stasis, subbornness and threats of regression and further crises, but we are well aware that there are objective conditions and subjective potentials -- not only material but also ideological and cultural -- which, once released, could restore those countries' dynamism and capacity for growth.

The fact is, however, that such conditions and potentials now seem, and have seemed for some time, constricted by the rigidity of the political and economic order and by certain ideological taboos. This is why we say that reforms in all these fields are a vital necessity. Of course we do not presume to indicate which reforms should be implemented; every country must find its own path and pursue it autonomously, free from prejudice and from the constraint of the single model. Will this direction be followed? We do not know, but we very much hope so, because without reforms the outlook will be for further tensions both within those countries and in relations among them.

[Question] We come to the issue of peace and international relations. It is certainly the point on which the CPSU's polemic has been most bitter. In particular with the KOMMUNIST article, an attempt has been made to demonstrate that the PCI underestimates the dangers of war, seeks to balance responsibilities (in short, we allegedly absolve imperialism) and, above all, has abandoned a class view of the struggle taking place in the international arena.

[Answer] An underestimation on our part? We are so concerned about the international situation and the dangers of a nuclear conflict that we identify the aim of peace as the most decisive factor. With the advent of the nuclear era, the nature of the problem of war changed and became quite absolute, because its aim, which is no longer that of securing a defeat of the enemy forces through military action but that of the elimination of life on earth, changed radically. Hence nuclear conflict poses a new problem of primary importance which confronts all states, all classes and all social systems. How can we fail to recall the warning Togliatti first gave almost 30 years ago?

Since this is what is involved, we cannot understand how the issue of the preservation of peace can be confined solely to an aspect or projection of the international class struggle. The class struggle remains an inescapable factor of the domestic and international situation, but in the nuclear era it, too, takes on partly different characteristics. It should be extended to include interests and needs (of liberation from underdevelopment, hunger and every form of oppression of nations) giving rise to conflicts and movements which cannot be confined to the logic of military blocs. So today the relationship between the struggle for peace and the class struggle appears in terms different from those characteristic of the time prior to the nuclear era, which has also become the era of the explosion of the imbalance between the north and the south of the world.

It is surprising that this new situation is not recognized by that very party -- the CPSU -- which at its 20th congress proclaimed peaceful coexistence between different social and political systems as being without alternatives, and indeed presented precisely that coexistence as the ground which is not only necessary but also most favorable for the development of the process of social emancipation and national liberation itself.

Now in order to guarantee and promote peaceful coexistence, it is necessary above all to take into account the security requirements of all states, from the smallest to the largest (such as the USSR, the United States and China), whatever the class characteristic of their domestic systems. And this means examining and judging the specific contents of their foreign policy, their actions and whether they do or do not promote peace and security. Moreover, experience tells us that capitalist states' foreign policy does not always remain the same. For instance, there have been differences between Kennedy and Johnson and between Carter and Reagan. And there would be a difference if Strauss were in Schmidt's place. The necessary presupposition for peaceful coexistence is the possibility that even states with a capitalist system can pursue or be induced to pursue a policy of peace.

If on the other hand you proceed from preliminary bias against the social system, then the conclusion is reversed: You are denying on principle that any real contribution to peace can come from the states of the capitalist area, and you end up by giving a sense of powerlessness and futility to the peace movements, since everything is left to the balance of power between two systems, or rather between the two blocs.

Moreover, historical experience also demonstrates that there is no automatic correspondence between domestic social systems and foreign policy. Is it not true that there have been armed conflicts between socialist countries? Is it not true that the Soviets themselves define China's foreign policy as nonpeaceful, but acknowledge the socialist class nature of Chinese society (they did so implicity even in one of their articles of polemics with us, when they spoke of the 35 percent of mankind that has freed itself from capitalist exploitation)?

[Question] What then is the correct relationship among the defense of peace, the advance of the liberation movements and the anti-imperialist struggle?

[Answer] We have said repeatedly that in today's world imperialism can no longer do anything it wants, and that is partly because the USSR performs an irreplaceable role as a counterweight to it, as a brake on its aggresiveness. But in the present situation, any policy that aims to extend by force any area of influence, including the Soviet one, conflicts with the higher interests of peace and of socialism itself. The old principled position that revolution (and counterrevolution) cannot be exported is now assuming a new significance, because it is linked to the general future of peace. Thus, for instance, an armed intervention such as the Soviet one in Afghanistan, irrespective of the reason given for it, has the effect of exacerbating international relations and of damaging the very image of socialism.

To give another example, it is obvious that the broad and active political solidarity with a liberation movement such as El Salvador's and with the Nicaraguan and Cuban revolutionary movements against the threats and blackmail of U.S. imperialism derives the main element of its strength and righness from the fact that this solidarity is aimed precisely at preventing foreign interference (which would create an international crisis) and at making it possible for such a just national and social cause to triumph. You cannot escape the fact that a violation of sovereignty committed in the name of one cause has the effect of encouraging a violation in the name of the opposite cause, and both of them deal a blow to peace.

Effects of Bloc Logic

[Question] Is this the most serious effect of what we describe as the bloc logic, which we have spoken out against?

[Answer] Yes, but it is not the only one. If everything is confined to the international class struggle and this is identified in the two military blocs, the role of the entire broad and varied range of peace forces both inside and outside the power alignments -- the nonaligned countries, the mass movements, parties, cultural forces, the Catholic and other churches and some governments -- disappear. And so too does the role of Europe which, with its own autonomy and initiative, could make an even more effective, indeed a decisive contribution to the cause of detente, peace and security. The opposition between the blocs, and particularly between the major powers, irrespective of any intentions, in fact leads to an exacerbation of tensions. This is proven by the facts. A valuable contribution to preventing this can be made by the forces that identify neither with the United States nor with the USSR, but which act autonomously to moderate their conflicts and to facilitate dialogue between them.

We have already seen, again in recent weeks, the positive effects of the position of certain West European countries (though unfortunately this does not apply to the Italian Government) with respect to Reagan's hard and rash line following the events in Poland and with respect to El Salvador. We have also seen the commitment of certain European governments, especially in neutral countries, to preventing the breakdown of the Madrid conference. All this amounts to little because we cannot restrict ourselves to containing the negative effects of the exacerbation of U.S.-USSR relations. But it is something that demonstrates how much room there is for initiatives by movements, organizations and governments acting autonomously to resolve current conflicts and unresolved crises such as those in the Middle East, Central America, southern Africa, Afghanistan and Kampuchea, and pressing for arms reduction in Europe, which is now more than ever a pressing and fundamental objective for peace.

[Question] From what we have read in the three Soviet articles, it seems that the recent pacifist movements in Europe are interpreted in one direction only -- as anti-U.S. and anti-NATO movements.

[Answer] That is an error of assessment. Those mass movements are indeed characterized by opposition to Reagan's swing to rearmament and to its immediate effect in Europe (the deployment of new missiles), but that does not mean that they have forgotten the missiles on the other side or demanded unilateral disarmament. It is a truly autonomous peace movement, which refuses to act as a tool of either bloc, which reserves the right to judge the specific nature of the policy of both sides and to support or oppose decisions and attitudes not because they are of a particular bloc but insofar as they aid or hinder the cause of detente, disarmament and peace. The workers movement itself is part of and an agent in this autonomous peace movement and is able to discern between just causes and the expediencies of power. This explains the scale of the backing given at one time to the Vietnamese people (and the masses' satisfaction with the aid given to them by the USSR and China) and also explains why the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan, however, was criticized.

Capitalism and Social Democracies

[Question] In the current debate matters connected with our strategy for socialism are being discussed too. Some comrades, for instance, ask why we have introduced the term "third way" in place of the "Italian and democratic path to socialism."

[Answer] There is no doubt that in speaking of the third way we are embracing all the essential concepts of our formulation of an Italian and democratic path to socialism. By speaking of a third way we wish to stress the possibility and the need to impart a European dimension to our effort to open up a new phase in the advance to and development of socialism. This has become indispensable because of the advance of objective processes and new requirements of integration and because the socioeconomic crisis, which proclaims the failure of the old ruling classes' policies, poses similar problems of regeneration and development for all the West European countries. There are also shared requirements of disarmament, of progress in detente and cooperation and of a new kind of relations with the developing countries. Hence the West European workers movement's decisive role in asserting new solutions and ideas. Furthermore, in the other European countries too, many political, trade union and cultural forces are tackling the same problems that we Italian Communists place at the center of our research and our struggles; and they do so -- each in accordance with their own characteristics -- in directions that converge with ours.

In speaking of the third way, therefore, we mean a process that will specifically advance by working with all components of the West European workers and people's movement.

[Question] With social democracy too, therefore?

[Answer] Of course. We feel justified political and intellectual anxiety about judgments which blacken the Soviet experience and situation, which regard it as the past, present and future evil, thus showing an inability to judge gains, difficulties and contradictions in a rational way and without preconceived ideas. We are well aware that social democracy has not meant and does not always mean the same thing at all times and in all places.

Moreover, there is an objective fact which must always be taken into account: In some countries social democracy is the dominant if not the only force in the workers movements, and in others it is at least a major force. Furthermore social democracies have experienced and are experiencing major changes as a result of changes in the historical, political and social conditions. For instance there is an obvious difference between the French social democracy of Guy Mollet, which was involved directly in the shameful colonialist operations in Indochina, Algeria and Suez, and the PS of Mitterrand and Jospin. Present-day German social democracy cannot be confused with that of 30 or 60 years ago. Brandt is not Noske. And then the Nazi experience did not pass without effects. Moreover the positive evolution of many of the European social democracies on the great questions of peace and coexistence is obvious to all.

But the essential thing now is different; the capitalist system, partly because of the end of old colonialism, no longer has the economic scope on which the great social democratic parties based their action and their success. The lack of such scope is already forcing and will increasingly force the social democratic forces to discuss and seek solutions and paths different from the traditional ones and to tackle once again the question of going beyond capitalism. Hence our concern to be involved in that search with the particular experience and ideas we have as Italian Communists. Does doing that mean giving it to capitalism and stopping being communists? I don't think so. If anything it means giving greater incisiveness to our present function and to the effective struggle for a third path of socialism.

Our originality compared with the social democracies lies primarily in the fact that we stand firmly by the objective of achieving socialism, overcoming capitalism and urging the socialist and social democratic forces to adopt that objective wholeheartedly, because we are aware that that can be attained only by the commitment of forces which had and uphold a different heritage and which nevertheless do not aim to stand still but to move forward.

Moreover we carry the fundamental conviction that the forces in Western Europe which can be practical protagonists in building a new society are not only those whose original aim is to overcome capitalism and which advocates socialism. Indeed, I believe those forces are much broader than simply those that support the communist, socialist and social democratic parties. In fact there are vast forces awakened and spurred to revolt and struggle by the questions the crisis in society today leaves unsolved, or even aggravates, and by the new needs developing in the working class, among the workers, in the great people's masses, among women, among young people and in the most advanced and modern forces of culture and science.

[Question] But in the current debate and the letters being received by L'UNITA we are being asked, among other things, to define more clearly the characteristics of the kind of socialism for which we are fighting.

[Answer] If we are truly convinced a new phase has begun in the struggle for socialism, it is partly because the kind of socialism that must be realized here -- at the high points of capitalist development and in opposition to the profound crisis in this kind of development -- must have new and original characteristics, which can stem only from real liberation and progressive movements, as well as, of course, from a development of political thought. We cannot presume to define everything right away, in the abstract.

We have already said many things since 1956 and in recent years too. It is enough to recall our proposals for the economy, state reform, women's problems, cultural and scientific issues, a new world economic order, and so forth, so it is by no means true that we are starting from scratch in our formulation of the third way. The fact is that we do not consider socialism a model, and since the third way can only advance by means of a combination of struggle and a long path, we are issuing a positive answer to real needs, which will resolve the substantial and tragic contradictions that specific capitalist development at its present stage can no longer resolve. This is why we are trying to proceed not from ideological preconceptions but from society's and the people's real problems. The fact is that we are facing a crisis which is not a short-term phenomenon. And it is precisely from the combination of such conditions that the need for socialism, and a new kind of socialism reemerges. I say this to those who feel like "orphans" owing to the collapse of the old myths and to those who ask us whether we are abandoning socialism. The opposite is true. But it should be added that the idea of socialism now held in this part of the world by major sectors of the working class, of workers, women, young people and intellectuals, is a very rich and complex idea; and only a rich and complex idea of socialism can win over new forces and can establish a hold and be realized in our society.

A socialism equal to modern times and needs should not only guarantee everyone the satisfaction of their basic social needs, such as employment, health, education and the protection of nature and the environment; it should also guarantee, for instance, complete womens liberation, the secure right of the workers to organize in trade unions, economic productivity and efficiency, political pluralism, freedom of information,cultural and artistic expression and so forth. I do not believe a kind of socialism that contradicted any of these essential elements would be accepted; and perhaps it would not even be recognized as socialism.

If all this is understood clearly, socialism cannot be confined simply to a change in production and ownership relations. In other words, it cannot be believed that a change in these relations will automatically guarantee the attainment of all the transformations and developments that now seem indispensable for determining a valid, feasible and acceptable idea of socialism. I would say, however, that one could certainly not envisage any advance to socialism if present ownership and production relations are regarded as untouchable sacred cows. However, they must, they will have to be changed not on the basis of petitio principii, but on the basis of their demonstrated irreconcilability with the satisfaction of social and collective interests, with the realization of values of liberation and emancipation, with the development of the production forces and with the safeguarding of complete democracy.

[Question] Do you believe that what you have said takes into account all the possible uncertainties prompted by the "third way"?

[Answer] Certainly not. Many points need to be elucidated by means of debate, research and experience. But there are two things I would like to add.

Comrades are aware that various interpretations (or "readings" as we now say) of the "third way" are possible; among these are some that do not entirely dispel the suspicion of our merging with social democracy. These are erroneous interpretations that we must always criticize and reject, both when they occur outside the party, even in leftwing circles, and -- as sometimes happens -- when they occur within the party. Not only do we want to really transcend capitalism but, as I have tried to explain, we are convinced it is necessary, if we really want to achieve within the democratic framework the regeneration for which there is evidently a growing need.

The other point I would like to make is that reservations and uncertainties stem, at least partly, from an attitude which in itself I consider positive. In Italy there is a widespread, strong anticapitalist class awareness. When, even only as a result of a lack of clarity, there is an impression of alienation from strong anticapitalist class reference points, then this awareness always reacts. This happened in connection with some errors on our part during the years of national solidarity; and it has happened also in connection with certain trade union issues, such as these stemming from the proposal to deduct 0.5 percent of salaries. Now we are again seeing this awareness asserting itself forcefully, and in some cases it is expressing itself even through ideological distortion, that is, in an uncritical assessment of the USSR.

In this last case the error is evident, not only because it ignores the factors we have already discussed (the phenomena of crisis and regression and certain negative tendencies in Soviet foreign policy), but also because for some time it has no longer been true that the "touchstone" (as we used to say at the time of the Comintern) of a revolutionary policy consists in one's attitude toward the USSR. One can now cite examples of forces which, though still aligning with the USSR, ultimately boil down to a revolutionism composed only of words and in fact perform no specific action that makes any effective contribution to changing the balance of forces between the classes, to altering situations or to bringing objectives of transformation nearer. It is precisely this capacity that must form the yardstick for assessing whether a policy is revolutionary, while it remains true that the verdict on the USSR and on its policy must be, as we have been trying for some time to make it, a nonconfessional verdict, that is, one which, while clearly rejecting superficial assessments of summary condemnation, assesses without preconceptions of any kind whether what happens in that major country and what it does in the sphere of world politics assists or conflicts with the interests of the liberation, progressive and peace-loving forces.

But to return to the point I mentioned first, it is clear that this anticapitalist class consciousness, which is so strong in the Italian working class, must never be allowed to dissipate, and even less be undervalued, neglected or humbled. Instead, and especially today, it must be rallied and taken to the highest levels of formulation and of the struggle for socialism. We can do so because the will stemming from that consciousness is in no way inconsistent with the decisions we have been taking -- decisions which, on the contrary, are aimed at making our initiative and our struggle for socialism more incisive and broader.

One danger must now be avoided: That the party will confine itself to the aspect of debate along and that not all the mobilizing potential present in the formulation we are conducting and in the political decisions we have made will be grasped. This potential is not the product of imagination; in some strata of democratic public opinion, and especially among young people, it is already beginning to be realized.

[Question] So you place the emphasis on the new possibilities, on the new "potential" opening up for the party's action. Don't you fear this emphasis on "innovation" could be misunderstood and increase suspicions and resistance?

[Answer] It would be stupid and untrue to maintain that we have always said -- more or less explicity -- what we are saying today. It would be stupid to deny the news and the development of our present analyses and positions. But one thing must be said: Not only can the history of Italian communism not be embraced in the ideological schemes some of our adversaries create, but it cannot be diluted within the general history of the communist movement. It is an original history which includes Lenin but also Gramsci and Togliatti. It is a history which, although it has experienced periods of stagnation and leveling off, even in its planning, is nonetheless characterized by a great capacity for innovation which has been expressed repeatedly, especially when faced with the great events of national and international life. There have also been qualitative leaps in that history. I am thinking, for instance, of the eighth congress. If I were to use an expression to describe what we are involved in now, I would say it is precisely a "new qualitative leap."

[Question] There are some people who hope and some who fear that the innovations might even invade the rules governing the party's internal life -- democratic centralism.

[Answer] Even this issue should be tackled and discussed in purely political terms, without ideological preconditions. Moreover democratic centralism is not a set of immovable principles; we have made changes and adjustments at this level too in the various periods of our history; the 15th congress adopted new party rules which -- it is good to recall this -- must be respected by all, especially by the comrades who have leadership responsibilities. Above all, however, there have been changes and innovations in the party's practical life in the recent period too, after the Central Committee meeting a year ago. And the innovations have generally gone in the direction of extending our internal democracy; today we need to go further in that direction.

However, there is a limit we should not and do not want to overstep: the limit of factions. There are many reasons for rejecting factions. Above all, as the experience of other communist and socialist parties shows, factions introduce a divisive trend, consume the party's energies in an internal struggle and divert them from action outside. A member of the socialist movement, I don't remember who, said rightly that factions are formed initially on ideas, then the ideas disappear or change and the factions remain, and at that point they obey only power motives. It is, therefore, a problem of functionality and efficiency. I repeat that it is no accident that rules similar to those we term "democratic centralism" are also adopted by noncommunist European leftwing parties. Coming down to a practical level, just think what membership campaigns would be like if there were factions. The aim would no longer be to win new members and new energies for the workers' emancipation struggles, for peace and socialism, but people would seek supporters to increase the influence of a particular internal grouping.

Finally there is another equally important point: It is not true that factions boost internal democracy. Instead they hinder the development of truly free debate, without ties, without dogmatism and without the obligation to be loyal to a particular leading faction. However, only a debate free of those ties and dogmatism can generate progress in drawing up ideas and the eradication of partial and unilateral views and of narrow opinions and limited knowledge. A party that has great objectives of renewal and transformation never can and never will be able to do without that creative debate.

BRIEFS

UDP CONGRESS -- The Fifth Popular Democratic Union [UDP] Congress currently taking place in Lisbon has elected the party's new national council. The former council members who had been critical of the party line are not in the new 48-member council. Such is the case of Brochado Coelho, Rodrigues da Silva, Lidia Sequeiro and Jose Alcobia. In a closing speech, Amadeu Ferreira of the National Political Committee Secretariat said that force of unity is stronger than the force of schism and pledged that the UDP will not hesitate to act firmly to isolate the splittists and cast them off. DEPUTY PREMIER GARCIA ON 1982 ECONOMIC GOALS

PM251313 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 17 Feb 82 p 13

[Angel Gomez Escorial interview with Spanish Economic Affairs Minister Juan Antonio Garcia Diez: "New Boost to Economic Activity; No Surrender to Inflation"]

[Excerpts] Madrid -- "I believe that the economic policy being pursued by the government is the only one possible."

This unambiguous remark opened my conversation with Deputy Premier for Economic Affairs Juan Antonio Garcia Diez. At another juncture he was similarly resolute in referring to consumers: "The government can support consumers' organizations but cannot invent them."

With regard to the Calvo-Sotelo cabinet's economic policy, he added: "I insist that the economic policy that we are pursuing is the only one possible. I do not believe there are any acceptable alternative policies, and the difficulties at present being encountered by experiments in economic policy as varied as Britain's and France's are a clear proof of this. An extremely liberal economic policy does not seem valid to me for a country in Spain's socioeconomic situation, apart from my doubts about its final results. Our structures are still very inadequate and their reform is still one of the fundamental objectives of government policy. Without abandoning the struggle against bureaucracy and unnecessary government intervention, I believe that a society such as Spain's requires a strong public sector -- not a large one, but a strong and efficient one. On the other hand, these structural reforms can only be undertaken by the state. Furthermore, one cannot pursue programs that cut social services or that worsen the distribution of income to the detriment of salaried workers. Our society would not tolerate programs in this direction. So those who demand more 'determination' must specify what they want. More liberal 'determination'? More interventionist 'determination'? You have my answer on both points."

Economy in 1982

[Question] Were things as bad as some say in 1981, and can one assume that 1982 will be worse?

[Answer] In economic terms, 1981 was much worse than we assumed at first. But we must not forget that this was the case throughout the OECD countries. The Western economy behaved poorly in 1981, and this forced OECD to lower all its forecasts. It was a year of major increases in the dollar rate and high interest rates, and this was reflected in a poor showing in investments, lower job creation and a lower growth rate in the European economy. Forecasts for a 2.5-3 percent increase in GDP are certainly not brilliant, but they are hopeful, and of course, I consider them perfectly realistic. Though the forecast growth rate for the OECD in 1982 is only modest, in the case of our own economy we must take into account a number of positive aspects that prompt us to look ahead at 1982 with reasonable optimism.

Furthermore, the economic policy goals for this year are to stimulate demand and to ensure the attainment of the employment objectives set down in the national agreement to employment, while at the same time trying to keep the inflation rate at about 12 percent and to prevent an increase in the current balance of payments deficit. In short, it is a matter of imparting a new boost to economic activity without surrendering to inflation. Nobody is unaware that this objective would be hard to achieve without the national agreement on employment, which has made it possible to substantially reduce expected inflation and easier for enterprises for forecast costs and prices further ahead than has been possible in our economy for many years. This is the real importance of the national agreement on employment, and this is why it must be considered the core of present economic policy.

[Answer] I would classify these outlines on three levels. On the first level, regarding short-term policy, we must pursue a monetary policy that will guarantee credit to the private sector at least three points above the inflation rate, a floating exchange rate policy geared to market trends, as has been done recently, and a public spending policy aimed at supporting demand and consumption, though still within the natural limits imposed by the shortage of tax revenue.

On the second level, we will work on the fiscal system, for which we now have plans for introducing value-added tax and within which we will introduce improvement and reform measures to correct anomalies and defects apparent in the present system. We will also work on social security whose rationalization and improvement will be set in motion right away. As for the official loan bank, whose institutional reform is already under way and of whose objectives we will be making a thorough reappraisal, definitely in the direction of long-term credits, disclosing hidden subsidies [sentence as published]. There are other fields too in which reform measures will be carried out, such as the system of employment by the local authorities, professional training and the system of labor relations, by means of the implementation of the labor law. And, as I indicated before, we will promote a system that will ensure greater discipline and control of current public spending.

On the third level, I would include sectoral policies, among which housing policy is particularly important. Our aim is to ensure implementation of the 1982-83 [as published] 3-year housing plan, by guaranteeing the necessary finance and by removing the obstacles at present hindering construction activity.

Budgets, Public Spending and Fiscal Pressure

[Question] The impression is that the currently very high state budgets are designed to paper over the cracks without undertaking a more long-term and less temporary public investment plan. It seems that the aim is not to lay the foundations for future economic activity without promoting the excessive state control we need an absence of planning [sentence as published].

[Answer] A large proportion of the criticisms of the 1982 budget are general criticisms lacking a rigorous analysis of its substance. Certainly the budgets are very ambitious and the deficit is large. But it is no less true that the various component items of the budget are very difficult or impossible to reduce. With regard to public investment, it is untrue that it is inadequate and short-term. In fact, for the first time we are pursuing an entirely rigorous public investment policy. The investment programs have been selected most carefully, taking into account a number of factors including the increase in the level of employment, the creation of external savings, the encouragement of technological improvements and the positive effect of energy savings. The implementation of these programs is also the subject of strict controls to ensure their application. In this field I believe we have made substantial improvements on what has been usual in recent years. We now have a very satisfactory system for selecting, planning and implementing public investment plans, and the claim that an investment plan that consumes 75 percent of its funds in 9 months is malfunctioning is irresponsible, to say the least, and indicates a profound misunderstanding of the functioning of the Spanish budget. And it is strange, coming as it does from those who have never considered the administrative spending capacity one of the limits on public spending.

[Question] We are approaching an election period. In a couple of months' time Andalusia will be going to the polls. The rest of the country will be doing so before the end of the year. Could the government's 1982 economic plan be influenced by electoral conditions?

[Answer] No. No way. Personally, I will tell you that I clearly remember the consequences for the Spanish economy of the political motives that in 1975 and 1976 prompted the denial of the existence of an international crisis that was affecting us very directly.

We paid a very high price for that mistake in subsequent years. The main outlines of our economic policy are now established, and it is also consistent with what has been done in recent years. An important part of this economic policy centers on structural and institutional reforms that the Spanish economy requires. A policy of this kind must be designed for the medium and long term. They are unspectacular measures that perhaps yield little in political terms in the short term, but they are absolutely indispensable to our economy. In pursuing these guidelines, the government has rejected the easy path of electoralism and paid attention to the measures that it considers necessary to the Spanish economy.

MILITARY LETTER CALLS FOR 'AUTHORITARIAN' STATE

NC021945 Paris AFP in English 1937 GMT 2 Mar 82

[By Edouard Pons]

[Text] Madrid, 2 Mar (AFP) -- A letter from the military to the king of Spain demanding a more authoritarian state is being circulated in Spanish barracks, it was reliably learned here today. The letter calls for a reform of the constitution and more powers for the monarch as the only alternative to a return to dictatorship.

The unsigned 20-page document dated February, 1982, uses respectful language in summarizing grievances long known to be those of much of the Spanish armed forces. It expounds the view that "the transition (from the dictatorship of the late Gen Francisco Franco to democracy) has been a patent failure" and asks the king to take over effective command of the armed forces.

The Spanish experiment in democracy began after the death of General Franco in November 1975.

The letter also asks for the formation of a "superior council of the armed forces" that would notably be in charge of promotions within the army, a prerogative presently exercized by the government.

"You must arbitrate, Your Majesty, between reality and the constitution, so long as the two do not coincide," the letter said, warning of the danger of a "dismembering" of Spain through "de facto federalism." This was a reference to the far-reaching autonomy given in recent times to such Spanish provinces as Catalonia and the Basque Country.

The text charges that Spanish "political parties are characterized by personal power play, internal dissension and corruption," and that the armed forces are being subjected to the systematic misrepresentation of the traditional values it upholds as "archaic and untenable" positions.

Turning to the current trial here of the officers involved in last year's abortive putsch, which is being followed with keen interest by all of Spain, the anonymous authors of the letter declare that the men in the dock were more than just "a handful of mad or marginal agitators," adding: "No one knows better than you, Majesty, how difficult it would have been... to find a military unit ready to oppose them."

The abortive February 23, 1981, coup, the letter asserts, has already had some beneficial results, such as the slowing down of the trend towards regional autonomy, the checking of terrorism and a moving towards more social entente.

After stating that there was currently among the officer corps a "widespread mistrust of generals" named by the civilian government, it concluded with a veiled warning that "the present constitution does not permit the establishment of an efficient and pluralistic democracy."

It is thus necessary to overhaul it, "barring which we will soon need a dictatorship for the reconstruction (of the country)," the letter said.

NORDIC COUNCIL DISCUSSES ECONOMIC OUTLOOK

LD021438 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1030 GMT 2 Mar 82

[Text] The joint prospects for influencing international economic policy were stressed at this morning's general debate in the Nordic Council. Swedish Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin, who opened the debate, said that a significant obstacle to speeding up investments is the currency and interest policy of the United States and other countries aimed at curbing inflation. According to Falldin, the Nordic countries have full cause to support the attempts being made in order to achieve a change in U.S. interest policy. Slow economic growth will easily lead to the weakening of the individual citizens' faith in the future, Falldin warned. Therefore, in his view, the limited (?resources) must be shared in such a way that they will benefit every individual citizen, without environmental and social aspects being neglected.

Falldin said he regarded as a good project worthy of development the plan for a joint Nordic television satellite, although Denmark has stated it will withdraw from the plan. Norwegian Commerce Minister Arne Skaug stressed for his part the possibilities offered by cooperation between enterprises. In his opinion the authorities should not be allowed to interfere with the decisions of the enterprises and to make them more difficult. Danish Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen explained the reasons why Denmark is withdrawing from the joint television project. The general debate will continue in the afternoon, and then the council will start discussing the recommendations to be made to the governments and parliaments of the member countries.

NORWAY

OFFICIALS END VISITS TO LEBANON, SYRIA, ISRAEL

PM011621 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 24 Feb 82 p 8

[John Harbo dispatch: "Useful Talks Between Berg and PLO"]

[Text] Beirut, 23 Feb -- Norwegian Foreign Ministry Under Secretary Eivinn Berg and Norwegian Armed Forces Commander in Chief Gen Sverre Hamre both ended their visits to the Middle East on Tuesday [22 February]. As well as Lebanon, the two had also visited Syria and Israel respectively. The aim of Berg's visit was to collect first-hand information on the situation in the area, especially in Southern Lebanon, where Norwegian UN troops are stationed. During his stay in Lebanon, General Hamre visited the UN headquarters in Naqura and the Norwegian engineer company at Tibnin as well as inspecting the Norwegian battalion.

Berg ended his visit with a meeting with Lebanese President Ilyas Sarkis and the two discussed the political situation in the area. On Monday Berg met with Lebanese Foreign Minister Fu'ad Butrus, PLO political section chief, "Foreign Minister" Farug Qaddumi and the Lebanese Armed Forces commander in chief, Maj Gen Victor Khury. As well as discussing the position of the UN forces, Berg also raised the tense situation between Israel and the Palestinian forces in southern Lebanon. Berg told AFTENPOSTEN that the security of the Norwegian forces depends on good cooperation with the PLO and that his talks with Qaddumi had been very useful. He had expressed the view that relations between the UN force and the Palestinians today are satisfactory and Qaddumi said that he shares this view. According to Berg, no upgrading of Norway's contacts with the PLO was mentioned during the meeting.

As far as the tense situation in southern Lebanon is concerned, the PLO expressed its fears of an Israeli attack on Palestinian forces. The risk of renewed fighting in southern Lebanon was also raised at Berg's talks in Damascus with Syrian Deputy Foreign Minister Nasir Qaddour. Before his visit to Lebanon, General Hamre had been in Israel, where he discussed the situation of the UN forces with Israeli Commander in Chief Rafael Eytan. In Beirut, General Hamre discussed the military situation with Major General Khury as well as being present at Under Secretary Berg's political talks.

KIPRIANOU HAILS PAPANDREOU VISIT AS HISTORIC

NC021548 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 2 Mar 82

[Statement by President Kiprianou 2 March -- read by announcer]

[Text] From every viewpoint, the Greek prime minister's visit to Cyprus was truly an historic event, and a new chapter is opening in the struggle by the people of Cyprus for liberty and vindication. The significance and favorable repercussions of this visit will become more discernible with the passage of time.

I truly feel deep emotion and national pride at this historic event and once more I want to laud the personality of the Greek prime minister and the determination with which he is fighting with us for the just causes of the people of Cyprus. I consider it my duty to express my deep satisfaction and appreciation for the spontaneity and patriotism with which Cyprus Hellenism welcomed the Greek prime minister to our martyred and sacred land.

The representatives of the people, the parties, and the organizations, the state and public officials, and all those who, with a particular sense of responsibility, contributed to the vast success of this visit are worthy of true praise. All were present: The relatives of the missing persons and the victims of the struggle, the refugees, those who suffered and the entire nation were there because they all understood fully the meaning and significance of the presence of Andreas Papandreou to Cyprus, and proved that they are cognizant of the historic moments through which our country is passing.

Papandreou Readies Letters

NC030833 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 3 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] Within the framework of the multifaceted, multisided diplomacy and international crusade which the Greek side is launching in connection with the Cyprus problem and with the cooperation of the Athens and Nicosia governments, Greece's Prime Minister Papandreou is preparing to send heads of state and governments personal letters in which he will stress among other things the unacceptable fact that the Cyprus problem has been unresolved because of the illegal invasion and occupation of 36.3 percent of the territory of Cyprus by Turkey.

The letters will also stress the need to pressure Ankara's military government to withdraw the Turkish troops from the island and to change its intransigent, divisive attitude toward the efforts for a fair and permanent settlement of the Cyprus problem.

These reports came yesterday from an authoritative source, which said the Greek prime minister will send letters to a number of European countries which have recently displayed special interest in the Cyprus problem and to the United States.

The same authoritative source said this action by the Greek prime minister is relevant to the joint decision by Cyprus and Greece for convocation of an international conference on the Cyprus problem as well as the joint decision for recourse to the UN General Assembly in the event of failure of the intercommunal dialogue.

The source stressed: "The planning and coordination of all the activities of the Greek side has been the result of close cooperation between the governments of Athens and Nicosia. These activities are the product of joint strategy and joint effort.

ATAKOL CRITICIZES GREEKS' PROVOCATIONS, DEMAGOGY

TA021237 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 2 Mar 82

[Text] The minister of interior, foreign affairs and defense, Mr Atakol, has said that in spite of all the provocations by Greece and the Greek Cypriots, the Turkish Cypriot community would continue its efforts for a solution of the Cyprus problem which would provide for the two communities to live in peace side by side without one community dominating the other.

Speaking at today's session of the legislative assembly, Mr Atakol criticized the statements made by the Greek prime minister, Mr Papandreou, and allegations made by the Greek Cypriot leader, Mr Kiprianou, during Mr Papandreou's visit to southern Cyprus. He said that Mr Papandreou's visit was not a normal one but a provocative action. He pointed out that Mr Papandreou had (set forward) initiating a so-called crusade and that he included Istanbul in it.

Mr Atakol said that Mr Papandreou was following an insincere attitude, full of contradictions, and had not mentioned the partnership rights of the Turkish Cypriot community in the Republic of Cyprus and had declined to mention the systematic annihilation of the Turks of Crete and Rhodes. He further pointed out that Mr Papandreou seemed to be unaware of the sufferings of the Turkish Cypriot community of Western Thrace and of the massacres of Turkish Cypriots by the Greek Cypriots in 1963-64 and 1974.

Mr Atakol said that Mr Papandreou showed himself full of contradictions. Then he said that the Cyprus intercommunal talks would continue at the same time they would try to internationalize the Cyprus problem [as heard]. Mr Atakol stated that Mr Papandreou was insincere and was deceiving himself and the Greek Cypriots when he was claiming that all the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot displaced persons [word indistinct] to their homes -- something which was impossible and not conforming to realities.

Mr Atakol said that in welcoming Mr Papandreou, Mr Kiprianou had said that they had not all set their aims or target. This aim, Mr Atakol recalled, was the union of Cyprus with Greece. He stressed that the Greeks and Greek Cypriots would initiate their talks of crusade or make a recourse to the United Nations or any other international conference, but the Turkish Cypriot community would not be affected by such provocations and work for an honorable solution.

Mr Atakol repeated that the only way to a solution of the Cyprus problem was the intercommunal talks between the two Cypriot communities, and the Turkish Cypriot community would insist in its efforts for their continuation. He concluded by expressing the hope that the Greek Cypriots would not be influenced by provocations and demagogy and pursue a sensible course.

FLORAKIS SAYS PASOK REFORM PROCESS TOO SLOW

NC261734 Athens NEWS in English 26 Feb 82 p 12

[Excerpts] Greek Communist Party (KKE) leader Kharilaos Florakis yesterday criticized the government for lack of sufficient speed and boldness in bringing about the political, social and economic changes promised in PASOK's pre-election platform. The main question, Florakis said, is whether the government will abolish the "air-tight compartments" in the state machinery, and primarily in the armed forces and the police, and whether it will curb the greed of economic monopolies. For the time being, this has not been done, and employer intimidation continues unabated in factories.

While mild in its criticism of the government, the KKE leader was sharp in denouncing the conservative New Democracy party, which ruled Greece until last year's fall elections. He accused the rightwing of opposing any policy that would free the country from dependence on U.S. imperialism and financial monopolies.

TURKMEN: CANCEL COUNCIL OF EUROPE MEETING

TA021646 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 2 Mar 82

[Text Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen sent a message to the secretary general of the Council of Europe and asked that the meeting of the Council of Europe Consultative Assembly Political Commission to be held in Jerusalem in May be canceled.

The Arab mission chiefs in Ankara called on Turkmen today and requested that Turkey help in stopping the meeting. The Arab mission chiefs noted that the decision to hold the meeting of the commission in Jerusalem violates the decisions by the United Nations, the Council of Europe, the Islamic Conference and the Jerusalem Committee. They said that holding the meeting in Jerusalem would be tantamount to recognizing Israel's [word indistinct] annexing Jerusalem. The Arab mission chiefs pointed out that they are deeply appreciative and grateful for the continuous strong support accorded by Turkey to Arab causes.

In his turn, Turkmen said that Turkey fully shares the Islamic countries' views on the subject. However, he recalled that Turkey has not been represented at the Consultative Assembly since May 1981. Turkmen noted that subsequently Turkey does not participate in decisions taken by the assembly. He noted that he fully supports the appropriate and justified opinions of the Islamic countries' representatives and, in a message, asked of the Council of Europe secretary general that the meeting not be held in Jerusalem.

PAPANDREOU 'INCONSISTENT, CONTRADICTORY'

TA021625 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1530 GMT 2 Mar 82

[Text] Ankara, 2 Mar (AA) -- Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou has demonstrated the "inconsistency and contradiction" in his Cyprus policy by his statements during his just-completed visit to southern Cyprus, semi-official sources in Ankara said.

The sources pointed out Mr Papandreou had earlier expressed approval of maintaining intercommunal talks for a settlement of the Cyprus issue, whereas now he claimed intercommunal talks under UN auspices would not lead anywhere.

Turkey, which has always maintained a stable policy on the Cyprus question, does not intend to enter into polemics over the issue, the semi-official sources said, and there is no question of a change in Turkey's basic policy concerning a lasting and peaceful settlement in Cyprus.

TURKMEN DISCUSSES BULGARIAN RELATIONS, CYPRUS

NC031137 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 26 Feb 82 p 9

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen answered various questions put to him by journalists at the reception given by Bulgarian head of state Zhivkov in Sofia the other night. Turkmen expressed his views on such matters as Turkish-Bulgarian relations, the campaign against smuggling, the Cyprus issue and on several international issues.

Foreign Minister Turkmen stated that Bulgaria and Turkey have used different languages regarding the Cyprus issue. When Greek Cypriot Leader Kiprianou visited Sofia last year at Bulgarian head of state Zhivkov's invitation, an agreement was reached on the Cyprus issue which differed from the views advocated by Turkey. They agreed on the need to refer the Cyprus issue to an international conference.

Turkey, on the other hand, argued that the Cyprus issue concerned only the two communities living on the island, that talks were going on between the two communities, that an international conference would serve no useful purpose and that Turkey deplored Zhivkov's speech.

As a reflection of these statements, Foreign Minister Turkmen did not refrain from accentuating in Sofia that Turkey and Bulgaria hold different views on the Cyprus issue.

Papandreou had also said: "The continuation of the intercommunal talks on the island serves no other purpose than to legalize the presence of the Turkish troops in Cyprus."

Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen was reminded of these words by Papandreou and, responding to a question by the CUMHURIYET correspondent, he said: "In view of the fact that the intercommunal talks are going on, the presence of the Turkish troops on the island is legal."

Denounces Arrests

[Turkish Communist Party Central Committee statement issued on 27 February -- read by announcer]

[Text] The reactionary military dictatorship has recently taken another crazy and very dangerous step. It has launched a new direct attack against the forces of peace, freedom and democracy in our country. This recent attack is an important indication of dangerous developments, and was launched at a time when the head of the junta, Evren, who was replaced by Ersin during his absence, was making speeches of peace, democracy and friendship in neighboring Bulgaria.

One of the leading defense lawyers for the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK] administrators was thrown out of the courtroom because he was opposed to the fascist [words indistinct]. Orhan Apaydin, who is also the leader of the Istanbul Bar Association and a Turkish Peace Committee administrator, the chairman of the Turkish Peace Committee and a member of the World Peace Council Presidium, retired Ambassador Mahmut Dikerdem, Turkish Peace Committee administrator Reha Isvan and many other progressives were detained. Many more are being sought. The detention these progressive intellectuals whom our people recognize as the firm defenders of peace, freedom and democracy is, at the same time, a defiance of the forces of peace and democracy in the world. This unbelievable attack has followed the massive solidarity shown against the trial of the 52 DISK administrators for whom the death penalty has been demanded and against the severe oppression, torture and investigation of communists, socialists, progressives and patriots. The junta is attacking with feelings of amazement and revenge. The reactionary forces were under the impression that it could achieve results and deceive everyone through tortures and trials prearranged through the efforts of agent provocateurs. However, as soon as the trials started it was the junta and the torturers that were judged. Now they are trying to silence the progressive lawyers and the democrats. They have banned foreign observers from attending the trials. The press is again heavily censured. They are trying to achieve results -- at whatever cost -- through fascist trials behind closed doors and without any evidence.

No doubt, this attack on the Turkish peace forces and at silencing all progressives and our people is not only based on feelings of amazement and revenge. This attack cannot be detached from efforts exerted by U.S. imperialism to undermine peace and from the dangerous steps taken by the junta in line with this policy. The most reactionary and collaborationist forces want to boldly advance on this path and, therefore, they want to eliminate every obstacle on their path. This wish proves that the struggle for peace is valid and that it cannot be separated from the struggle for democracy.

This recent attack has also shown that the junta's promises concerning a return to democracy are nothing but an ugly deceit. While the progressives are being attacked in such a cruel fashion, the leaders of the fascist Nationalist Action Party [NAP] are being released one by one. The NAP trial is being buried. This is a warning for those who still believe in the promises of a return to democracy. This attack at the same time reveals the junta's weakness. The junta is now in a new quicksand. The junta's fascist prosecutors, such as Takkeci, who are trying to portray the Turkish Peace Committee as a communist organization because it is a member of the World Peace Council, are exerting efforts in vain. They will not be able to submit any convincing evidence to accuse the progressive peace-loving forces just as was the case with the 52 DISK administrators. Solidarity will grow.

All progressive forces in Turkey and abroad should unite against this dangerous course and for the peaceful, democratic and free future of our people. They should take more effective steps for a unity of action and front. The TCP and communists are exerting every effort to attain this goal and they will continue to do so.

Over 1,300 pages of indictment charges the defendants with 333 murders, as well as with the intention to overthrow the constitutional order by a "people's war", and to replace it with a Marxist-Leninist state, "like the illegal gangs organized in many parts of the country."

MILITANT TRIALS PROCEED THROUGHOUT COUNTRY

TA271547 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1520 GMT 27 Feb 82

[Text] Ankara, 27 Feb (AA) -- Defense lawyers in the trial of 216 members of the illegal Communist Party [TCP] requested that the statements given to police earlier by their clients be disregarded by the court on the ground that they had been extracted under pressure. As the military prosecutor objected, the court (?postponed) the trial pending its decision on the point raised.

At the trial of officers of the Confederation of Revolutionary Labor Unions [DISK] in Istanbul, the military prosecutor continued reading the indictment, which elaborated upon the relations of the confederation with the Peace Society, the Progressive Youth Society, the officers of the Bar Association, and RPP deputies.

In Izmir, 5 rightist militants were sentenced to prison terms ranging from [number indistinct] to 10 years for forming armed gangs under cover of the illegal idealist youth societies.

The military prosecutor of the Martial Law Command at Erzincan initiated a lawsuit against 199 militants of the Yeni Celtek branch of the illegal organization "DEV-YOL" (Revolutionary Path). The defendants, 57 of whom face a demand for the death penalty, are charged with a number of crimes, including murder, assault, manufacture of bombs and smuggling of arms.

MARTIAL LAW COMMAND BANS ARAYIS WEEKLY MAGAZINE

[Text] Ankara, 2 Mar (AFP) -- The weekly magazine ARAYIS (research), close to former Social Democratic Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit, has been banned by Turkey's Martial Law Command, official sources here said today.

The magazine's editors told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE they had been given no reason for the decision, "taken in accordance with Decree 1402 of the State of Siege Command." Decree 1402 gives officials the right to ban any publication "without warning or reason, for an indeterminate period."

ARAYIS editor in chief Nahit Duru was sentenced to two months in prison last December following proceedings begun in August, 1980, against the magazine for an article entitled "Political Show."

VISA APPLICATION BY SOVIET COSMONAUT REJECTED

LD032126 Hamburg DPA in German 2005 GMT 3 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 3 Mar (DPA) -- Soviet woman cosmonaut and member of the CPSU Central Committee Valentina Nikolayeva-Tereshkova will be unable to take part in events staged by the German Communist Party (DKP). Her application for a visa has been rejected by the consular section of the Federal Republic's Embassy in Moscow. A spokesman for the Foreign Ministry in Bonn declared that the application was rejected in view of the situation "at the present time". The cosmonaut, who is also a member of the Supreme Soviet Presidium had been invited by the DKP for International Women's Day at the beginning of March.

TRADE SANCTIONS AGAINST USSR TO BE APPLIED

[Excerpts] Bonn, 3 Mar (DPA) -- The FRG will join in the trade sanctions against the Soviet Union decided by the EEC Council of Ministers. This was decided on Wednesday in Bonn by the Federal Cabinet. The Federal Government demands that the United States, Japan, Canada and Australia also participate in the import restrictions of the EEC.

At the basis of the cabinet decision lies an import list comprising more than 90 points for Soviet goods, worked out by the EEC commission, on which import quotas are to be introduced. Besides luxury goods such as diamonds, Crimean champagne, vodka, furs, rugs, caviar and specialist machines, these also include import goods from the USSR important for the German economy. According to Government Spokesman Kurt Becker, the Federal Government expects that several points on the list will be deleted before the sanctions are finally decided on in the Council of Ministers. As Becker said, from a German point of view the EEC sanctions will not affect existing contracts on Soviet deliveries of goods.

BAVARIAN OFFICIAL ACCUSED OF REVEALING SECRETS

[Excerpts] Karlsruhe, 3 Mar (DPA) -- The Federal prosecutor general, Kurt Rebmann, instituted investigation proceedings on Wednesday against the assistant secretary in the Bavarian Ministry of the Interior, Hans Langemann, in connection with the article "Operation Eva" in the magazine KONKRET, as well as against the author of the article, Jurgen Saupe. An announcement by Rebmann said that the proceedings against Langemann are based on an accusation of high treason (Paragraph 94 of the Criminal Code) and those against Saupe on the disclosure of state secrets (Paragraph 95 of the Criminal Code).

The article is concerned altogether with eight cases which lie within the competence of the Federal Intelligence Service (Bundesnachrichtendienst -- BND). Regarding such cases which are concerned with relations between the FRG and other states, there is sufficient reason to believe, in the view of Rebmann, that their revelation can constitute the disclosure of state secrets.

EXPLOSION THREATENS OVER USSR PIPELINE DEAL

[Text] A German-American explosion is threatening over the pipeline deal. Even after the meeting of the National Security Council, there are two trains of thought in Washington.

However, Weinberger with his strong "no", seems to have made a strong impression on President Reagan. At any rate, Minister Lambsdorff, who has returned from the United States, was too early when he indicated the existence of American tolerance.

In addition, what had been noticed at the State Department's top level early last week was by no means tolerance, but rather a certain resignation regarding the deal. Haig was apparently not able to gain support in the Security Council for his view that in the interests of the alliance, they should not be inclined to obstruct the gas deal any longer or cause delays. However, this was not the main idea. The main consideration was that people in the State Department also doubted the political -- or properly speaking -- the strategic judgement of the Germans. If in the face of concluded agreements Bonn did not want to forego trade, then in the future the alliance must decide in favor of stopping all loans to the Warsaw Pact states.

Thus it is not the substance, but the method which distinguishes trains of thought in Washington. The reasons are well known as to why the National Security Council is inclined to refuse special turbine components for the gas pipeline. The deal is considered to provide substantial assistance in the development of Soviet infrastructure and to be a generator of foreign currency (after 1986). The decrease in Soviet oil production was pointed out. The question of being too heavily dependent on energy is mentioned only in the second place.

What has a negative effect on the American discussion is Schmidt's remark in an interview with William Safire (in THE NEW YORK TIMES of 19 February). According to this remark, the Soviets will use their foreign currency earnings to, above all, pay for American grain (in cash). Lambsdorff repeated this biting remark in America. Regarding such loose remarks, even those in Washington who are prepared to compromise say: "This enrages us."

JOINT FRG-FRENCH TANK PROJECT UNNECESSARY

DW011007 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 1 Mar 82 p 10

[Commentary signed EIN.: "Tanks and Politics"]

[Text] It is not necessary to produce a joint German-French tank. The Bundeswehr does not need a new battle tank. The Leopard is the best tank in the world. If need be, technology will be able to adapt this weapons system to the increased demands of decades, and does anyone know whether these armored dinosaurs will be able to survive on the battlefield by the end of this century? The missile has become the deadly enemy of armored vehicles. In addition, we have bad experiences with joint projects. Decisions on German-French cooperation were made once before according to national interests and not according to military requirements. German-American tank cooperation also ended in disappointment. In joint planning, the French always have exports in mind first. They welcome any alleviation through foreign financing of development efforts. The zeal with which the German Government supports the tank project ought to make us suspicious. Is the anti-Americanism which is currently in vogue possibly behind the demonstrative familiarity? Do Bonn and Paris want to demonstrate to Washington how independent they are? Still the main argument remains that a new tank is not needed. A militarily senseless decision will not make more sense if it is supposed to make political sense.

BRIEFS

RESETTLERS FROM EASTERN BLOC -- Hamburg, 24 Feb (DPA) -- The number of ethnic German resettlers from Eastern bloc states reached its highest level in 1981 since the record years of 1957 and 1958. As a result of the political events in the People's Republic of Poland, there was a 90 percent increase of resettlers from that country over 1980 figures. More than half of the 1.14 million resettlers who came to the FRG between 1950 and 1981 were from Poland. [Excerpt] [Hamburg DPA in German 0944 GMT 24 Feb 82 LD]

ETHIOPIA ORDERS FRENCH EMBASSY REDUCED BY HALF

NC031415 Paris AFP in English 1404 GMT 3 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 3 Mar (AFP) -- Ethiopian Charge d'Affaires in Paris Mesfin Retta was summoned to the French Foreign Ministry today for "an exchange of explanations" following yesterday's ultimatum from Addis Ababa that the French Embassy staff there must be cut in half.

The Ethiopian 48-hour deadline followed an accusation from the second-in-command of the regime, Captain Fikre-Selassie Wodgeress, that France was aiding separatist rebels in the Ethiopian province of Eritrea.

The Foregin Ministry here said it was hoped "that this misunderstanding will be cleared up." An official said that in the Horn of Africa the French Government "has chosen a discreet diplomacy and backs the principles of the United Nations Charter and resolutions of the Organization of African Unity."

Ethiopian anger arises from a call last week by the French Socialist Party -- the dominant partner in the French Government coalition -- for an end to "foreign troops" in Eritrea and for "self-determination for the Eritrean people."

10 Diplomats Leave

LD040916 Paris Domestic Service in French 0800 GMT 4 Mar 82

[Text] A group of 10 French diplomats and their families have just left Addis Ababa in Ethiopia. They have departed for Rome and Paris. Their expulsion follows Ethiopia's request to France to reduce its embassy staff. The Ethiopian Government is opposed to the French Socialist Party which recently called for self-determination for Eritrea, a province of northern Ethiopia.

CHADIAN FOREIGN MINISTER SAYS AID TO CONTINUE

AB021319 Paris AFP in English 1314 GMT 2 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, March 2 (AFP) -- France will continue to aid the Chadian Government, Chadian Foreign Minister Acyl Ahmat told a press conference today, but he refused to say if there would be any military assistance. France was reported last month to have ended military aid to Ndjamena. The French Foreign Ministry did not deny the report but said it was not responsible for it.

Mr Acyl said that he had told French Cooperation Minister Jean-Pierre Cot in "constructive" talks last night that the Chadian Government still refused to negotiate with former Defense Minister Hissene Habre, leader of the rebellious Armed Forces of the North (FAN).

"Whoever wins or loses, Hissene Habre has been condemned as a criminal by our people and there is no question of talking with him," Mr Acyl said.

The foreign minister said the question of Ndjamena appealing once again to a foreign power to help defeat the FAN -- as it did to Libya at the end of 1980 -- was not in the government's plans. Mr Acyl said he was against any foreign presence in Chad but he regretted the departure of the Libyans at Chadian President Goukouni Oueddei's request last October. It had allowed the FAN to return, he said.

The Chadian minister said there had been no pressure from France to get the Libyans out. French President Francois Mitterrand [words indistinct] himself last November that there was no question of France demanding this if the Chadian Government was not ready for it.

Until now, Mr Acyl said, Chad had confidence in the Organization of African Unity (OAU), which was not "a group of reactionary heads of state wanting to dominate Chad", finding a solution to the Chadian problem in agreement with the Ndjamena Government. However, Chad rejected en bloc the decisions taken at Nairobi by the OAU Committee on Chad that talks should be held between the two sides, a constitution drawn up and elections held by June 30, when the mandate of the OAU peacekeeping force in Chad expires.

The decisions were made "in the absence of the Chadian delegation" by "a certain number of states calling themselves members of a standing committee whose legality we contest," Mr Acyl said. He expected the OAU summit in Tripoli in June to reverse the committee's decisions.

Mr Acyl was meeting President Mitterrand's adviser for African affairs Guy Penne later today.

BASQUE NATIONALIST DEPUTY ASKS POLITICAL ASYLUM

PM011257 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 Feb 82 p 3

[Excerpt] An embarrassing affair for the French Government: Mr Francisco Letamendia, a Spanish Basque deputy, has just asked the Quai d'Orsay and the Interior Ministry to be allowed political asylum. He is being prosecuted in his country and is likely to go to prison. He preferred to cross the border before he was arrested.

Mr Letamendia is Bilbao deputy for the separatist coalition of Herri Batasuna, political counterpart of the Military ETA [Basque Homeland]. He was elected in 1979, but has never taken his seat in the Cortes, since the coalition decided to boycott the work of what it calls the "Spanish state's parliament." However, he had been a diligent member of parliament in the previous parliamentary term, when he represented a more moderate Nationalist Party.

LE MONDE VIEWS 39TH FRENCH-GERMAN SUMMIT

PM011205 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 Feb 82 pp 1, 4

[Bernard Brigouleix report: "Mr Mitterrand and Mr Schmidt Have Given Particular Prominence to the French-German Summit"]

[Text] Two observations seemed to indicate on Wednesday what the publication of a joint declaration was to bear out on Thursday: If the French were trying to give particular prominence to the 39th French-German summit, that desire was largely shared by Bonn.

Indeed, during the first day Chancellor Schmidt had a series of unusually long talks with the French president and premier -- lasting a total of 7 hours -- and hence the political and international aspect of the talks largely prevailed over the strictly technical and bilateral aspect.

Secondly, the tone of the remarks made by the FRG Government chief when he left the Elysee and the Hotel Matignon and of those made by his foreign minister, Genscher, on Deutschlandfunk clearly showed the German's interest in the revival -- or at least solemn reaffirmation -- of cooperation between Paris and Bonn.

Moreover, the possibility of issuing a joint statement had been envisaged on the French side before the meeting. But, before announcing it, the French were waiting to check that the chancellor was in full agreement with the idea in principle.

Although not a customary procedure, this type of statement has already been used in the recent past. Mr Giscard D'Estaing and Mr Schmidt published one in February 1980 solemnly warning the Soviets about the consequences of the invasion of Afghanistan and indicating that "Detente would not withstand another blow." Since then there have been the events in Warsaw....

This time the aim is once again to issue a "political signal," as the West German chancellor indicated on Wednesday. It is a signal aimed at the United States and the Soviet Union but also France's and the FRG's EEC partners. That is why this statement was to discuss the three main subjects of the political talks between Mr Schmidt and Mr Mitterrand, on which there was French-German agreement which has probably cleared than either side dared hope.

The first and most general of these subjects is that of East-West relations, which have again deteriorated since the Warsaw coup on 13 December. During the talks the French and Germans also seemed concerned over the outcome -- uncertain to say the least -- of the Geneva negotiations on euromissiles which they see as one of the last chances of stopping or at least slowing down the arms race. Mr Schmidt is particularly anxious to show his concern for those negotiations, since in the FRG itself one of the arguments now used toward the pacifists consists in asking them to suspend their demands during this conference in order not to jeopardize its results and thus deprive the Western negotiators of means of pressure and exchange in face of their Soviet interlocutors.

But the Paris meeting also enabled the chancellor and Mr Genscher to confirm that, although different popular reactions from those among West German opinion had emerged following the establishment of martial law in Poland, in the final analysis France's view of this matter does not differ from Bonn's. The signing of the Soviet gas contract by Paris on 23 January, moreover, helped to reassure a West German Government previously very annoyed by French statements about it's energy dependence on the USSR.

In addition, Mr Mitterrand and Mr Schmidt made a detailed examination of the consequences of the monetary and also economic chaos which the Europeans must now try to end. Both reiterated and specified their criticisms of the U.S. exchange rates policy. To harmonize their attitude Paris and Bonn intend in particular to define ceiling rates and to clearly indicate to Washington that beyond those limits France and the FRG would be forced to react by economic retaliatory measures and would urge their European partners to do likewise. Nonetheless, it seems that the Germans are less anxious to define such measures in practical terms than the French. Bonn is counting primarily on the deterrent effect which the announcement of a kind of European "common front" would have on those in charge of the U.S. economy. The two countries will also try to take joint action in the industrial sphere, particularly at the next summit of the most developed countries at Versailles in June.

As for the difficulties and uncertainties of the EEC which formed the third major political subject of the meeting, the major role of French-German accord in defending the community institutions and mechanisms was reaffirmed. But the FRG also expressed some concern at the growing protectionism among the European Ten. Of course it did so in general terms, but they were nonetheless aimed at some French remarks on the need to "win back the domestic market." It seems that attempts were made to allay the fears of the chancellor and his entourage on that subject.

These deliberations obviously rather overshadowed the numerous technical meetings between ministers on various specific matters and projects, even though each side remains convinced of the importance of this concrete form of Franco-German cooperation. But these projects, from the building of the A-320 airbus to the possibility of establishing a high-speed train link between Paris and Cologne (the city of Bonn decidedly remaining the poor relation of France's rail and air services), seem, if we dare say it, to be going well. The tank and combat helicopter projects were not to receive any immediate solution, mainly for reasons of West German domestic policy. But on the whole, the Paris meeting has been particularly studious.

It is as if, even in the details which form the substrate of cooperation between Paris and Bonn, the aim was to emphasize that, whether "preferential" or not, those relations were after all one of the necessary aspects of French diplomacy and European building.

LE FIGARO PONDERS FRG TURN TOWARD 'NEUTRALISM'

[Max Clos editorial: "Without Arms or Armor"]

[Text] Germany used to be Atlantist. It is now turning toward neutralism. Why? Because Paris and Bonn have not succeeded in building Europe. Mr Helmut Schmidt's political philosophy has not changed. Today, as in the past, he knows that his country is directly threatened by the USSR. He also knows that his country is a glacis, an outpost of the West, and that his people are exposed to the terrifying consequences of a conventional war, if not a nuclear war. The man has not forgotten them. The chancellor also knows that he can count only on illusory protection. So he has drawn in his claws in the hope, doubtless a vain one, of disarming the bear. Who could reproach him for opting for a problematic hope made possible by detente rather than taking the certain risk of a policy of firmness which he does not have the means to sustain?

Europe does not exist and, on behalf of his people, Mr Schmidt is drawing the conclusions. The Ten have not been able to reach agreement on anything, neither the price of pork nor currencies, and still less on defense. Look at the cacophony over the deployment of American Pershing II missiles to balance the Soviet SS-20s. Yet if Moscow deployed them, it did so to exert pressure on someone. Who, if not us Europeans?

Europe cannot be born by a miracle. It needs a framework, and none exists apart from the Bonn-Paris axis. The undertaking begun by De Gaulle was going well under the previous government. Everything is falling to pieces today and there are appreciable differences between our countries -- with regard to the "coup" in Warsaw, for example. France is partly to blame. We approach Bonn for a soft attitude on Poland. But was it not our own minister of external relations who said from the very beginning "Naturally, we will not do anything"? This is being pursued by a foreign policy which is allegedly Atlantist, but which results in arms being sold to Nicaragua, the focal point of America's worries today. In the conclusion of a gas agreement with the USSR and in the granting of a loan of $40 million to that country -- virtually a present -- to enable it to build its gas pipeline. Mr Schmidt has every right to say to himself that if he found himself in difficulties, a French Government representative would say: "Naturally, we will not do anything."

Germany, in common with all of Europe, is afraid. This is an understandable gut reaction, but it does not constitute a policy. The consequences are obvious: We are telling the East that we have no real intentions of resisting and we are dragging our partners along the suicidal path of detente. Let us stroke the tiger's whiskers, he will not eat us. In an interview with a British paper Mr Schmidt said: "International affairs are neither theater nor church, they are an arena." That is very true. But one does not enter an arena without arms or armor.

ILLEGALLY EXPORTED FUNDS BEING RETURNED

[Summary] The period of grace for returning to France money illegally withdrawn expired today. Henceforth, those found to have exported money thus will be prosecuted. To date, some Fr400 million have been returned under this arrangement which includes a 25 percent fine so Fr100 million has been collected by the Treasury. Customs authorities deem this total higher than expected and say that the money has come from various countries, not only Switzerland. Some of the 400 million had been taken abroad well before the change of regime in France. More funds coming from money invested in landed property abroad are expected to flow in because in this case the period of grace expires on 1 June to allow for the sale of such property. The amount thus returned is expected to be well below Fr400 million.

LE MONDE COMMENTS ON POLICY SHIFT ON CHAD

PM221337 Paris LE MONDE in French 19 Feb 82 p 5

[J.C. Pomonti report: "Paris Has Suspended Military Aid to Ndjamena"]

[Text] The cabinet meeting on Wednesday 17 February learned "with interest" of the results of the meeting of the OAU "ad hoc" committee on Chad in Nairobi on 10 and 11 February, a Quai d'Orsay spokesman said after the cabinet meeting. He explained that the government, "on that occasion, reaffirmed its attachment to the principles of Chad's unity, territorial integrity and independence" and "expressed its concern to step up its efforts to help rebuild the country by active technical cooperation with the Chadian authorities."

Moreover, according to an official source, Paris has suspended its deliveries of arms and ammunition to Ndjamena in order to respect the spirit of the cease-fire due to start 28 February under the terms of the OAU "peace plan."

At the end of October the French Government admitted that it was supplying arms and ammunition to the Ndjamena authorities, particularly to equip the integrated National Army which was being trained and which, since then, has been defeated by Mr Hissein Habre's Northern Armed Forces [FAN] in battles in the center of the country in December. Those supplies have been suspended because the OAU has called on the Chadian factions to negotiate a political compromise in order to hold elections and give Chad institutions before 30 June -- the limit set for the withdrawal of the inter-African peacekeeping force.

The Quai d'Orsay communique also gives the impression of a French withdrawal. Indeed last year Paris had played an active role in ensuring the implementation of the resolutions taken at the OAU summit in July to promote a settlement in Chad and to lead the OAU to send a peacekeeping force to the country. The French Government is now showing the OAU its "interest" and no longer its "unreserved support."

This stance, 1 week after the issuing of the OAU "peace plan," barely conceals the embarrassment of a diplomacy which had seemed to be counting on President Goukouni Oueddei, who is now rejecting the OAU proposals and has just reaffirmed his refusal to negotiate with Hissein Habre. "There is no cease-fire to be respected; the Chadian problem is a military problem and, with the aid of friendly and fraternal countries, we will not sit back and do nothing," the National Unity Transition Government president again stated in Ndjamena on Tuesday.

Official circles in Paris explain that now that the withdrawal of the Libyan forces has been secured it is not up to France to intervene between the Chadians and it is stated that no contact has been made with Mr Hissein Habre. Chadian Foreign Minister Acyl Ahmat was, however, to have been received Tuesday by Elysee adviser Penne and at the Quai d'Orsay before his visit to France was postponed for undisclosed reasons on the eve of his trip.

Although Mr Goukouni Oueddei's rejection of the OAU's "peace plan" has created a dangerous deadlock -- since if it is not heeded, the OAU could be forced to withdraw the inter-African peacekeeping force -- it is difficult to imagine that the French Government has opted to pull out, even if it had not foreseen the extent of Mr Hissein Habre's military successes.

BERLINGUER QUESTIONED ON DIFFERENCES WITH CPSU

DW031009 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 1 Mar 82 pp 124-134

[Interview with PCI General Secretary Enrico Berlinguer by DER SPIEGEL editors Michael Haller, Dieter Wild and Birgit Kraetz at PCI headquarters in Rome; date not given]

[Text] SPIEGEL: Mr Berlinguer, differences of opinion between the Italian and the Soviet communist parties have existed for many years now. On 30 December 1981, however, you declared that the road embarked on by the October Revolution had led to a negative development and that Soviet society did not represent a model. Moscow then called you a stooge of U.S. imperialism. What still actually unites Italian and Soviet communists?

Berlinguer: For years now we have held the view explicitly that Soviet society is not a model worth being imitated by Italy or Western Europe. In the 30 December 1981 document by our party executive on the events in Poland, we note that the road embarked on by the October Revolution has lost its renovating and revolutionary driving force in the struggle for socialism. Nonetheless, as always we still consider the October Revolution to be the greatest revolutionary event of the century, and not just for Russia; it has given great impetus to the emancipation of workers and to the liberation of suppressed people on all continents.

SPIEGEL: What in particular is your objection to the latest developments in Poland?

Berlinguer: Martial law in Poland has made us again consider the retrograde developments in the East European community, including the Soviet Union.

SPIEGEL: Is there any date which in your view marks the beginning of negative developments in East Europe?

Berlinguer: A development cannot be determined systematically, as, for instance, with the statement "In the beginning everything was correct and then everything was wrong." Certain distortions in the development of Soviet society undoubtedly occured as early as 2 years after the beginning of Stalin's dictatorship. Nevertheless, not everything at that time was wrong. Along with mistakes and dramatic events, the Stalin era also made great progress. It placed the Soviet Union in a position victoriously to resist the German attack.

SPIEGEL: Your judgment of Stalin's actions as only "mistakes and dramatic events" appears to be rather mild for a reformed communist party such as the PCI.

Berlinguer: We were speaking of mistakes, dramatic events, tragedies and crimes, about which I could say even more. But I also said that the Soviet Union, although it suffered much during this period, made further developments and also today shows a certain progress.

SPIEGEL: Wasn't Stalinism actually already laid out by Leninism?

Berlinguer: You must differentiate between Lenin and Leninism. Lenin never spoke of Leninism. Stalin was the first to try to canonize Leninism and to shape it dogmatically. The October Revolution, which Lenin basically wanted, was naturally an act of force, the greatest imaginable. This act of force doubtlessly burdened the Soviet Union's later development. On the other hand, it was due to the Bolsheviks' forcible seizure of power that Russia was saved from collapse and that the prerequisites were created which contributed to overcoming Russia's historic backwardness so that it finally became a powerful modern industrialized state.

SPEIGEL: By the way, how binding are the works of Lenin and, of course, also of Marx, for you today?

Berlinguer: We do not like "isms." Marx was the first to state that he was not a Marxist. In this way he wanted to prevent any dogmatizing and codification of his thought. Thus Marx -- like Lenin later as well -- wanted to draw everyone's attention to the fact that his philosophy and his practical actions were determined solely by the will to solve those problems with which the workers movement was specifically at the time confronted. We believe Marx and Lenin left behind a partly valid but also somewhat obsolete theory to the workers movement and world communism.

SPIEGEL: In your statement on Poland you claimed that in the Soviet Union the teachings of Marx had been changed into the opposite through dogmatism and bureaucracy. The opposite to socialism would be a kind of feudal society. Is that what the Soviet Union is today?

Berlinguer: No, that cannot be said. Such an allegation would seem grotesque to me. The Soviet Union is a society where capitalism has been abolished but no feudalism has arisen. When we state that the teachings of Marx have been distorted, we are referring to two fundamental aspects of Marx' doctrine. First, Marx started his philosophical work within the post-Hegel school with radical criticism of ideology in general. Second, Marx considered the socialist society to be one where centralist and bureaucratic elements would gradually dissolve. It is in this sense that we are speaking of a distortion of Marx' doctrine in the Soviet Union.

SPIEGEL: If in your view no feudalism exists in the Soviet Union, is there perhaps a new kind of class society?

Berlinguer: Classes or strata still exist; it all depends on what is understood by the term "class." Quite certainly a state party has evolved which has placed itself above society and is in contradiction to it.

SPIEGEL: When you say something like this, we actually get the impression that you must feel freed or relieved that at long last something has now been said with regard to Poland -- something that had been thought for a long time but never stated firmly. Or are the vehement polemics with Moscow a burden for you?

Berlinguer: I feel neither particularly burdened nor relieved. Certainly we knew our stance would provoke polemics. Nevertheless it was necessary for us to take a stand. Our position stems from the coherent development of the policy we have been pursuing for years now. Our stance helps us -- just as do the difficulties we derived from it -- make our concept of socialism as well as our ideas about relations between the parties of the workers movement and between communist parties clearer.

SPIEGEL: Why is it actually so difficult for a communist party to realize and list the shortcomings of the Soviet system?

Berlinguer: When the intervention in Czechoslovakia was taking place, we not only strongly condemned it but also strongly emphasized some principles at that time which are reflected today in our approach. You must not forget, however, that hope was developing in Poland since August 1980. We could observe this event more or less optimistically. I do not remember, however, anybody maintaining that this hope should be buried because it was destined from the very beginning to end the way it has. Its dramatic end has made us ponder more deeply on the general situation in the East bloc countries.

Like all other communist parties, we are certainly also influenced by the fact that all communist parties, including ours, were created by the October Revolution and by the impulse emanating from the Soviet example.

The fact that the Soviet Union assisted us during very difficult times, such as the years of fascism, with political and moral support is another reason. There is also the fact that for a long time the Soviet Union exerted great influence on the freedom struggles of the people in the fight by democratic antifascism in Europe. After all, the USSR is a counterweight to the aggressiveness of the greatest world power, the United States.

SPIEGEL: Regarding your condemnation by Moscow, your Comrade Pajetta stated that he is not aware of the existence of a communist Vatican, so that there could thus be no communist excommunication. However, isn't Moscow's response to your protest over Poland a kind of excommunication?

Berlinguer: In part, yes. The statement by Comrade Pajetta describes something paradoxical. We cannot imagine, and we contest, the idea that a socialist would believe in a communist church which states from the pulpit who is right and who is wrong and who are the unbelieving, the heretics and the schismatics. Such a thing can have no place in the workers movement, which is secular.

SPIEGEL: Moscow probably takes a different view.

Berlinguer: Yes. Unfortunately we must note that a tendency exists in the top echelons of the Soviet party to feel like the supreme judge of orthodoxy.

SPIEGEL: Whoever sees himself as the judge of orthodoxy would like to see the heretics burn...

Berlinguer: That happened frequently under Stalinism. Today it is probably no longer possible.

SPIEGEL: Moscow is reproaching you now by saying that you are now denying everything that connected you with the "progressive fighters for peace and socialism in 90 countries." How does a communist feel when he hears something like that?

Berlinguer: I consider this judgment to be basically wrong and unjustified.

SPIEGEL: To what degree do you still take this condemnation by the Soviet Union seriously?

Berlinguer: I do not attribute too much weight to this judgment, regardless of how grave it may be. The citizens, workers and our comrades in Italy as well as our friends on all continents know the PCI has always been fighting for the peace and freedom of the peoples.

SPIEGEL: But the PCI knows the Soviet party and is aware of its sensitivity to even much more restrained criticism than your statement on developments in Poland. So a sharp reaction from Moscow was to be expected. Why do you pretend to be so surprised?

Berlinguer: I have already told you that we naturally expected an answer, and I would even say it was legitimate. We cannot expect to criticize someone and not be criticized ourselves.

SPIEGEL: What hit you so haru then?

Berlinguer: The fact that the Soviet readers of PRAVDA AND KOMMUNIST weren't able to read even excerpts from our statement, while we made all the Soviet statements available to our comrades.

SPIEGEL: Since the 1976 East Berlin meeting of European communist parties, Moscow has officially accepted your demand that various ways to socialism must be permissible. It was always clear, however, that such a concession could not apply to the countries of so-called true socialism, particularly not for the Warsaw Pact.

Berlinguer: I cling loyally to Marx's definition of communism as a higher phase of the socialist society. We can discuss to what extent socialism has been implemented in various societies. However, I believe that so far communism has not been implemented in any country. Regarding the formulations in the documents of the East Berlin conference of 1976, they are phrased in such a way that the autonomy of communist parties could not be ruled out for East Europe either. These formulations were valid for all communist and workers parties in all Eastern and Western countries. The fact that the Soviet interpretation was different has been demonstrated by later events. However, the texts were clear-cut.

SPIEGEL: Did you yourself believe at that time that the Soviets shared your opinion on the independence of East European parties?

Berlinguer: We asked ourselves at that time how this recognition would work if it were tested in practice.

SPIEGEL: The following has happened in Poland: The workers, organized in a trade union, were about to deprive the ruling communist party of its power. Did you really believe something like that could succeed?

Berlinguer: I don't know whether this would have really happened. Maybe such aims were being pursued by a part of Solidarity, and certainly the majority of the workers opposed the ruling party. In view of this situation, the party could have continued to rule only on one condition: It would have had to dispel the mistrust of the workers party and to aim for a basic economic, social and political renewal. You have to admit that this has been done to a certain extent. In doing this, however, the party demonstrated so much insecurity that it was not able to win back the confidence of the workers class. This made it clear that there can be no legitimate political power in opposition to the workers class, even if the people in power claim to have its support. Such power can hardly be called socialism.

SPIEGEL: Politicians in the West -- not only rightist but also leftist -- demand that the Polish reform, which has been stopped now, be enforced through boycott measures. Do you approve of such measures?

Berlinguer: While it is doubtful whether such reforms will be implemented, I am in favor of never ruling out the possibility of positive developments in Poland. We are firmly against any kind of boycott, sanctions or retaliation measures because first such policies would harm only the Polish people and second they would aggravate tensions in Europe and the world. We are precisely the ones who believe that the continuation of detente could also offer a chance for positive developments in Poland. Tensions can actually lead only to a hardening of the situation.

SPIEGEL: But haven't developments in Poland shown how dangerous detente is for the Soviet communist system?

Berlinger: I believe the Soviet Union and the East European countries are just as interested in detente and disarmament as the Western countries.

SPIEGEL: Certainly, but detente also means an exchange of information, contacts and opportunities to travel.

Berlinguer: Exactly. Detente also creates problems...

SPIEGEL: It creates dangers for a system which must isolate itself so that it is not exposed to revealing comparisons.

Berlinguer: The big problem is that detente may become dangerous if reforms do not take place under such a system. Such reforms are actually puncturing the isolation of such countries. We believe, however, that economic as well as political reforms are needed in the Warsaw Pact countries. At the same time, we can see that these countries -- and I am speaking above all about the Soviet Union -- have their security problems, which the West must take into account. Nobody in the West should try to alter the existing equilibrium. The primary condition is for this balance between the two blocs to be guaranteed in any event. Also nobody in the West should want to change it, so that the Soviet Union's concern about its own national security need not arise at all.

SPIEGEL: Judging by past experiences, however, partial reforms in such a closed system spread rapidly to the entire system as soon as the monopoly of power and information is put into question. This happened in Poland, where the trade union became a political alternative. Is this the road toward reforms you approve of? Do you want to dissolve the party's monopoly on power?

Berlinguer: In the Warsaw Pact countries a vicious circle exists. If no attempt is made to tackle reforms, then the risk is run of letting such social changes slip even further into subversiveness. This only leads to a further hardening of the situation. This result burdens international security. This is why it is necessary for reforms to be tackled without delay.

SPIEGEL: In Poland the generals are governing now, like in Turkey, though their reign is by far not as bloody. Nevertheless, it is generals. Lenin denounced such "Bonapartism" as a "threat to the socialist fatherland." Do you believe Moscow appreciates this solution, which contradicts Lenin's judgment?

Berlinguer: My impression is that if the military regime consolidates in Poland, this will not be in conformity with the concepts of the Soviet Union because Moscow gives primacy to the party.

SPIEGEL: The freedom of the Polish workers is being defended these days with words, not only by the Italian Communists but also by the German Christian Democrats and reactionary U.S. President Reagan. How do you feel amid this unholy alliance?

Berlinguer: It is indeed amazing how many statements of solidarity with the Polish workers are made by reactionaries such as Reagan or by the Christian Democrats in your country and in Italy, whereas they do not come out for the rights of the workers in their own countries. Thus the purpose and the double standard of these statements are quite obvious. We must expose and denounce them. We have made it clear here in Italy that the DC secretary talks big against repression in Poland but says not one word against the bloody and horrible repression of Christian Democratic dictator Duarte in El Salvador or for the workers and the people there. But all this cannot prevent us, as a workers party, from manifesting our solidarity with the Polish workers.

SPIEGEL: The Socialists in Italy and France have denounced as "pussyfooting" the German Social Democrats' approach to the Polish issue by saying that the Germans are betraying the Polish workers and currying favor with the Soviet Union for selfish interests. Do you share this criticism?

Berlinguer: I don't know whether the word "betrayal" was used or whether we could go that far. Although we do not share all the positions taken by the German Social Democrats, we do believe the German approach to the Polish crisis was correct and well-balanced.

There is so much talk of selfishness, but what is meant? Economic relations with the East? They are actually nothing bad. On the contrary, peace and detente also depend on how trade relations develop. They benefit the West as well as the East. Person-to-person relations between the two German states are in the mutual interests of all of Europe.

SPIEGEL: At the Strasbourg European Parliament the Italian Communists, according to their delegate Segre, "have always voted together with the SPD on all important decisions of the commissions ... during the last 1 and 1/2 years." Regarding the Polish issue, you are much closer to the French Socialists than to the French Communists. Doesn't it bother you to have the reputation of having embarked on the road toward social democracy?

Berlinguer: On this point we have to differentiate between foreign and domestic policy. Regarding foreign policy, I have already said that we consider as unjustified the criticism of the German Social Democrats voiced by the Italian Socialists and sometimes also by the French Socialists. However, it must also be pointed out in this connection that the French Government has also rejected sanctions against Poland on principle. Then it signed an agreement on the delivery of Soviet gas. In addition, Premier Mauroy has said that he, at any rate, does not want to have the French workers pay for the consequences of the Polish crisis.

But let us also talk about how socialism is to be strengthened in the West. In this respect we hold a view of our own. It is based on the experiences of our party, which has its own character and differs from the nature of other communist parties. Our political concepts also differ strongly from those of the Social Democrats, although not so much on the question of how socialism is to spread in full democratic freedom. Where our concepts diverge from the Social Democratic line is at the point where Social Democratic policy has failed to overcome capitalism -- this is true yesterday as well as today.

SPIEGEL: Not overcome, but certainly limited.

Berlinguer: We see things now that we could possibly have in common with the social democratic parties -- in some countries they represent the great majority of the workers class -- because some of them are looking for ways to overcome capitalism.

SPIEGEL: The PCI likes to represent itself in domestic politics as a moral power different from the other Italian parties because they have worn themselves out politically. You have not come closer to power with this strategy. Doesn't that indicate that you cannot achieve anything with simple moral intentions in Italian politics?

Berlinguer: The fight for increased morality in Italian domestic politics is directed against corruption as well as against the belief that the parties are representing the general interests of the country, while these interests are actually going down the drain. We must wage this fight regardless of whether it helps win elections. It is absolutely necessary to make Italy sound again, and we believe this fight is a sign of our strength. If we did not wage this fight, we would not be fulfilling our duties with regard to the country and we would certainly suffer from this as a party. This also means we must wage this fight with more conviction.

SPIEGEL: Don't you feel bitter that in France an antiquated, sectarian and mostly Moscow-directed communist party is represented by four ministers in the government, while your large and comparatively modern and openminded party obviously cannot get out of its isolation in the domestic political scene?

Berlinguer: I do not share your opinion of the French Communist Party, although we hold different opinion on important issues. No, I do not feel the slightest trace of bitterness that in contrast to us the French Communists are sitting in the government. We cannot expect other communist parties to be subjected to the same criteria we are. We are in no hurry to join the government, let alone at any price.

SPIEGEL: Don't you feel your party is extraordinarily bashful about admitting its own mistakes? In 1978 you gave parliamentary support to a Christian Democratic government at the cost of a great loss of confidence -- within the party, among the voters and particularly among the young people, who have in part drifted away to the ultraleft.

Berlinguer: The fact that large numbers of young people have assumed ultraleftist positions in past years was not caused just by our mistakes, but by a number of factors. However, this development has died down in the meantime. The influence of various small and large groups has decreased, and we find that the young generation has a newly awakened interest in our policy.

SPIEGEL: In the meantime you are looking for new alliance partners to form a government coalition. However, following the Christian Democrats, the Socialists have now also given you the cold shoulder. Party chief Bettino Craxi probably has justified fears that he would have hardly any political leeway in an alliance with a strong and reformed Communist Party. How do you intend to remove this fear?

Berlinguer: I can guarantee him everything we can legitimately guarantee. However, he cannot expect me to ask the Italian people to weaken the Communist Party.

SPIEGEL: It seems to be a fact today that the next Italian government chief will be Craxi. Do you see a chance that the unpredictable Craxi might eventually ask you to join a coalition government after all, maybe following the French pattern?

Berlinguer: The Socialist party has again announced recently that it will remain loyal to its government partners of the past 3 years. We maintain, however, with regard to the Socialist comrades that the time has come for them to change their politics and embark on a new way which would be a real alternative to the old coalitions and the old governments' methods.

SPIEGEL: Mr Berlinguer, according to Lenin's conception, divergent opinions in a party were condemned as "factionalism." The PCI, however, is relatively tolerant to internal party dissidents. Aren't dangers for party unity inherent here, as has repeatedly been the case in the big socialist parties?

Berlinguer: We remain loyal to the principle of democratic centralism. The emphasis is increasingly moving in the direction of "democratic." Debates, the exchange of ideas and the direct participation of registered members are becoming increasingly frank. However, factions cannot be allowed in the future because they would really endanger the unity of the party -- as has been demonstrated by foreign and Italian examples -- and they would thus also endanger the development of the party and of democratic life as such.

SPIEGEL: In your party's Central Committee only one member, Armando Cossutta, voted against your harsh Poland statement. But there was broader objection at the party base, and there have been resignations from the party. How many up to now?

Berlinguer: Discussions within the party show great approval for the Central Committee's line. However, there are also voices expressing dissent, doubts and reservations. All this forms part of the struggle waged for party unity. There were only a few cases where party cards were returned. It was a few dozen. On the other hand, many Italians are joining the party.

SPIEGEL: But why didn't you place the party sections on alert after the statement on Poland?

Berlinguer: Because we know about groups -- including registered members as well as outsiders -- which started or intended to organize a split in the party. We called on all comrades to be vigilant and to take care of those who can easily be manipulated because they do not realize the danger.

SPIEGEL: Is this attempt to split the PCI being directed by Moscow?

Berlinguer: That is likely.

SPIEGEL: What can you do and what will you do to counter attempts to split the party without abandoning your principle of being an open and democratic party? What does it really mean to fight against factions?

Berlinguer: It means not allowing them, and if there is evidence of their existence, then it means denouncing and banning them.

SPIEGEL: Do you anticipate that the current crisis of faith between Moscow and Rome will lead to a severing of relations between the two parties, like between Moscow and Belgrade in 1948 and between Moscow and Beijing in 1960?

Berlinguer: I cannot predict how the Soviet leadership will act in the future. We, at any rate, do not want to break with Moscow, and we do not regard the strong polemics we have at present with Moscow as breakdown. On the other hand, we are determined to not abandon our stance.

SPIEGEL: What does that mean exactly?

Berlinguer: What we want is an equal discussion. For instance, we will insist on the Soviet communists' being informed of our positions. A correct representation of mutual standpoints also is a means to let the active members of both parties participate in the debate. As to your allusion to a parallel to Yugoslavia in 1948 and China in 1960, I want to say only that at that time it was not only party relations that were severed; relations between the states were also strongly affected. In our conflict with the Soviets, only the relations between parties are involved. All the other questions are different, though no less serious, than those at that time.

SPIEGEL: Do PCI officials have to count on no longer being sent to Moscow for training or being in a position to spend their vacation in the Crimea?

Berlinguer: Our comrades spend their vacations in many countries. We will not prescribe to anybody which countries he can visit. These are decisions made individually by everyone.

SPIEGEL: What if PCI officials are refused an entry visa to the USSR?

Berlinguer: I don't know; I hope it won't happen.

SPIEGEL: Only a few months ago the PCI leadership was split in its judgment about the nature of the Soviet system as well as on the party's course in the domestic field. The general secretary appeared to be uncertain and weakened. Today the party leadership stands to a large degree behind a determined general secretary who is defying the great Soviet power. To put it cynically, don't you have to be breatful to General Jaruzelski for providing you with the wonderful topic of Poland?

Berlinguer: To begin with, we are not a military unit led by a general. We are not a unit that measures itself by the yardstick of another unit. We are a political party that debates all issues of international and national policy. Second, I did not let myself be guided by personal views with regard to Poland or with other previous cases. Everybody knows I never went all-out for the post of general secretary; I was elected because the Central Committee wanted it that way. We -- I and the other comrades -- are guided by convictions, which are determined by events.

SPIEGEL: What do you think of Lenin's saying that "Freedom for Poland is impossible without freedom for Russia?"

Berlinguer: This is indeed a very appropriate remark, although it was said in a totally different time. I would interpret it differently today; any process of democratic development in the countries of Eastern Europe is also in the interests of the Soviet people.

SPIEGEL: Mr Berlinguer, thank you for this talk.

PCI'S COSSUTTA, BUFALINI CONTINUE POLEMIC

PM011615 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 21 Feb 82 p 4

[Apparent text of letter to L'UNITA by PCI Directorate member Armando Cossutta, followed by statement by PCI Directorate member Paolo Bufalini]

[Text] Comrade Armando Cossutta has sent us the following letter, which we publish with a reply from Comrade Paolo Bufalini.

Dear Editor:

I wish to send you immediately some clarifications, not concerning the grounds on which the party directorate has supported its "reproof" of me, but concerning the fact that, reading in L'UNITA the account of Comrade Paolo Bufalini's speech to the Rome communist leaders, I found some information in it concerning me which is not at all true.

First -- Comrade Bufalini maintains that I asked to go and make the speech in Perugia. This is not true. I was designated by the Secretariat to make the speech. It is true that I had protested because, after being committed in writing to keep myself available for a speech somewhere on the PCI's 61st anniversary, I was excluded without warning or justification from the list of speakers.

Second -- Comrade Bufalini maintains that I sent the account of my speech first to the other newspapers and then to L'UNITA. This is not true. I sent the account simultaneously both to L'UNITA and to the agencies and newspapers which had asked me for it, then extending the release out of politeness to other publications. This seems to me a quite correct method -- a method which, to tell the truth, has often been disregarded by other party leaders.

I am prompted to deplore these indubitable inaccuracies contained in the account of Comrade Bufalini's speech, because this is certainly not the path along which we can attempt to effect a reconciliation between theoretical and political stances, which, being concerned with matters of exceptional importance, are threatening the unity, and hence the political influence of our party, in which they remain in a state of sharp antagonism, ignoring any effort at higher synthesis. Fraternally, [signed] Armando Cossutta

The corrections which Comrade Cossutta presumes to make to my statements -- which are quite correct -- fill me with amazement, since Comrade Cossutta knows very well that the following facts were confirmed -- and not disputed by him -- by the Directorate meeting:

1. Immediately after the Central Committee and Central Control Committee meeting devoted to debating the events in Poland and the international situation, all comrades on the Directorate and others were asked to make themselves available to hold rallies. Comrade Cossutta obviously figured among these, but not being immediately assigned (something which happened to others as well as him, including myself), he applied to the Party Secretariat -- as he himself writes -- requesting to be sent to celebrate the party's 61st anniversary. Consequently, he was instructed to hold the celebration at Perugia, where he therefore spoke not for a debate but as an official speaker on behalf of the Central Committee;

2. Before he delivered the speech, indeed before he left Rome to go to the celebration, Comrade Cossutta sent the account written by himself to agencies and several press organs and also L'UNITA, thus confronting the party newspaper with a fait accompli, so that at 2000 hours on Saturday -- and hence before the account itself could be published in L'UNITA -- journalist Orefice gave extensive excerpts from it, commenting on them in the first television newscast.

Linking this conduct with the contents of the account, which was clearly polemical toward the political decisions approved by the Central Committee, it can be clearly understood why the party's Directorate deplored Comrade Cossutta's conduct. [Signed] Paolo Bufalini

SPADOLINI TALKS WITH ROMANIAN FOREIGN MINISTER

[Text] Rome, 3 Mar (ANSA) -- East-West ties, as well as the situation in the Mideast, in the Mediterranean and in the Balkans were at the center of talks Premier Giovanni Spadolini had today with Romanian Foreign Minister Stefan Andrei.

Spadolini voiced concern over the effect that events in Poland could have on any resumption of the East-West dialogue and the process of detente. He urged all countries that have at heart the continuance of this dialogue to work in all possible international forums to induce Polish officials to end the repression underway in their land.

Both Italy and Romania stressed the importance to European security of a positive outcome of the nuclear disarmament talks underway in Geneva between the United States and the Soviet Union.

With regard to the Middle East, Romania voiced approval of Italy's recent decision to take part in the multinational peacekeeping force in the Sinai which, it said, gave tangible proof of a European presence in the Middle East and the community's commitment to making a contribution to the search for a global solution in the area.

RESOLUTION PASSED ON TURKEY, EL SALVADOR

AU040912 Rome ANSA in English 0839 GMT 4 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 4 Mar (ANSA) -- The Italian Government is committed to act in domestic political quarters and to take diplomatic steps abroad for the restoration of democracy in Turkey with the same determination shown in work aimed at a negotiated and non-military solution for the situation in El Salvador, according to a resolution passed in the evening by the Lower House.

The foreign policy resolution was presented by the five parties in Premier Giovanni Spadolini's coalition, the Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Liberals and the premier's Republican Party. It passed by a vote of 272 to 222, with one abstention.

In the section on El Salvador, the resolution committed the government to the United Nations General Assembly resolution passed in December and to a negotiated, non-military settlement in the country based on the principles of freedom, tolerance and respect for human rights as confirmed in the constitution and in the 1975 Helsinki Final Act.

During debate leading up to the vote, Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo opened his statement to the House on the situation in Turkey by pointing out, "It is not our intention to make any concession on the level of principles to safeguards for human rights and political freedom".

Colombo said that the Italian ambassador to Ankara has been instructed to make clear to the Turkish Government that only respect for human rights and the restoration of democracy can change Italy's view of the situation in that country.

After recalling the diplomatic activities undertaken by other Western countries in this area and noting their results, the foreign minister said, "At least as far as the timetable for the reestablishment of democracy is concerned, this shoould be achieved within two years, but there will be a need for vigilance".

Colombo went on to assure the House that Italy will continue to firmly press for the revival of democratic institutions in Turkey in all quarters, for the repeal of measures which run counter to democratic and trade union freedom, and for an end to the detention of political prisoners and cruel and unusual methods of detention.

As regards the trial of 52 Turkey union leaders, the foreign minister said, "We were not passive in the face of fears that the proceedings might conclude with death sentences. "Not only this, we also brought pressures to bear to guarantee for the defendants that their positions would not be prejudiced by their professions of political militancy".

Earlier in foreign policy debate, Colombo told the House that, "Italy will pursue not only the search for possible premises for a dialogue aimed at peace in El Salvador, but will also pay special attention to bilateral acts with those countries most directly involved in the problem".

In this context, the diplomatic chief referred to his conversations with United States secretary of state Alexander Haig, consultations on conditions in the Central American republic conducted during the Council of Foreign Ministers of the European Economic Community in Brussels on February 23 and bilateral talks in Rome during the visit last week of French president Francois Mitterrand.

Colombo also described political proposals for a settlement in El Salvador presented by Mexican head of state Jose Lopez Portillo as "ample in breadth".

PAPER SAYS RED BRIGADE ARMS COME FROM LIBYA

[Text] Rome, 3 Mar (ANSA) -- Part of the arms found in terrorist hideouts in Milan came from Libya, according to CORRIERE DELLA SERA today.

The Milan daily said that among the rifles, machine guns and handguns seized by police were weapons supplied by Libya to Mario Moretti, former military leader of the Red Brigades (now in jail) and to Pasqua Aurora Betti, another chief of the extreme leftwing urban guerrilla organization. The paper did not cite the source of its information.

NAVY WON'T PARTICIPATE IN NATO MANEUVERS

AU031536 Rome ANSA in English 1510 GMT 3 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 3 Mar (ANSA) -- The Italian Navy will not be taking part in NATO maneuvers in the Gulf of Mexico this month, the Foreign Ministry said in a communique denying reports to this effect in certain Italian dailies today.

The reports are totally groundless, the communique said, adding that "The Italian Navy is and remains engaged in the Mediterranean."

The Atlantic alliance maneuvers, dubbed "Safe Passage 82" will take place from March 8 to 18 off the coast of Cuba and will employ 30 naval vessels, 80 planes and 10,000 soldiers from Britain, West Germany, Holland, Canada and the United States.

The Italian Ministry note today said that NATO had not asked Italy to take part in this exercise which aims at providing safe passage in time of danger for cargo ships to and from Europe.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON SUBMARINE INCIDENT

AU031544 Rome ANSA in English 1515 GMT 3 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 3 Mar (ANSA) -- The intrusion into Italian territorial waters last week of a non-NATO submarine, believed by many to belong to the Soviet Union, is a serious violation which is even more grave given the fact that it was aimed against a country like Italy which plays a role of moderation and of easing tensions in the Mediterranean, according to Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo today.

Irresponsible actions like that of the submarine detected in the Gulf of Taranto February 24 can only heighten Italy's vigilance in the defense of its national security, Colombo told an interviewer from CORRIERE DELLA SERA.

In the same interview, Colombo turned to his plan for regular meetings between European and North American foreign ministers to improve cooperation between the United States and its European allies. He made this proposal during a recent lecture he gave at the University of Georgetown in the United States.

The idea is to create a constant system of contact among the allies so as to complete and integrate the current network of consultations within NATO and at the annual summit meetings of the industrialized nations, he told the interviewer.

ARAB LIBERATION FRONT MEMBER KILLED IN MADRID

NC011427 Paris AFP in English 1339 GMT 1 Mar 82

[Text] Madrid, 1 Mar (AFP) -- A member of the Arab Liberation Front was shot dead today by a gunman who opened fire in broad daylight in the center of Madrid, a police source said.

An Arabic-looking man came up behind Nabil 'Aranki Hawwad, who was leaving his house, and shot him twice in the neck before fleeing on foot, police said. Mr Hawwad, 35, was taken to a hospital but died on arrival.

Mr Haddad, a Palestinain born in Haifa, Israel, had been living in Spain for 12 years and studied pharmaceutical sciences, sources said. They said he recently made a trip to Beirut.

His group, the Arab Liberation Front, is a Baghdad-based dissident movement of the Palestinian Fatah organization. The front was in the news here two years ago. One of its members, Sa'id as-Salman, 27, killed Spanish lawyer Adolfo Cotelo in an attack aimed at the Honorary president of Madrid's Jewish Community, Max Mazin.

Seven Palestinians and Jordanians were arrested after the attack, but released a week later.

Representatives here for the Palestine Liberation Organization [PLO] issued a communique blaming the Israeli Secret Service agents for the attack.

The statement said "several European governments informed the PLO that Israel would commit terrorist acts, particularly in Europe, against Palestinian figures" before April 25, the day Israel is scheduled to turn the Sinai Peninsula over to Egypt.

Mr Hawwadi, who was married to a Spanish woman and had two children, had lived in Spain since 1972, reports said.

Police said he had used an Iraqi passport on his recent return to Spain from Beirut.

GOVERNMENT SPOKESMAN NOTES HAIG STATEMENT ON AID

NC031814 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 3 Mar 82

[Text] The government spokesman today referred to the statement by U.S. Secretary of State Haig to the House Foreign Affairs Committee on the termination of the program of aid for Cyprus and said the republic's foreign minister, Rolandhis, has issued instructions to the Cyprus ambassador in Washington to look into the matter. As in the past, the question of aid, the spokesman added, is complicated and will go through many phases. The Cyprus Government, he added, hopes that in the end there will be the necessary understanding, as demonstrated in the past, over the complicated problems still being faced by the refugee population of Cyprus and that this aid will be continued.

Press on U.S. Aid

NC041105 [Editorial report] All Nicosia Greek-language dailies of 4 March -- with the exception of O KIRIKAS and TA NEA, which confine themselves to merely reporting the government spokesman's statement -- comment on Secretary of State Haig's statement on suspension of U.S. economic to Cyprus. The press comment is almost unanimous in denouncing such an intention by the U.S. administration and attributing it to political expediency.

The progovernment I ELEVTHEROTIPIA, in its "Positions" column, says "it is natural for even the most pro-American person to be disappointed by the Reagan administration's intention to suspend economic aid to Cyprus." The paper observes that the Cypriots are too proud to beg for aid from anyone or to plead with the United States "to continue the aid it has been granting particularly for the refugee problem caused by the Turkish invasion and occupation (which our people will never forget were committed with U.S. arms)." At the same time, the paper uses Haig's "certificate of health and strength" for the Cyprus economy as an answer to opposition criticism of Kiprianou's government.

Under the title "U.S. Aid," the opposition rightwing I SIMERINI notes in its "Freely" column that "if such a decision has actually been made, we are compelled to believe it has been imposed by reasons and expediencies irrelevant to the island's economic situation. It is obvious even to the most ignorant observer that the Cyprus economy is not developing normally because of the political anomaly that torments the country." After rejecting Haig's argument on per-capita income in Cyprus by stressing the hundreds of homeless refugees as a result of the Turkish invasion, the commentary concludes that "there can be no justification for suspending aid to Cyprus as long as the invasion and occupation of Cyprus territory continues."

The independent O AGON comments in its "Our Positions" column under the headline "The Suspension of Aid." The columnist describes the U.S. decision "only as hostile and probably punitive." Noting that U.S. aid is used to face the consequences of the Turkish invasion and rejecting the notion that the Cyprus economy has developed, the paper stresses that "the United States must be reminded of its responsibilities for both the invasion and continuing occupation, which prevent the return of the refugees."

The communist organ KHARAVYI treats the issue as a news report on pages 1 and 7 under the banner headline "The Decision To Suspend U.S. Aid Is a 'Punitive Measure' Against Cyprus for Its Stance on the Golan Heights Issue and the Papandreou Visit." The paper begins its report with the comment that "political and diplomatic circles yesterday described as clearly vengeful and punitive against Cyprus the Reagan administration's decision, which was announced by Secretary of State Haig, to suspend economic aid to Cyprus.

This was so because Cyprus, despite strong U.S. reaction, supported the UN General Assembly resolution calling for severance of diplomatic relations with Israel as well as a reaction to Papandreou's visit to Cyprus, which also seems to have taken place despite the desires and suspicious interventions of Washington." The writer reviews U.S. media reaction to Papandreou's visit, cites the AP version of Haig's statement on aid to Cyprus and stresses that "the appraisal of political observers is strengthened and confirmed by absolutely reliable information that both the ambassador and other diplomats of the U.S. Embassy expressed 'indignation' at the Cyprus Government's stand on the question of the Golan Heights and threatened to adopt measures against Cyprus. Moreover, they did not hesitate to threaten much more serious measures in the event Cyprus proceeded to sever relations with Israel."

O FILELEVTHEROS also deals with the matter in the form of reportage on its front page under the headline "Reagan's Decision Is Punitive for Political and Not Economic Reasons -- It Is Hoped That Congress Will Refuse Suspension of Aid." The paper cites "political circles" which describe the decision to suspend aid as "hard and punitive," noting that the $15 million was used for the relief of displaced persons and maintaining that "political and not economic reasons are behind this U.S. action" most probably in revenge for the Cyprus Government's stand in support of the UN General Assembly resolution condemning the annexation of Golan Heights by Israel.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS MEETING HELD 3 MARCH

NC032000 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 3 Mar 82

[Text] A new meeting within the framework of the intercommunal talks was held this afternoon at the Ledra Palace Hotel. The meeting continued discussion on basic freedoms and liberties. A UN statement mentions that during the meeting there was further discussion and a detailed examination of the points on which there is a convergence of views. The next meeting will be held Wednesday at 1600.

In a statement prior to today's meeting, the special representative of the UN secretary general in Cyprus, Gobbi, said the discussion of the question of basic freedoms and rights was expected to be completed during the meeting. We have had, he said, a first analysis of the question and now we will have the second analysis.

Answering a question on whether he is satisfied with the progress achieved so far, Gobbi said this is a very personal question. I am, he added, very satisfied, but there are others who are not as satisfied as I am. Gobbi also reiterated that questions of vital interest are very difficult and that discussions are being held inch by inch. To expect speedy results, he added, is superoptimism. In conclusion, Gobbi said it is very likely he will be present at the meeting of the UN secretary general with President Kiprianou in April in Rome.

The representative of the Greek Cypriot side, Ioannidhis, said the meeting would continue the discussion of various matters on the daily agenda in an effort to bridge the differences between the two sides. Ioannidhis stated that more difficult problems would be discussed later, such as the authority of the central government, the demilitarization of Cyprus and executive and legislative powers.

Answering a question on whether he is optimistic over the future of the talks, Ioannidhis said he cannot say now whether he is optimistic or pessimistic. He added: Since we discuss and talk, then I must be optimistic. I would not say progress has been achieved in the talks, but there are a number of points on which there is a convergence of views. I will consider that progress has been achieved, he added, only in the eventuality we are able to agree on basic issues on which there is a great divergence of views. In conclusion, Ioannidhis said the view that points on which there is a convergence of views are minor is correct.

The Turkish Cypriot interlocutor, Onan, replying to press questions, said there is no other course than the talks. He added that in his view progress in possible if the leaders permit the interlocutors to continue the talks and if they support them. He added: If the Greek Cypriots believe that through the internationalization of the Cyprus issue and the involvement of international personalities, decisions will be made behind the Turkish Cypriot's backs, and that these decisions will be implemented, then they are greatly mistaken. Onan added that since the Waldheim evaluation there has been much progress. He added that the comparative study has already started. On the question of an international conference on the foreign aspects of the Cyprus issue, Onan said the issue is one problem that affects all Cypriots and there can be no division between the domestic and foreign aspects.

LEFTIST UNIONS SUPPORT INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

TA031722 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 3 Mar 82

[Text] The Turkish Cypriot Federation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DEV-IS] and four Greek Cypriot trade unions have issued a joint statement expressing support for the intercommunal talks. DEV-IS leader Hasan Sarica, who attended the world trade union congress in Havana, has returned to the island. The congress accepted DEV-IS' request to become a member of the WFTU.

Meanwhile, the representatives of DEV-IS and of four Greek Cypriot trade unions who were in Havana have issued a joint statement expressing support for the intercommunal talks, which are based on the UN resolutions on Cyprus and on high-level agreements and that aim at a peaceful, just, viable and mutually acceptable solution. The joint statement says that if the two sides remain loyal to these principles and if they conduct the intercommunal talks in a meaningful and constructive way it is possible to reach a federal solution to the constitutional aspect of the Cyprus problem and a bizonal solution to its territorial aspect.

The statement adds: All organizations strongly support a peaceful solution that will ensure an independent, soveriegn, nonaligned and federal Cyprus with territorial integrity and free of troops.

ROLANDHIS: NO PROGRESS ON MISSING PERSONS ISSUE

NC031929 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 3 Mar 82

[Text] In a statement today the UN press attache mentioned that the third member of the investigation committee on missing persons, Pilloud, expressed the view that progress had been achieved during the recent meetings on the question of resolving procedural matters.

Referring to the statement, Foreign Minister Rolandhis said the proceedings during the recent meetings of the investigation committee on missing persons do not justify the viewpoint that any progress was achieved in the resolution of procedural matters which have remained unresolved since the commictee began its work 8 months ago.

As I already stated on 25 February, Rolandhis continued, the Greek Cypriot side, in a last concession, accepted the 26 November 1981 compromise proposals by Pilloud on all unresolved precedural matters. The Turkish Cypriot side, on the contrary, not only refused to accept these compromise proposals but reneged on the question of the agreed acceptance of the participation of observes in the investigation committee's work. The alleged partial acceptance by the Turkish side, Rolandhis added, can in no way be considered an encouraging development since it fundamentally differs from the agreed proposals of November 1981.

In addition, Rolanhis said, the reneging on the observers issue, which is in fact a step backward, further hinders the commencement of the basic work of the investigation committee.

USSR Attache on Kiprianou Visit

NC031231 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 3 Mar 82

[Text] In a press conference in Nicosia today, Soviet Embassy Press Attache Sharov said President Kiprianou's visit to Moscow is still valid [as heard] and that the timing of the visit is the subject of consultations. Sharov made this statement in answer to a question as to whether Greek Prime Minister Papandreou's visit to Cyprus brings closer President Kiprianou's visit to Moscow. Answering another question as to whether the visit is planned for this year or the following year, he said: We hope this year.

In his statement made on the occasion of the first anniversary of the 26th CPSU Congress, Sharov said his country supports the termination of all foreign military intervention in Cyprus and the withdrawal of all foreign troops, as well as solution of the island's internal problems by the Cypriots themselves, without any foreign interference.

Sharov added that the Soviet Union favors the full implementation of the UN resolutions on Cyprus without delay and supports a fair solution to the problem that will secure for Cyprus real independence, territorial integrity, sovereignty and a nonaligned policy. Sharov also stated that the proposal of his country for an international conference on the Cyprus problem, within the UN framework, is still valid and added that the present development of events in Cyprus and in the region proves -- as never before -- the importance and the timeliness of the Soviet proposal.

PAPER WARNS AGAINST OVEROPTIMISM ON CYPRUS

NC031759 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 3 Mar 82 p 5

[Editorial: "The Visit"]

[Excerpts] The visit by Prime Minister Papandreou to Cyprus was, without a doubt, a national success and to the credit of the prime minister. Over and above the fact this is the first visit by a Greek prime minister to the Megalonisos, the presence of the head of the Greek Government made it clear to the people of Cyprus that there is active support and alignment by mainland Hellenism in the struggle for the national restitution of the heavily tried and long-suffering population of the island within a free, independent and nonaligned state.

At the same time, however, the international repercussions of the Greek prime minister's visit to Cyprus -- by presenting the issue on center stage of international interest and by drawing the attention not only of the widest possible public opinion but also the interest of the strong and more directly interested elements in the international arena to it -- is a positive factor, the importance of which cannot be overlooked by anyone.

What must be said on the prospects being opened up is that the final outcome for the national restitution of Cyprus Hellenism will be auspicious. It would, however, be a mistake -- which would cost very dearly -- if there were any possible impression held that this restitution is imminent.

The prime minister should guard against both some of his own "forms of speech," which could give rise to such an interpretation, as well as -- and primarily -- against the (not unselfish) zeal and the disproportional and unfounded triumph-mongering of certain self-appointed (as well as transitory) eulogizers, because he knows better than anyone else that the invader -- who is supported by an entire complex of forces and interests -- will not give up, either easily or soon, any of his "conquests." He also knows the road that leads to an auspicious final solution and to the national restitution of Cyprus Hellenism is both long and difficult.

Any possible impression to the contrary -- unjustified in itself as a result of developments -- would create, when proved false, an equally unjustified but real disappointment and reversal of today's elation. What everyone must understand is that the road will, perhaps, be lengthy and the struggle will be hard, but that its auspicious outcome will be certain no matter how much time may be needed.

KKE on Visit

NC032150 Athens I AVYI in Greek 3 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] Regarding Prime Minister Papandreou's visit to Cyprus, the KKE-Interior has released the following statement:

The KKE-Interior considers Prime Minister Papandreou's visit to struggling Cyprus an important event.

The common desire expressed in the meetings with the government and political leaders of Megalonisos and the Cypriot people's patriotic manifestations constitute a contribution to the struggle to move -- with the support of all Greece's national forces and those of broader Hellenism -- the Cyprus national issue into a phase of active international initiatives, to terminate the Turkish occupation in the north of the island, to restore the integrity and unity of the Republic of Cyprus, and for a free, nonaligned, demilitarized Cyprus with the refugees returning to their homes.

The KKE-Interior again stresses the importance of the mobilization of communist, socialist, progressive and peace-loving forces in Europe and in our area, and, more broadly, of the contribution of our country's progressive forces to the internationalization and promotion of the Cyprus issue.

Averof Critical of Visit

NC032054 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 3 Mar 82

[Statement by official opposition leader Averof -- read by announcer]

[Text] I do not want to comment on what preceded the visit by the prime minister to Cyprus; neither do I want to refer at this time to other peculiar things the prime minister stated in Cyprus in reference to the shrinking of Hellenism in Istanbul and on the fate of Cyprus. In reference to this, I will observe only that the latest and greatest uprooting of the Greeks in Istanbul started after 1963: in other words, after the undermining of the Zurich and London agreements, the status of which is only a dream for the Cypriots and the validity of which the prime minister invoked in Nicosia in order to state that Cyprus is an independent state and a UN member.

Without a doubt there have been lost opportunities for the solution of the Cyprus issue. This, however, is not the time to speak about them, nor is it the time to speak about the fact that in a new outbreak of self-admiration the prime minister considers himself to be the only Greek politician with any sensitvity toward the sacred issue of Cyprus, thus ignoring even his own late father.

For the present, we emphasize that the prime minister continues to conduct foreign policy on the basis of domestic criteria. The prime minister spoke of the island's three wounds: the military occupation, the continued threat, and the existence of a great number of refugees. Yet nothing from what he said, often in a verbose and beautiful manner, or from what he sketched as future actions will in practice help heal these wounds, and this is what is important.

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has left for Jidda to attend the meetings of the Islamic Conference good-will committee which was set up to put an end to the Iran-Iraq war. In a statement at Esenboga Airport before his departure, Ulusu pointed out that the war, which has been going on for more than 1 year, was melting down the force and resources of both sides. He stressed that Turkey was careful to remain impartial in the fact of the two friendly and neighborly countries and that it was supporting all kinds of peace initiatives.

Recalling that the Islamic Conference committee had taken various steps for the peaceful solution of the problem, the prime minister added: I must point out, however, that we unfortunately have not reached our goal. Still we believe commonsense will prevail and that a peaceful solution can be reached. Establishing a common ground of understanding between the two countries will contribute greatly toward achievement of peace in the region. Since the beginning of the war, Turkey has wanted this strife between the two friendly and neighborly countries to end. It has also been very careful in remaining impartial in this war and has supported every peace initiative in line with its duties as a friend and neighbor.

The committee's members are the presidents or prime ministers of Turkey, Guinea, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Gambia and Senegal. There is a PLO representative on the committee as well. Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen also went to Saudia Arabia with Prime Minister Ulusu. The two will hold bilateral talks during the committee meetings.

ANALYSIS OF SOVIET ARMS DEVELOPMENT CITED

[Text] Bonn, 3 Mar (DPA) -- The USSR is preparing the production of a wide range of new weapons systems which will replace those of the 1970's. This analysis by NATO circles, which became known in Bonn today, is based on the actual rate of increase in Soviet military expenditure of at least 4 percent a year until 1985.

According to the NATO analysis, this means Moscow accepts for the first time since the late 1960's the enormous cost of introducing a broad spectrum of new weapons systems, and this within a relatively short span of time. Without going into details, the NATO study speaks of the creation of production capacities which have not been available in the USSR in the past. Yet even during the time needed by the Soviets to carry out the switch from the weapons systems of the 1970's to the production of new weapons types, overall production has remained at the same high level. There has been no sign of a transitional dip. The fastest growing sector of the Soviet arms efforts during recent years has been research, development and testing.

NETHERLANDS

'NOT PLEASED,' NETHERLANDS HALTS SURINAME AID

[Frans van Klaveren dispatch: "Netherlands 'Suspends' Development Aid to Suriname"]

[Excerpt] The Hague/Paramaribo, 20 Feb -- The Netherlands Government has temporarily suspended development cooperation with Suriname. The cabinet decided yesterday that current aid projects would be run down, and that no new agreements would be made with Suriname.

In Paramaribo, it was impossible to obtain any comment from Army Commander Bouterse about the cabinet decision. Bouterse and Commander in Chief Roy Horb had earlier stated that, if such a decision were taken, international steps would be taken against the Netherlands. They did not enlarge on what these steps would be. Financial experts in Suriname expect the Netherlands decision to lead to the devaluation of the Suriname guilder.

Yesterday Netherlands Prime Minister van Agt said that for development ties with Suriname to be restored there would have to be the prospect of the restoration of democracy in the country. "The Netherlands Government is not pleased by what is happening in Paramaribo at present." Van Agt said that the prospects for democracy were "very somber" since President Chin A Sen was deposed by military leaders a few weeks ago.

PORTUGAL

PCP ACCUSED OF 'AUTHORITARIAN INTERVENTIONISM'

PM031643 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 1 Mar 82 p 4

[Excerpt] The Social Democratic Center Party [CDS] National Council has accused the Communist Party and "sectors of the Council of the Revolution" of attempting to conduct over the last few months an "offensive against the normal functioning of democratic life, seeking to bring about by force the fall of the government, the dissolution of the assembly, the prevention of the revision of the constitution and also an authoritarian interventionism."

The Christian Democratic leaders, meeting under Rui Pena's chairmanship, also analyzed the 12 February general strike, which according to the communique which emerged from the meeting, "was a resounding failure, despite the intemperate recourse to methods of intimidation, sabotage and lockout, and the simultaneous occurrence of markedly subversive actions."

The communique states that since the general strike there has been "an appreciable retreat by and clear disorientation of the PCP and its allies, in contrast to the previous crescendo of their antidemocratic offensive and artificial agitation," and concludes that the Portuguese people "will not acquiesce in the realization of the communists' totalitarian plans."

The CDS National Council "also vigorously denounced the persistent attempts, promoted by sectors of the Council of the Revolution, to create institutional conflicts, in clear alliance with the PCP." According to the communique, this is at variance with the motives which prompted the setting up of the Council of the Revolution and with its constitutional duties.

The revision of the constitution and the local elections were also analyzed on the basis of reports delivered by Luis Beiroco and Anacoreta Correia, respectively. Regarding the former, stock was taken of parliamentary work and there was a "mapping out of general guidelines for the future." With respect to preparation for the elections, the Centrists' guidelines were defined "within the framework of the protocol among the Democratic Alliance parties."

NORDIC COUNCIL APPROVES NEW LABOR ACCORD

LD031626 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1030 GMT 3 Mar 82

[Text] The Nordic Council approved today a new joint Nordic Labor Market Agreement, which is to be brought into effect at the beginning of next year. The agreement has still to be confirmed by the Nordic governments. The present agreement dates back to 1954 and applies to Finland, Sweden, Norway and Denmark. Now Iceland is also included in the agreement. The changes in the Labor Market Agreement have been made chiefly on Finland's initiative. The agreement obliges employers to treat equally all citizens of the Nordic countries when agreements are concluded on wages and other conditions of work. It also stresses the responsibility of the member countries to support each other's striving for full employment.

In the afternoon the Nordic Council is to decide on continuing the development of a Nordic television and radio satellite. Denmark has withdrawn from the project, but it is to be continued by the other four Nordic countries.

GENSCHER: NO SECURITY IN EUROPE WITHOUT U.S.

PM041049 Paris LE FIGARO in French 2 Mar 82 pp 1, 4

[Article by FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher: "No Security in Europe Without the United States"]

[Text] It is Poland which is occupying the front of the stage. Detente and cooperation in Europe have suffered a serious setback owing to the policy followed by the Polish and Soviet Governments. The process started in Helsinki, aimed at a rapprochement between the two separated sides of Europe, is now threatened.

The situation in Poland shows how much peoples in the two sides of divided Europe feel European. The reform inherent in the renewal movement in Poland embodies the desire for national and European identity.

The Soviet Union bears a grave responsibility for the constant oppression the Polish people are suffering. Its inability to respond to the desire for renewal among the East European peoples is increasing instability in that part of Europe and laying a heavy burden on the development of East-West relations. The Helsinki Final Act points to the solution: The demands made in it do not jeopardize anybody's security. Quite the reverse. The implementation of the Final Act by all signatory states could give the whole of Europe greater stability and greater security and solve Poland's problems in a way which would satisfy the Polish people's legitimate desires. At present the central objective of the West's policy should be precisely to energetically defend the Helsinki Final Act. This document constitutes a strong foundation making it possible to build a system of European peace in which all peoples will be able to flourish protected from threat and violence.

The second fact which characterizes the present situation in Europe lies in the threat hanging over the military balance. By deploying its SS-20 medium-range missiles which threaten Western Europe -- as well as vast areas of the Third World -- and which the alliance cannot counter with anything similar, and by continuing to develop its superiority in the sphere of conventional armed forces, the Soviet Union has unilaterally changed the balance of forces in Europe to its advantage. Restoring the balance, which is vital to peace and stability in Europe, is a priority task for peace for us Europeans.

We can only carry out that task if we are allied to the United States. It would show dangerous blindness in the security sphere to believe that it is possible to ensure security in Europe without the United States. It is precisely its membership in the Atlantic alliance which confers on Europe the political and military influence it needs to play an autonomous role in world policy and especially to carry on a dialogue, based on equal rights and giving hope, with the world power that the Soviet Union is.

France and Germany support the policy jointly decided within the alliance aimed at restoring an arms balance and at the lowest possible level. The West is prepared to abandon the deployment in Europe of American medium-range missiles if the Soviet Union, on its side, removes all its ground-based medium-range missiles. The negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union, of course, can only relate to the two world powers' potential in the medium-range missiles sphere.

If the Geneva negotiations do not produce any results by the end of the first 6 months of 1983, the new American medium-range missiles will undoubtedly be deployed in the FRG and in other European states. There is no question of Europe's tolerating Soviet superiority in these weapons.

No, to Protectionism and Dirigisme

Europe, which has been accustomed to constant economic and social progress for more than 20 years, has now been in the throes of a difficult and deep structural crisis since the mid-1970's. More than 10 million unemployed, stagnation in economic growth, and major EC trade deficits in the face of the other two great industrial powers, Japan and the United States, are the signs of a growing fall in the competitiveness of European industry. Europe is in danger of becoming a second-rate industrial region.

If we are to take up this challenge successfully we need a community strategy which enables us to combat unemployment and inflation. Our task is to restore and improve the European national economies and ensure that they are competitive on world markets.

We will only succeed in so doing by preserving and developing the free world economic system established after World War II. The memory of the 1930's, when the industrial states dragged each other into a permanent recession and unemployment by a go-it-alone and every-man-for-himself policy, clearly shows where protectionism and dirigisme lead.

Today the EC is in danger of remaining half-way along the path of unification. We must solve the problems relating to budgetary and agricultural structures. At the same time it is important not to limit ourselves to seeking pragmatic solutions for the present problems. We should continue to bear in mind the great political objective of European unification. In our national policies, as in European policy, the strength necessary for consensus and a permanent balance among divergent interests can only stem from a feeling of solidarity with one another and the feeling that we have one common destiny. It is that conviction which is behind the German-Italian initiative for a European act. This act should encompass the community's existing structures, include new spheres in common policy, and direct the community again and more strongly toward the objective of the European union as already featured in the Rome treaties.

French-German Cooperation

The pursuit of the building of a European peace system, started within the CSCE, the guarantee of military balance, the restoration of adequate growth and a high level of employment are the three great tasks facing Europe today.

French-German cooperation plays a central role in their realization. Today that cooperation, in the spirit of the 1963 Friendship Treaty, is more important than ever and the French-German summit last week clearly showed that our two countries are aware of that responsibility and are acting accordingly. We want to serve as a driving force:

-- for strengthening and developing Europe;

-- for consolidating the ties of solidarity between America and Europe in the Atlantic alliance, which is vitally important for all its members;

-- for safeguarding the CSCE process and dialogue with the East on a balanced basis;

-- and for energetically strengthening North-South cooperation with the developing countries, being aware of the dependence which binds us to each other and in a spirit of solidarity among partners with equal rights.

NO C-WEAPONS ON GERMAN SOIL WITHOUT PERMISSION

[Text] Bonn, 4 Mar (DPA) -- In the opinion of the Federal Republic, additional supplies of U.S. chemical weapons such as nerve gas cannot be stored on FRG territory without German consent.

This was stated by Peter Corterier, state secretary at the Foreign Office, during question time in the Bundestag today in reply to questions about the possible consequences of President Ronald Reagan's decision on the production of new chemical weapons. Corterier referred to statements by Reagan and other U.S. administration officials that the United States has no plans to stockpile them outside the United States. This had been reaffirmed by a U.S. administration official this week.

Asked about the legal situation in the event that Washington decided to store chemical weapons in the Federal Republic after all, Corterier replied that there is unanimity in the NATO alliance that the deployment of nonconventional weapons systems, including chemical ones, would be determined in accordance with the alliance's defense plans and in agreement with the states directly effected. "The storing of chemical weapons on German soil thus requires German agreement."

Corterier said the storing of the U.S. chemical weapons that are already in the Federal Republic rests on a different legal basis. These stocks of weapons have been in the Federal Republic for many years and predate its establishment as a sovereign state. In connection with Reagan's latest decision, Corterier's attention was also drawn in numerous questions by deputies to the fact that American politicians have stated that the storing of weapons such as nerve gas only makes sense in a possible theatre of war such as Europe. Corterier replied that he could only refer to the statements by Reagan and other Washington administration officials that the question of the deployment of such weapons outside the United States "does not arise, at least in the foreseeable future."

LANGMANN DENIES CONTACT WITH KONKRET MAGAZINE

[Excerpts] Munich -- Hans Langemann, the senior Bavarian official responsible for the protection of the constituion, who has been suspended from duty, has threatened civil and criminal proceedings against "anyone who is involved in this affair to the detriment of myself and of the state." Langemann, who heads the State Protection Department at the Bavarian Interior Ministry, and who from 1957-70 worked for the Federal Intelligence Service (BND), also said in a DPA interview in Munich today that he had never had anything to do with KONKRET magazine. KONKRET Chief Editor Manfred Bissinger told DPA with regard to this that Langemann is lying and had been very well aware of the planned publication; only the date had been unclear.

"Never in my life have I had anything to do with KONKRET. I swear it on my life, my family and my children," Langemann said. KONKRET journalist Saupe had introduced himself to me in Munich not in his true colors, but as a former reporter of the illustrated magazine QUICK. He presumed that the manuscript of his book -- which he had agreed on in 1975 with his "old and commendable chief, Gehlen" -- must have reached KONKRET via the Munich journalist, Frank P. Heigl.

SOVIET TERESHKOVA TO BE GRANTED VISA AFTER ALL

LD050938 Hamburg DPA in German 0836 GMT 5 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Moscow, 5 Mar (DPA) -- The Soviet Central Committee members, Valentina Tereshkova and Boris Pastukhov, will be allowed to enter the FRG after all, contrary to an initial Bonn decision. This was confirmed by the Bonn Embassy in Moscow on Friday.

A spokesman referred to the press statement from the Foreign Ministry from which he quoted: "...confirm that the cases of Tereshkova and Pastukhov .... have been reconsidered." Otherwise, however, there was no comment on decisions regarding visa applications "whether they were positive or negative." With reference to Bonn, the spokesman refused to comment in detail on the decision to reconsider the original decision.

Moscow had indirectly sharply criticized the denials of the visas. With reference to the DKP and DKP Youth Organization declarations it was said on Friday in leading Soviet newspapers that the FRG was violating the relevant German-Soviet treaties.

MORE USSR EXIT VISAS FOR ETHNIC GERMANS URGED

LD041506 Hamburg DPA in German 1430 GMT 4 Feb 82

[Text] Bonn, 4 Mar (DPA) -- The Federal Government is unhappy that the number of ethnic German resettlers from the Soviet Union has fallen over the past few months despite the fact that during his visit to Bonn in November, Leonid Brezhnev promised that applications for exit visas would be treated in a spirit of good will. Peter Corterier, minister of state at the Foreign Office, stated at question time in the Bundestag today in response to a CDU/CSU enquiry that the Federal Government would press the Soviet Union to return to a more generous practice in dealing with exit applications.

Corterier said resettlers from the Soviet Union had numbered only 80 in November, 409 in December and 354 in the first 2 months of this year. "We cannot be satisfied with these figures," he said. In response to questions, he admitted that in the talks with Brezhnev in Bonn, it had not been possible to reach a specific agreement on exit visas for Soviet citizens of German ethnic origin.

GDR ACHIEVES SURPLUS IN INTER-GERMAN TRADE

DW041109 Bonn DIE WELT in German 4 Mar 82 p 12

[Peter Weertz article: "The 'GDR' Managed To Increase Its Deliveries"]

[Text] Berlin -- In the opinion of the Federal Economics Ministry, inter-German trade needs new impulses and better framework conditions. To be sure, the development of trade last year is assessed as "not unfavorable," yet swifter dispositions of East Berlin with regard to its purchases and long-term framework conditions are required. In addition, the "GDR" must not make its demand for compensation deals too steep. Having shown growth rates of 19 and 12 percent in the preceding years, inter-German trade in 1981 increased by 6 percent to a volume of DM12.47 billion. West German deliveries rose by 4 percent (in the preceding year 15 percent) to a volume of DM6.12 billion while imports increased by 8 percent (22 percent) to a volume of DM6.34 billion, including services.

For the first time since 1965, the "GDR" shows trade surplus, including services, in the amount of DM221 million. What primarily accounted for the increase in its deliveries were petroleum products (fuels and heating oil), chemical products (by 13 percent), furniture (by 16 percent) and brown-coal byproducts (by 35 percent). The 10 percent increase in the case of petroleum products -- the "GDR" receives the crude oil from the Federal Republic -- is attributed almost exclusively to price increase. Just about two-thirds of the East German deliveries consists of petroleum products for West Berlin, chemical products, textiles, agricultural produce, wooden products and brown-coal products.

The ministry welcomes the fact that East Berlin has used the surplus in the goods exchange to reduce its debts to FRG companies from DM3.9 billion to DM3.7 billion. Only DM460 million of the DM850 million interest-free overdraft credit (swing) has been used at the moment. Excluding services, East Berlin's surplus in inter-German trade deliveries amounts to DM772 million (DM472 million). Thus it is evident that last year the "GDR" stepped up its deliveries to the Federal Republic and simultaneously recuded its imports. Also involved, however, is the expiration of installations deals. For the time being no new large-scale orders for installations construction are in sight. The balance sheet of the "GDR" in its trade with the rest of the Western industrial countries (OECD), however, shows a deficit. All told, the "GDR" indebtedness against the West has risen to more than 10 billion.

As for the West German deliveries, the rates of increase amounted to 17 percent for crude oil, 29 percent for hard coal, 14 percent for textiles/clothing and 14 percent for nonferrous metals.

CARLOS DEMANDS RELEASE OF 2 ARRESTED TERRORISTS

LD051028 Paris Domestic Service in French 0800 GMT 5 Mar 82

[Text] Carlos, the famous and, above all, the most dangerous terrorist of all, has popped up again. Now he is threatening the French Government in order to secure the release of two other terrorists. He has sent a letter to the French Embassy in The Hague addressing Gaston Defferre himself, in which he asks for the release of his two friends. The letter is authentic; Carlos has put his thumbprint on it. The terrorists, friends of Carlos, were arrested on 16 February in Paris; their car was packed with explosives. They are a 31-year old Swiss man, Bruno Breguet, and a 34-year old West German woman, Magdalena Kopp. The two were arrested in a parking lot in Avenue Georges V in Paris.

DEBRAY TALKS IN INDIA, THAILAND REPORTED

PM041135 Paris LE MONDE in French 3 Mar 82 p 4

[Excerpt] Mr Regis Debray is ending his visit to several Asian countries with India, where he met with Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and External Affairs Minister Narasimha Rao on Monday 1 March. The same day the French Embassy in Bangkok, where the envoy had been until Saturday, issued a communique stating that Mr Debray had told his Thai interlocutors that France "is calling for a peaceful settlement to the Kampuchean problem and for the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea."

Mr Debray, who had refused to meet with the press, had talks with Deputy Prime Minister Thanat Khoman, Foreign Minister Air Marshal Sitthi Sawetsila, commander-in-chief of the armed forces Gen Sayud Kerdphol and National Security Secretary General Col Prasong Soonsiri.

In addition, EEC Commission Chairman Gaston Thorn stated in Singapore Monday that "the community does not intend to supply aid to Vietnam" until a solution is found in Kampuchea. The Ten, he added, are still calling for the withdrawal of the Vietnamese troops.

PM041103 Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Mar 82 p 6

They will be given an answer "in the next few days." In the evening the Paraschiv Committee staged a demonstration "to demand the truth" about the fate of this worker who has not been seen since his return to Romania 5 years ago.

USSR EMBASSY DENIES SUB AT TARANTO WAS SOVIET

AU050844 Rome ANSA in English 0815 GMT 5 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 5 Mar (ANSA) -- The nuclear-powered submarine chased out of Italian territorial waters off Italy's major naval base at Taranto was certainly not Soviet, according to a communique released by the Soviet Embassy here. The unidentified submarine was detected by Italian warships in the gulf off the southern port town and chased into international waters when it failed to answer radio calls.

The Soviet denial was issued yesterday after the same message had been communicated to the Italian Foreign Ministry's secretary-general by Soviet Ambassador in Rome Nikolay Lunkov. On Monday, the Italian Foreign Ministry deplored the violation of Italian waters without naming a foreign country, but Lunkov was summoned to the ministry the same day.

Citing the "competent Soviet authorities," the Soviet denial said no Soviet submarine had violated Italian waters or was even "within less than 200 kilometers" of the Gulf of Taranto at the time of the sighting. Pointing to the "anti-Soviet din" whipped up in Italy after the sighting, the Soviet statement reported that the Italian Foreign Ministry's declaration to Lunkov on March 1 had been received "with extreme amazement" in Moscow. Explaining the incident, the embassy pointed out that, off the Italian coast, NATO submarines "cruise uninterruptedly," also noting that the NATO submarine fleet in the Mediterranean is "far larger" than the Soviet Union's.

BERLINGUER ADDRESSES 24 FEB PCI NAPLES RALLY

PM041255 Venice L'UNITA in Italian 1 Mar 82 pp 1, 4

[Ugo Baduel report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer's 28 February speech in Naples]

[Excerpt] Berlinguer began by saying how much he regretted having been unable to attend the PCI conference on southern Italian development because he had been kept in Rome by several commitments, particularly by his meeting with Francois Mitterrand. The conversation, he said, was meaty and cordial and broached major international and European issues. It would be improper for me to recount what Mitterrand said to me, Berlinguer explained, but the conversation does provide me with a cue for saying something about the repercussions that the stances adopted by the PCI following the events in Poland have caused in Europe and throughout the world.

Berlinguer referred to the Soviets' polemic with the Italian Communists and the recent one in the press of certain communist parties (in some of which the PCI is not directly named, however). These polemics are rather belated, which seems to confirm the reports of pressures being exerted by the Soviet comrades on several parties so as to give the Soviet public the impression of some kind of "alignment of support" for the CPSU's polemics. The Italian Communists' replies are well known too -- albeit to everyone except Soviet newspaper readers and CPSU members. We still await, the PCI secretary general said, the sign of correctness and democracy (that is, the publication of the steadfast and calm arguments used by the PCI) without which we must assume that it is feared that at least some of our arguments would strike a chord in Soviet public opinion, thus showing that the attacks against us are unfounded.

However, Berlinguer continued, this is not the only kind of reception afforded to our stances. Indeed, the strength of the arguments with which we have advocated the need to open up a new phase in the struggle for socialism in the West has inspired great hopes in all those -- in communist and socialist parties and among revolutionary and progressive forces throughout the world, in the socialist countries included -- who realized, and still realize, the need for something new, in the belief that only along new paths is it possible to advance the workers movement's struggle for the transformation of society in an anticapitalist direction.

The negative reactions to this effort of ours, even if accompanied by high-sounding and rhetorical appeals to the working class, in fact reflect a basically conservative mentality, clothed in an old terminology which bears no relation either to the facts or to the standards of critical intelligence now reached by the workers and people's masses. This does not surprise us, Berlinguer added, partly because we have known for some time that even within communist parties there can emerge a conservative mentality which, even when it does not lead to extreme negative effects such as those that occurred within the Polish United Workers Party with the rupture of its ties with the broad workers and people's masses, nevertheless obstructs any kind of innovative development of thought and action on the part of the working class parties. One must always guard against this risk of conservatism and bureaucratization -- especially when one is in power.

In this connection, Berlinguer cited an excerpt from a commentary Togliatti wrote for RINASCITA in 1945. I was reminded of this commentary, he said, when I read some of the polemical articles about us that have been published both abroad and in Italy. Togliatti wrote: "Antonio Gramsci used to say that there is no greater obstacle to the proper understanding of historical events and of their inherent and necessary justification than the conception and presentation of history itself as a conflict and struggle between abstract entities and futile personifications such as 'unity' and 'federation' or 'reaction' and 'revolution,' and so forth. Writers, including not the most recent, who have tried to adopt this method have written so-called histories which in no way aid an understanding of reality and which in fact make it more difficult and, if anything, spread and strengthen myths and provide material for exercises in rhetoric."

We have avoided this very error, Berlinguer said, through our constant reminders to analyze the facts as they are. At the same time we have also avoided the opposite error of discarding our past, cutting our roots and throwing the baby out with the bath water. We are neither dismissive nor conservative. We are trying, humbly but boldly and steadfastly, to be innovators, and it is this that lends strength to our battles both in Italy and in Europe and throughout the world. And the necessary free discussions -- which have been taking place in our organizations for several weeks to help us increasingly understand the real substance of our recent stances with contributions from the largest possible number of comrades -- must never lose sight of the vast extra strength that these stances can impart to our struggle for peace and socialism and to our action to win over to it new energies, new support and new fighters. This is why the party must continuously improve its analysis and definition of its theoretical and political elaborations concerning all the aspects of what we call a "third way" to socialism, but it must do so at the same time as it is carrying out specific activity and action in forms appropriate to the gravity of the crisis facing us and equal to the objectives we set ourselves. This is the very approach and commitment that inspired this conference on a crucial topic -- southern Italy today -- whose solution is of decisive importance to the advance of our entire party and to the real transformation of our entire society.

Next Berlinguer said he gained from a careful reading of Achille Occhetto's report and from reports of other speeches a clear impression of a major step forward in an updated analysis of the real situation in southern Italy and in the more specific and precise indication of our objectives and tasks. Instead of returning to these complex topics, Berlinguer said he preferred to center his speech on the problem of the party, its present status, its role, its working and organizational methods.

Why this decision? It would be hypocritical, Berlinguer said, to deny that it is prompted primarily by anxiety about a certain weakening of the party which, albeit with different characteristics and manifestations, has been taking place in the south for some years. This weakening is reflected in elections results since 1976 (when, it should be remembered, the PCI achieved its best results since the war) and in the figures for membership and communist press circulation, which have fallen considerably in recent years.

Following the 1979 election losses, whereas in other Italian regions (with the sole exception of Milan) there has been an overall recovery of votes and even improvements on the 1976 results, as in Rome in 1981, the negative trend has continued in the south. There are some very important exceptions, such as Naples, Taranto, Ragusa Province and several small and medium municipalities, but on the other hand there are some very major areas and urban centers where the low percentages achieved have meant a very low level of influence among the electorate and of political representation -- enough even to alter the nature of this representation, creating scope for a minority mentality with consequent temptations to adopt entrenched stances of protest and inferiority.

It is natural, Berlinguer continued, for us to be concerned with halting and reversing this trend, for the entire party to concern itself with it, striving to extend its analysis of the causes of the weakening and to examine ways and means of reversing it. And we are profoundly convinced that this is not purely for partisan reasons. The weakening of the PCI is in fact one of the most worrying signs of the deterioration of the entire situation in the south in all its aspects. And it is helping to exacerbate and to complicate it, thus increasing the dangers for the future of democracy in Italy.

The facts show that if the PCI's electoral and organizational strength and its capacity for struggle and involvement are weakened, the antisouth policy of the nation's governments and the power bloc formed particularly in recent years in the southern regions are inadequately countered and combated.

VENEZUELAN MINISTER VIEWS CENTRAL AMERICA CRISIS

PA042250 Paris AFP in Spanish 1637 GMT 4 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 4 Mar (AFP) -- Venezuela considers Nicaragua's "qualitative and quantitative" rearmament a matter of "utmost concern," Venezuelan Foreign Minister Jose Zambrano Velasco said here today.

Zambrano, on an official visit here, told his Italian counterpart Emilio Colombo that his country had at first offered support to the new Nicaraguan regime, which is "presently developing into a Marxist-Leninist and revolutionary" one. Zambrano explained that for the time being Venezuela is not considering suspending its aid, as there are still labor and religious sectors in Nicaragua who must not be abandoned to their fate. The Nicaraguan rearmament "affects the area's strategic balance," Zambrano noted, and explained that Nicaragua has an army of 50,000 men in addition to 100,000 militia, against only 22,000 in the Salvadoran regular army.

The Salvadoran guerrillas have 1,500 men taking part directly in combat, Zambrano added, and some 3,500 others in support activities. In two of 14 departments of El Salvador, in the eastern part of the country, there is intense military action, according to Zambrano, while in a third guerrillas are present, but there seems to be no fighting.

Central America is going through a "delicate" political stage as two countries, Honduras and Costa Rica, just held elections while four others, Guatemala, El Salvador, the Dominican Republic and Colombia, plan to hold them soon. "It will be interesting to see what happens," he said. Meanwhile, his Italian counterpart briefed the visiting Venezuelan official on the Italian Government's policy on El Salvador.

DEFENSE MINISTER OUTLINES INVESTMENT PLAN

PM041437 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 26 Feb 82 p 17

[Javier Angulo report: "New Military Investment Program Will Place Spain on West European Level"]

[Text] The material modernization of the Spanish armed forces over the next 8 years, until they are placed on a par with the West European countries, is the aim of the Law on Budgetary Allocations for Investments and Maintenance of the Armed Forces, on whose bill Defense Minister Alberto Oliart reported at length to the corresponding Congress [of Deputies] committee yesterday. On the basis of this law, the budgetary allocations envisaged for equipment and maintenance of the armed forces until 1990 will total over 2 billion current pesetas -- that is, allowing for inflation.

Before undertaking an article-by-article analysis of the bill, which, by a majority decision of the Board of Spokesmen, is to pass to the Budgets Committee, Oliart referred to the trend in defense expenditure in terms of GDP, which has risen from 1.64 percent in 1971 to 2.04 percent in 1982. In this respect Oliart stated that, in accordance with Spain's current economic situation and real prospects, a considerable effort has been made to place the defense budget on the current rate, which is now closer to the 3 percent recommended for the NATO countries.

In its first article, the law envisages authorizing the government to implement a new joint program of investments, replacement of material, equipment and arms and maintenance of the armed forces during the period 1983-1990 inclusive, its conduct and implementation being entrusted to the Ministry of Defense. In this respect Defense Minister Oliart emphasized the importance of the law's eighth article, whereby his ministry will be able to propose to the government measures which will make it possible to encourage to the utmost national production in the implementation of the investment program.

"This article," Oliart told the Defense Committee," is in keeping with this minister's desire to give priority to national industry as regards defense and with the idea of using this law to create the maximum effect of investment and expansion possible in it." To this effect he added that industrial development measures in the arms field, aimed not only at enterprises directly manufacturing weapons but also at those producing equipment for inclusion in defense systems, will be intensified. He then cited as priorities in this field the optics, telecommunications and electronics industries.

Oliart also emphasized the significance of the law's 10th article, which authorizes the government, in the light of circumstances of every kind which may affect the implementation of the program covered by the law, to propose, when circumstances render it advisable, the updating of the corresponding budgetary allocations, and, where appropriate, the reviewing and altering of that program. At any event, the government pledges with this article to submit to the General Cortes before 1 January 1986 a bill reviewing and, where appropriate, altering the budgetary allocations for the next 4 years and extending the law's validity through the end of 1994, to give continuity to the joint program of investments, replacements and maintenance of the armed forces.

The allocation envisaged by the law for 1983 is 230,689,000 pesetas, which will rise to 309,845,000 pesetas in 1990, always on the basis of keeping the defense effort at 2.04 percent of GDP.

In Oliart's opinion, the law's coming into force would make possible considerable improvements in the equipment of the army, navy and air force. With respect to the air force, he stated that the capacity for training and operations carried out would be that of 50 percent of Western countries. Under the program, he specified, payment for the mirage F-1 aircraft will be completed, and there would be investment in electronic equipment and in the purchase of new fighter-bombers to replace the Phantoms and F-5's, 87-90 of which should be decommissioned, starting in 1986. The number of aircraft of this type will not increase.

As far as the navy is concerned, the minister specified that the naval program under way will be completed, and to that effect he stated that an aircraft carrier will be approved in May and that, starting from 1985, three antisubmarine frigates will be constructed. He also said that a series of Angosta submarines will be completed to replace the four submarines handed over by the United States, one of which has already been decommissioned. In Oliart's opinion, the investment program should also tackle the implementation of part of the new naval program, which includes the construction of two destroyers and seven oceangoing escort frigates -- surface vessels for attack and defense, which, as the minister explained, should be able to ensure defense on the essential seaways of the south Atlantic and the Mediterranean.

On the topic of investments earmarked for the army in the program, Oliart highlighted those allocated for paying for the commitments undertaken to purchase modern M-47 tanks, Pegaso BMB vehicles, combat helicopters and military electronic equipment. The program also envisages an increase in antiaircraft defensive power, with the purchase of low-altitude missiles and the renovation of the immediate intervention units' equipment.

In the question-and-answer session all the representatives except the Centrists criticized the fact that the Ministry of Defense is submitting a budgetary law on material allocations to the armed forces when the Spanish Government's defense policy has not yet been debated, as is envisaged by law. In this respect, Oliart pledged that this debate can take place in the Defense Committee once its members receive the memorandum accompanying the bill.

In addition, Guillermo Medina, the current chairman of the committee, stated yesterday that when the new committee is set up, in accordance with the amended standing orders, he intends to promote a debate on the broad outlines of Spanish defense policy, if he is reelected to that post.

COUNCIL TO DISCUSS NORDIC TELEVISION SATELLITE

LD041110 Stockholm International Service in Swedish 1000 GMT 2 Mar 82

[Text] New attempts are to be made at the current session of the Nordic Council in Helsinki to achieve a Nordic television satellite. Since Denmark decided a few weeks ago to withdraw from cooperation in this field, the Nordic Council's Cultural Committee proposed that Finland, Sweden, Norway and Iceland should continue to investigate the possibilities of launching a satellite.

The committee holds the view that cooperation should comprise both the originally proposed NORDSAT satellite and the so-called TELE-X satellite proposed by Sweden. Even the Swedish Social Democrats, who earlier opposed a Nordic television satellite, have now decided to participate in the planning work.

NEW FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON WORLD ISSUES

PM041111 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 27 Feb 82 p 13

[Unattributed interview with Finnish Foreign Minister Par Stenback: "Koivisto Wanted Someone He Knew" -- date and place not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] [Prime Minister] Sorsa has already proposed an extension of the friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Aid Treaty between Finland and the Soviet Union. Did the prime minister make his move before his foreign minister was able to do so?

[Answer] It was not a "move," but an opinion; and the president had already raised the question, which is entirely uncontroversial. An extension of the treaty is a matter of bilateral negotiations between Finland and the Soviet Union. Finland is always prepared to discuss what point in time would be suitable for an extension. The treaty does remain in force until 1990.

[Question] Is there anything Finland could to do improve the situation at the CSCE negotiations in Madrid?

[Answer] It would be no catastrophe if there were now a break until October. The main thing is that the process is continuing and that the results which have already been achieved should be secured.

[Question] Is there a risk that new developments in Poland could also affect us?

[Answer] We have every reason to follow what is happening in Poland and on the Continent -- anything at all which could effect our security policy situation. However, there is no reason to believe that developments in Poland will be such that they will affect our stability to continue along the lines we have followed in the past.

[Question] What is your approach to the U.S.actions in El Salvador and President Reagan's recent declaration that he intends to use every means to prevent any change in the political situation in the Caribbean area?

[Answer] Sooner or later we in the government must discuss our attitude toward these practical and moral problems. Our rule is of course to refrain from adopting any too-strongly marked positions in conflicts where a superpower is involved. El Salvador is an example of such a conflict. We also followed the same line on the Afghanistan question. The important thing is that a consistency is maintained in the positions we adopt.

ARMED FORCES' 2-WEEK 'SEA WOLF' EXERCISE UNDERWAY

[Text] The "Sea Wolf" exercise organized by the fleet command has begun. The exercise, which began in Golcuk, will be carried out in Marmara, the Aegean, the Eastern Mediterranean, international waters and airspace and Turkish territorial waters. Fleet commander Adm Cahit Atakan held a news conference in Golcuk at the beginning of the exercise and said it will be carried out by units from the ground, naval and air forces as well as the Gendarmerie.

He added that the exercise will be carried out taking into consideration the principles of cooperation among the various forces. Atakan noted that the friendly and enemy forces -- designated as Blue and Red -- will be using some live ammunition. Pointing out that special naval exercises will also be carried out, Atakan said the exercise will continue day and night under combat conditions. He added that in addition to the maneuver units of the other branches, the swimming, diving, air, logistic and ground units of the navy will also participate in the exercise.

Tevfik Fikret Dincer and Necmettin Urkmen from the Turkish Radio and Television news center report that the first phase of the exercise will end in Ismir on 7 March. During the exercise, which will continue under the fleet command's coordination until 21 March, the ships will call at Ismir, Marmaris, Fethiye, Antalya, Mersin and Iskenderun ports. The ships may be visited by citizens at these ports.

INSTABILITY IN PAPANDREOU'S GREECE WORRIES TURKS

NC050904 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 2 Mar 28 p 1

[Editorial by Mehmet Barlas: "Unfortunate Greece"]

[Text] What is Greece's Prime Minister Papandreou after? As a state and as a nation, we must clearly ascertain the answer. His latest speeches and press conferences during his Cyprus visit and his previous statements provide the outlines of the tableau he wishes to present. According to Papandreou, Greece is being threatened by Turkey. Under the allegation of this threat, he spread "Hellenism", that is, Greek nationalism, out from Cyprus to the Aegean like a cloth. After drawing this picture, Papandreou said he will launch a struggle to rid Cyprus of occupation and regain Greece's rights in the Aegean.

Having thus outlined Papandreou's reasoning, it is easy to be vexed with him and even pity him. For this tableau is full of words that show Papandreou's fear. The Greek prime minister says "Turkey is expanding, and after Cyprus it wants half of the Aegean and Western Thrace." This is how calamities befall nations. The Greek people neither desire such a calamity nor do they deserve it.

The Greeks like to give expression to the strings of the buzuki and drink their ouzo in the warmth of the Mediterranean sun. They have experienced many distressing years, civil wars and bloody years of occupation in their recent history. The democracy they are trying to establish has been disrupted several times. However, at this moment the Greeks appear to have turned the corner. Papandreou has come to power after free elections. Apart from the current inflation, their economy has developed. They have advanced immensely in the fields of tourism, trade and transport. Athens is gradually rising to the level of an EEC capital.

In light of these developments, what is Papandreou trying to achieve by provoking Turkey? Is he emulating the example of Pakistan and India or Iran and Iraq, which periodically turn to hot wars? Papandreou came to power by promising his people social justice and a change of regime. But now, like a miniature Mussolini, he keeps talking of expansion, nationalism and even of struggle. He introduces himself as a socialist, but he is marching on a national-socialist line. He is not in favor of resolving issues through dialogue. Papandreou is a psychopolitical case. But isn't it deplorable for the Greek nation that this should be so? Isn't it a stroke of fate that this nation should rid itself of Colonel Papadopoulous and fall into the hands of reserve officer Papandreou? It should be known that the 45 million Turks are watching the Greek political atmosphere with sorrow and warning but also with caution. An unstable Greece does not give us happiness.

AL-QADHDHAFI TO ARRIVE IN VIENNA WEDNESDAY

NC081812 Paris AFP in English 1719 GMT 8 Mar 82

[Text] Vienna, 8 Mar (AFP) -- The Austrian Federal Chancellery announced today that Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi will arrive here on Wednesday for a four-day visit, but did not state whether the visit will be official.

The visit is at the invitation of Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, the announcement said. It added that the joint Austro-Libyan Commission will meet during the visit.

The visit had been announced earlier by the Libyan Embassy here, which said it would be an official one.

The visit will be Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's first to the West since a private visit to Paris in 1973. A Libyan diplomatic source said that Colonel al-Qadhdhafi will give a press conference during his stay.

Kreisky Comments on Visit

AU090957 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 9 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] Vienna (AZ) -- Al-Qadhdhafi's Libya "is one of our most important and largest trade partners," said Chancellor Kreisky in commenting on the forthcoming visit to Vienna of the Libyan leader in a talk with ARBEITER-ZEITUNG. Kreisky pointed out that one of the largest American oil firms worked in Libya until recently and sold the Libyan oil throughout the world. Asked about Al-Qadhdhafi's reputation as a "dangerous terrorist," Kreisky said: "These are assertions. One must be able to prove them, but that is not done by the newspapers which are writing in this manner." The United States cannot prove Al-Qadhdhafi's terrorist activities, either. "That is a propaganda campaign," Kreisky said. Tomorrow or the day after tomorrow the United States will again have good relations with Libya. But "We cannot go along with these peculiar changes. We must be stable partners in our international relations." Austria is a neutral state, Kreisky said, and Libya belongs to the United Nations. Asked whether Washington would not regard the Libyan revolution leader's visit to Vienna as a provocation, the chancellor declared that certainly the United States would react negatively.

PAHR REJECTS SANCTIONS AGAINST USSR, POLAND

AU081810 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 6-7 Mar 82 p 2

[Excerpt] Hamburg/Vienna (REUTER, APA) -- Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr has emphatically advocated a continuation of Western cooperation with the East. At the same time, he rejected economic sanctions against the Soviet Union or Poland, in a talk with journalists on Friday. In a lecture at the Hamburg Overseas Club, the minister declared that at the Madrid CSCE follow-up meeting, which has become deadlocked because of the Polish crisis, it is "a cardinal mistake on the part of the West to reject a dialogue."

According to Pahr, this attitude makes an improvement of Poland's internal situation more difficult. Alluding to the forthcoming change of generations in the Kremlin leadership, Pahr said that the West's decision either for confrontation or cooperation would "not be without influence on the developments in the Soviet Union."

The foreign minister emphatically warned against expecting any change of the situation in Poland as a result of economic sanctions.

Pahr added, literally: "We regard it as necessary to make every effort to bring about a lifting of the repressive measures in Poland." "So-called sanctions," however, are not the right way to attain this objective.

Rather, Pahr continued, it is necessary -- through continuing the dialogue with the governments of the Soviet Union and Poland -- to bring about an improvement in conditions to a point where the noncommunist forces in the country could develop more freely again. Pahr expressly stated that these forces include not only the Catholic Church but also the workers.

Regarding the most recent endeavors of the Polish military government to induce members of the opposition to emigrate to Western countries, the Austrian foreign minister declared that Austria would grant asylum to anyone who left his country voluntarily. "But we would not render any assistance for people who are forced to leave their country, against their will," Pahr declared.

During his stay in the FRG, Kreisky also had talks with Director General Kuenheim of the BMW Automotive Company about the pending project of a diesel engine factory in Steyr, and with the director general of the German Siemens Corporation about its passing on more orders to its Austrian affiliate.

SCHMIDT TO MEET THATCHER IN LONDON 19 MARCH

LD081112 Hamburg DPA in German 1044 GMT 8 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 8 Mar (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt will meet Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher in London on 19 March for the next round of German-British consultations. According to an announcement in Bonn on Monday, Schmidt will be accompanied by Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and other ministers. The probable topics of discussion in the talks, which will be held at Chequers, the prime minister's country residence near London, and in the British capital itself, are, among other things, East-West relations and Western attitudes toward the Polish crisis and the planned reforms in some political spheres of the EEC. The last meeting of the two heads of government in the framework of the semiannual consultations took place on 18 November last year in Bonn.

PAPER SCORES SPD LEADERS' STAND TOWARD U.S.

[Editorial signed R.H.: "Lack of Diplomacy"]

[Text] With a view to preventing the dropping of the 1979 party congress' dual decision through the party congress in Munich Schmidt and Brandt have embarked on a new dual strategy: They have done everything possible so as to save the dual decision. They unfortunately did not shrink from currying favor with the delegates through blunt remarks about America.

What is forgotten is the reproach that the Americans had let their dollar exchange rate become rotten. Now, when the dollar is trimmed toward unforeseeable high exchange rates, the policy of high interest rates is blamed for being the root of all evil. Do we have to annoy the Americans for reasons of international opportunisms without any self-criticism? Brandt's allegation that the Americans' "murderous policy of high interest rates" did not benefit the daring entrepreneurs but those who invest deposit accounts without risk shows an unrealistic trend of knowing better. The government does not want to admit that the daring entrepreneur in Germany for long is being discouraged, whereas in America, despite a partly criticial situation, people ready to bear risks are still setting up enterprises. Being even more at a loss than others, the SPD speaks of grapes which through home-made over-reforms have become too expensive for it: Now the Americans reportedly are responsible for their hanging that high.

Uneasiness is also caused by the direction into which the discussion on the gas deal is moving now. The Federal chancellor shows annoyance over the Americans. The ultimate U.S. argument that any cooperation in this field would serve the Soviet Union's military strength, cannot be ruled out. The Soviets themselves are saying in talks: We need this money, our plan is adapted to it. On the other hand, however, the Reagan government does not renounce the grain deal and has not served any energy assistance to Europe, a solution replacing the gas deal, with the complete decontrol of the American energy policy. It has nothing to offer. But the Federal chancellor has gone too far when he said that any statement of the American Government against the gas deal would not change anything, that "it certainly would not bring any influence to bear on our adhering to this deal." This overbearing might turn out to be a deplorable lack of diplomacy and a violation of the wisdom: Never say never!

FLUCTUATIONS OF EXCHANGE RATE WILL CONTINUE

DW011243 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 1 Mar 82 p 4

[Commentary signed TH.: "The Dollar as Interest Rate Magnet"]

[Text] Scarcely had the dollar exchange rate normalized downward with all the associated pleasant effects, such as the lowering of fuel prices, than it started to increase once again, and -- apart from daily fluctuations -- rather strongly at that. Does this reflect a new strengthening of the American economy, or is this merely the consequence of high interest rates which attracted the flow of capital into the country? Above all it certainly is the interest rates which boost the dollar to such a degree that people in Europe -- particularly in socialist Mitterand's France -- are looking for artificial structures with a view to freeing themselves from this foreign exchange and from the irksome level of interest rates in the United States.

That is an illusion, at any rate for a world currency such as the German mark. It is really a mistake to believe that the American President could decree the interest rates or would be extremely interested personally in high interest rates. Reagan, too, depends on the market and he would also welcome lower rates to help economic developments. A conflict between Reagan and the head of the Federal Reserve Bank, Volcker, is already looming. Nevertheless, the President could bring indirect influence to bear on the interest rates through his budgetary policy. However, it is here where he puts a stick in his own spokes because the excessive financing of weapons programs produces huge deficits in the budget. The deficit of roughly $100 billion estimated for 1983 is even being assessed as an optimistic understatement. It is such deficits which are forcing up prices.

Consequently, the arms policy cancels from the outset possible successes in economic policy. Though there are initial rays of hope because of only a single digit U.S. inflation rate, they threaten to disappear unless the arms expenditures are considerably reduced. However, this does not seem to be the case for the time being. This is why Volcker will continue to apply the credit brake -- and the high interest rates will remain with us for a long time to come. Therefore, this interest rate will determine the external exchange rate of the dollar for the time being.

DISCUSSION OF ARMS SALES WITH ISRAEL DENIED

[Text] Paris, 8 Mar (AFP) -- French President Francois Mitterrand did not discuss the question of possible arms sales to Israel during his just-concluded visit there, a Foreign Ministry source said here today.

There was consequently no reason for this question to be raised at the next France-Israeli joint commission meeting which is to meet in late April or early May, the ministry source said. The two countries would hold talks on the proposed construction of an Israeli nuclear power plant at technical level, although, as the project was still in its infancy, it would probably not be discussed at joint commission level, the source said.

Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhaq Shamir said in an interview on Israeli radio Saturday that France and Israel would probably be increasing their cooperation in a number of domains. "France appears ready to sell us a nuclear reactor and it is not impossible that it will sell us arms," he said.

According to official sources in Jerusalem yesterday, the Franco-Israeli commission would examine the possible sale of a French nuclear reactor and armament to Israel.

LE MONDE COMMENDS MITTERRAND'S KNESSET SPEECH

[Editorial: "The Inviolable Right To Live"]

[Text] It was an important speech that Mr Francois Mitterrand delivered in the Knesset. While being unable to satisfy the protagonists in the Israeli-Arab conflict or make possible a rapid break in the deadlock -- who could aspire to do that? -- Mr Mitterrand has the merit of frankness and clarity. That is not insignificant in a region and concerning a confrontation which have accustomed us all too often to double-talk, things left unsaid, the worst ambiguities and all kinds of hypocrisy.

"The inviolable right to live" which the president of the republic loudly proclaimed applies, of course, in his view, to the Jewish people, that "noble and proud" people "in their completeness and diversity" -- an expression which is a kind of reparation for the expression "self-confident and dominating" formerly used by General de Gaulle. But that right, Mr Mitterrand immediately added, is also "that of the peoples" surrounding Israel, especially the Palestinians of Gaza and the West Bank. The logical exercise of that right, therefore, leads them to the idea of a "homeland" and even a "state." In pronouncing those two words the president went further than he had done before. Similarly, by citing Gaza and the West Bank he seemed to rule out the "Jordanian" solution to the Palestinian problem -- a solution which he once seemed to prefer.

Taking a firm stand on principles, Mr Mitterrand also clearly indicated to the PLO that, although it is representative of the Palestinian fighters, it can only take part in discussions if "it places its right in the context of respect for the right of others," in other words, if it agress to recognize Israel's right to existence. That major qualification will undoubtedly bring the disapproval of many Arab states, not to mention that of the PLO leaders. But in expressing it Mr Mitterrand was consistent since he stated: "We will spare no effort to ensure that Israel has an unequivocal right to existence and to ensure that its right to the means of existence is recognized."

Another qualification which is likely to be badly received in the Arab camp is Mr Mitterrand's assertion that "everything should be negotiable," notably the borders of a future Palestinian state. The president did not expand on this but he probably had in mind Israel's security problems; he was probably thinking of some border adjustments and especially of Jerusalem's status, with regard to which he is known to oppose a new division.

The president has no chance -- at least in the short term -- of being heeded by the Israeli leaders or even by most of the Labor Party members any more than by the Arabs. Moreover Mr Begin hurriedly reaffirmed his opposition to the creation of a Palestinian state. It is true that the president was not expecting a miracle even in that holy land. It was, therefore, a prolonged break in the psychological dealock which he wanted to prompt. It remains to be seen whether friendship, the language of reason and justice will be able to achieve that, provided, of course, Mr Begin does not take one of those spectacular actions in which he excels by snubbing the president of the republic.

ENVOY VISITING CHAD TO ASSESS SITUATION

[Text] Mr Jeanpierre Campredon, former French ambassador to Togo, Madagascar and Sudan, is now on a contact mission to the Chadian National Unity Transition Government [GUNT] to find out about the situation in the country and to assess French-Chadian cooperation. It was reported in the Chadian capital on Tuesday 2 March that the French envoy, who went on a similar mission back in July 1981, went to Ati in the center of the country on Sunday to meet with President Goukouni Oueddei.

For his part, GUNT vice president Col Abdel Kader Kamougue reaffirmed in Ndjamena Tuesday that his government is determined to "settle" the Chadian problem "militarily" and he deplored the "disorganization" of the government troops. Colonel Kamougue, leader of the Chadian armed forces, stated in particular in this connection that "disorganization" was the cause of the loss of control over Oum Hadjer last Thursday to Hissein Habre's FAN 4 days after the conquest of the city by government troops. "The euphoria of victory made our men forget the need to organize for defense," he added, explaining that all Chadian political and military factions had contributed to the capture of Oum Hadjer.

MOVEMENT LEADER SEEKS REFUGE IN BANGUI EMBASSY

AB081151 Paris AFP in French 1113 GMT 8 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 8 Mar (AFP) -- The president of the Central African People's Liberation Movement (MLPC), Ange Patasse, has not yet been granted political asylum, but has simply taken refuge at the French Embassy, contrary to what authoritative sources said in Bangui, it was pointed out in Paris. Suspected to have taken part in the preparation of the plot to overthrow Gen Andre Kolingba during the night of 3 to 4 March, Mr Patasse is being hunted by the Military Committee for National Redress (CMRN) for "an attempt on the internal security of the state." The plot, which was principally conceived by Gen Alphonse Mbaikoua and Gen Andre Bozize, respectively former ministers of justice and information and culture -- currently on the run -- failed a few hours later.

It was pointed out in Bangui on Monday morning that during the day, the CAR presidency would send a request for extradition to the French Embassy.

PROGRESS IN GENEVA DISARMAMENT TALKS SET AS GOAL

AU061558 Rome ANSA in English 1549 GMT 6 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 6 Mar (ANSA) -- Italian diplomats in Geneva have been asked to do all they can to seek tangible progress in the work of the Geneva-based U.N. Disarmament Committee as Italy serves its turn as duty chairman of the body this month, the Foreign Ministry here said today. According to ministerial sources, the committee could be a useful forum for laying the ground for positive moves when the second special session of the U.N. General Assembly on disarmament convenes in New York this June.

In the Italian reading of the Geneva committee's work, it could check out the willingness of the great powers to relaunch negotiations on disarmament, thus making a specific contribution to East-West relations and the international political climate in general. The Geneva committee's brief ranges from chemical warfare and a total ban on nuclear experiments to radiological weapons, the prevention of an arms race in space, and the elaboration of a global plan for disarmament.

According to the sources, a couple of days ago, Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo asked the Italian representatives in Geneva to seek concrete progress on these topics above all else.

COLOMBO ANSWERS NEWSMEN'S FOREIGN POLICY QUERIES

AU061508 Rome ANSA in English 0852 GMT 6 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 6 Mar (ANSA) -- Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo concurred with defense chief Lelio Lagorio last night on the point that the intruder submarine chased out of Italian territorial waters last week was a Soviet nuclear powered submarine in a question and answer session with newsmen on a range of foreign policy issues. In a discussion which ranged over French President Francois Mitterrand's visits to Rome and Israel, relations between Europe and the United States, European Community problems and Italy's dealings with southern Africa, Colombo opened by expressing an opinion on the case of the violation of territorial waters. "The Soviet denial concerning the submarine detected in the Gulf of Taranto was an obligatory denial. I do not feel it was convincing and have judged it in this light," the foreign minister said.

He reported that he had thoroughly studied the note sent along Thursday by the Soviet ambassador to Rome, Nikolay Lunkov, and agreed with the opinion of defense chief Lelio Lagorio as expressed to the lower house Friday, that it was definitely a Soviet attack submarine of the Victor class. The vessel which refused to identify itself to the Italian diesel-electric sub on patrol in the waters off the naval base at Taranto, in the instep of the Italian Boot, was pursued for eighteen hours before entering international waters.

Addressing himself to the neutrality of Malta, the island republic in the Mediterranean between Sicily and the North African coast, Colombo said that the Italian-Maltese treaty guaranteeing the country's neutral status did not remove the need for Italy to carefully assess Maltese policy. If the policy of the nation were to lose its neutral and non-aligned character, the foreign minister said, "this would certainly spark disagreement between Italy and Malta."

He went on to say, in response to a question on dealings with Libya, that it is "timely and politically useful" to maintain a dialogue with the North African state for economic and trade reasons and to safeguard Italian workers there.

On the issue of Algerian natural gas supplies for Italy, now being negotiated by the state-owned Natural Fuels Group (ENI) and Tripoli, Colombo said that the problem is strictly an economic one and has no bearing on political relations with Algeria.

He affirmed that this is a matter of getting the natural gas at a good price and noted that Italy has emphasized development cooperation in negotiations in a bid to put the natural gas agreement into a context useful for Algeria, as well.

The visit of the French head of state to Rome at the end of February, according to the diplomatic chief, marked a shift into "another type of policy in Europe." In his assessment, Colombo said that France has always subordinated European policy to the Paris-Bonn tie and affirmed that the country now "is moving into a more open and multilateral concept of relations within the Europe Community." Colombo referred to the set of relations between Paris, Bonn, Rome and London and noted that there is being erected a "more comprehensive vision of Europe," but warned that these ties should not be established at the expense of the small community nations.

When questioned about his consultations held here Thursday and Friday with the Venezuelan foreign minister, Jose Alberto Zambrano Velasco, on the situation in El Salvador, Colombo said that he had received the impression of Venezuela's high level of concern for the expansion of Cuban influence in Central America and for Soviet involvement in the region.

In response to a query on EEC policy reform, the minister pointed out that the Italian-German initiative on European unity is not in conflict with projects drafted for reform.

Colombo said, with reference to the French president's visit to Israel Thursday and Friday, that Europe must maintain close contact with the Israel Government to foster an understanding in the Middle East, not "to take positions in favor of one side or the other." He said that "Mitterrand's trip was a positive development and all other countries should act in like fashion." The minister announced his own upcoming visit to Israel.

Looking across the Atlantic, the diplomatic chief said that though European-U.S. relations are sometimes "difficult to conduct," these ties are essential for world balance and peace. He connected the difficulties in these dealings to such events as the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in December 1979, the Islamic revolution in Iran and the December 13 proclamation of martial law in Poland.

After mentioning the need to seek out solutions to misunderstandings in this area, Colombo said that for this reason, "I recently proposed in the United States the idea of a policy act" and went on to describe this act as a convention of peace and friendship between Europe and the U.S. outside the Atlantic alliance "which is of a military nature." "The purpose (of the act) would be to pave the way for a dialogue which allows both sides to draft joint responses to the big international problems," the foreign minister concluded.

BERLINGUER INTERVIEWED IN YUGOSLAV PAPER

LD041900 Belgrade TANJUG Domestic Service in Serbo-Croatian 1554 GMT 4 Mar 82

[Text] Belgrade, 4 Mar (TANJUG) -- "We are sensitive to all events which in any social or political system result in the restriction of democratic rights and in particular of workers' freedoms. This is the basic reason, the principled reason, which is at the heart of our severe condemnation of these restrictions -- condemnations which we utter also when such restrictions take place in capitalist countries and in countries which are under the influence of U.S. imperialism, and also when we see that such restrictions of democratic freedoms -- which in Poland have gone as far as the declaration of martial law -- take place in countries which have really achieved results of a socialist nature." This was stated by Enrico Berlinguer in an interview to be carried by NIN tomorrow. "Moreover," he added, "in the latter case we can hardly be less sensitive because the target of attack is the very idea of socialism, which for us always has to be combined with the values of freedom and democracy."

Replying to a question by NIN editor Mirko Klarin as to whether in raising the Polish issue his party expected that it would cause such severe and wide polemical reactions, the Italian Communist Party [PCI] Central Committee secretary general said:

"We knew that our attitudes toward Poland and the more general deliberations which we deduced from the development of Polish events would provoke polemical reactions, in particular from the CPSU. I would say that to a certain extent it was both natural and legitimate to expect our criticisms to provoke criticisms with regard to us. Nevertheless, we have been surprised by the tones of the polemic which has been raised against us, because these tones have been, in our view, entirely unbalanced and they have reminded us, by some of their aspects, of the anathemas cast upon the Communist Party of Yugoslavia in 1948. This has confirmed us in our conviction that the CPSU, despite so many words uttered to the contrary, still considers itself the center of the world communist movement and that it usurps the right to condemn the stances of those parties which dissociate themselves from its stances and from that which the CPSU believes to be orthodox communism."

Berlinguer noted that the reactions were "severe but not so wide" and he added that a considerable number of communist parties have not followed the CPSU line.

"It is certain that what is at stake is a severe discussion, but this discussion is not being waged equitably. Because, while we inform our readers and our comrades with all the texts of the polemics which are being waged against us, the CPSU is not acting in the same way; just as you did in 1948. You know that L'UNITA published the integral articles from PRAVDA and that RINASCITA carried the article from KOMMUNIST. However, the Soviet comrades did not publish a single stance of ours, which enabled them to distort them and in some cases this resulted in real forgeries," Berlinguer stated, adding: "We want a democratic discussion in which all members of the two parties can say that they believe on the basis of accurate information on the other party's stances. In fact, this takes place in Italy because all our comrades know the Soviet and our attitudes, whereas this is not the case in the Soviet Union."

The introduction of martial law in Poland, the PCI leader said, "has had a more general effect on the working class, on the communist parties, in the sense that it is weakening the attractive force of socialist ideals and that could create mistrust, especially among the young generations. This makes it even more necessary to draw a (?clear) line of differentiation between socialism of the kind achieved in these countries, in particular with regard to democratic freedoms, and socialism which we want to achieve in Italy and in other West European countries.

"And since new negative developments in the countries of socialism achieved to date cannot be ruled out, we must make it clear to all our aktivists that not even in view of such a possibility must or can we impair our perspective and our struggle for progress toward socialism in our country and in West Europe. On the contrary, in a certain sense this progress becomes even more necessary because we believe it can have a positive influence on the development of the situation in the countries of real socialism."

In making it clear that he does not believe that the basic ideas of the October Revolution have been exhausted and that they still exert an influence, Berlinguer added that "it is difficult to establish a point of departure before which everything has gone well but after which everything has gone badly.

"Evidently some negative phenomena started to occur in the Soviet Union from the start of Stalin's dictatorship," he added.

"We also believe it was a particularly negative moment when in 1948, following the censure of Yugoslavia, the Soviet model was introduced in practice in all the countries of the so-called socialist community. Thus those particular features of the national roads to socialism were eliminated, features which appeared immediately after the founding of the people's democracies at the end of World War II, a period in which there were differences in the development of these countries.

"Yugoslavia was censured because it wanted to hold firmly, and then did hold firmly, to its own path of the development of socialism. Other countries had to adapt to a greater or lesser extent to the model of society, the state and the party characteristics of the Soviet Union, which resulted in various negative consequences, in phenomena of regression and repression," Enrico Berlinguer stressed.

"In 1968 there was a new opening and a new hope appeared with the new course in Czechoslovakia, and the course of renewal was led by the Communist Party and its Central Committee, but this was crushed by means of Soviet armed intervention. There is a new complexity. Finally in 1980 this hope dawns in Poland, and it too is ended. Thus there emerges a need for a more general discussion of the complex situation of the closing off and holding back which took place in these countries, although there are differences between them, and also a need to draw the conclusion that there have to be deep reforms in the economic and political system in these countries. Without this there will inevitably be other instances of stagnation, regression and probably further crises," the PCI secretary general emphasized.

Denying that the drama through which the countries of so-called real socialism have passed "originated at Yalta," he specified that Yalta "did not envisage that uniform regimes would be created in both East and West." "One could allow, and one can allow," Berlinguer continued, "the existence of a variety of roads to socialism completely within the context of caring for the security of the Soviet Union, which is legitimate, just as caring for the security of other countries in Europe is also legitimate."

Berlinguer denied rumors of fear and division in the Italian party caused by the leadership's stances on the "Polish question" and the CPSU policy. "The great majority of the party adopts the theses of the Directorate and the Central Committee," he said, and confusion arises only because of the fear that the party is "making concessions to the ruling classes, to capitalism, and turning toward traditional social democratic positions. Our policy must show that there will be no such concessions and that, on the contrary, our stances are aimed at making the struggle against capitalism even more effective," Berlinguer said.

Pointing out some of the elements which differentiate the PCI from other parties, Berlinguer stressed in his interview with the NIN editorial board: "We are independent of the bourgeois class, and we are also independent as regards any foreign party or state. We are a party which keeps its roots but which is open to what is new; moreover, it is open to its own constant renewal."

POPE'S SUNDAY MESSAGE DEPLORES GUATEMALA VIOLENCE

AU080927 Rome ANSA in English 0827 GMT 8 Mar 82

[Text] Vatican City, 8 Mar (ANSA) -- Pope John Paul II announced Sunday that he will conduct a pilgrimage to the Basilica of Our Lady of Fatima in Portugal on May 13 and delivered words of condemnation of the "fratricidal struggle" in Guatemala where he said, "not even the church is saved from the violence."

Speaking from the window of his private study over St Peter's Square, where some thirty thousand people were gathered for the traditional Angelus message and prayer, the pontiff said he intended to travel to the Portuguese sanctuary on the first anniversary of the attempt on his life "to thank the Virgin for having protected me in these circumstances." Next May 13 will also mark the 65th anniversary of the first appearance of the Virgin as reported by three children of Fatima who said that they saw her six times between that date and October 13, 1917.

Addressing himself to the situation in Guatemala, as he did to the strife in El Salvador on the Sunday before, John Paul spoke of "the growing tension and a fratricidal struggle which is suffocating its just, legitimate aspirations for a civil and peaceful life and ordered progress." On the day two million, 300,000 Guatemalan voters, out of a population of over seven million, had an appointment at the polls to elect a president and members of congress, the pope recalled "the bishops of Guatemala (who) have often voiced their deep concern for the insecurity darkening the life of the nation, who have spoken out against social injustice and against the violence which has not spared even the church with killings or kidnappings of priests and religious."

The pontiff then declared, "The church strongly supplicates, in the name of God, that an end be put to this horrible nightmare of death and destruction. The church will persevere in a position of frank and sincere dialogue in a search for peace, concord and union for all Guatemalans. Ideas are not, in fact, imposed nor do they prevail with the machinegun but through superior ideas and concepts, and the only force for destroying error is truth, just as the only force which destroys hate is love," the pope concluded.

EXPRESSO INTERVIEWS DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

PM071701 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 27 Feb 82 p 6

[Unattributed report on statements by Portuguese Deputy Prime Minister Diego Freitas do Amaral at 24 February luncheon with EXPRESSO journalists in Lisbon: "I Will Back Balsemao As Long As He Enjoys Social Democratic Party's Confidence"]

[Excerpts] [Question] What if the president of the republic asked this government to resign?

[Answer] Of course, he will ask the Democratic Alliance to submit to him a new candidate for the premiership, and we will do so. Then if the president refuses to accept our proposal, all he can do is dissolve parliament and call another election. But if the Democratic Alliance wins again, there will be only one way open to General Ramalho Eanes: his immediate resignation, tit for tat. Then we will be truly thoroughgoing. [answer ends]

Freitas do Amaral's reply clearly revealed the Centrist leader's opposition to the president of the republic. The conversation took place at the Pabe Restaurant last Wednesday, where the political leader was EXPRESSO's guest at one of its regular luncheons.

Backing for Angelo Correia

Freitas do Amaral joined his government colleague Angelo Correia in his denunciation of an alleged "subversive conspiracy," following the strike announced by the general federation of Portuguese workers. "The government," he said, "has an obligation to reveal the events that have occurred and their significance." He reasserted that "persons and evidence were discovered which confirm the existence of a subversive plan." The deputy prime minister does not believe, however, that the events were adequately investigated: "I am convinced that the events have a greater significance (at the time the disclosure of the contents of the documents seized revealed this) but I do not yet know how far this might extend -- whether there are links with any significant parties or with international terrorism." Voicing a hidden suspicion, he added: "It still remains to be proved whether or not the '25 April people's forces' are connected with the PCP."

Talking to Everyone

Some people see in many of Freitas do Amaral's attitudes some degree of inconsistency, especially between Sa Carneiro's death and the formation of the second Balsemao government. He explained: "My stance did not change. I belong to the government and support the prime minister. It was agreed by the Democratic Alliance parties that the prime minister would be named by the Social Democratic Party [PSD]. For my part, I did not interfere in his nomination. I said to Dr Balsemao himself: 'as long as you enjoy your party's confidence you will have my backing; when you no longer enjoy it I will withdraw that backing.'"

He claimed the freedom to talk to everyone, including critics of the present prime minister, whether they be called Cavaco Silva or Santana Lopes. "All I needed was to be denied ordinary rights simply because I belong to the government."

Also, he does not accept the abundant criticisms from all sides of this government's alleged weakness: "The question of strong and weak governments is one of appearances."

[Question] But in politics that which appears to be, very often is.

[Answer] That is what Dr Salazar used to say, but I do not believe it.

If this government is not strong, what do you consider a strong government? We are continually tackling crises -- strike after strike, the destabilizing action of a Council of the Revolution that is opposed to us, a president who does not support us, a difficult international situation and so forth. What else does it take?

[Question] But some ministers say that they are going to leave the government -- including some Social Democratic Center Party [CDS] members. At least that is what they threaten to do in private. Will that not weaken the cabinet?

[Answer] So far no CDS minister has told me that, but perhaps you know more than I do. Nobody within the party bodies has said anything to this effect. In any case, if a minister left the government, nothing would happen apart from his replacement. The Democratic Alliance has already survived much more serious tribulations. Remember the death of Sa Carneiro and Adelino Amara da Costa. So the resignation of a member of the government would be of little significance...

Taste for Politics

[Question] But some people argue that, in view of the deterioration in the situation, the Democratic Alliance should leave the government before the next elections...

[Answer] I oppose that argument: I condemn it, I criticize it and I attack it. Whoever supports it cannot depend on my silence. We made a promise to the people; the people voted for us and we must keep that promise. If anybody outside the government wants to put an end to it, that is another matter. I consider it immoral to end a political mandate simply because a defeat is forecast at the next elections. Furthermore, the opinion polls that have been carried out do not indicate that. Be that as it may, a government has an obligation to continue struggling right up to the elections. Otherwise it would reveal a dislike of politics. Note that before then many things could happen -- unforeseeable factors that could even completely alter the voters' inclinations. Consider for instance, what happened to Begin in Israel, where a few days before winning the elections the opinion polls said he would lose.

[Question] Are you really sure that the Democratic Alliance will remain in power?

[Answer] I am. In fact, to date the majority has worked perfectly, without losing a single vote.

[Question] But is that not a very formal view of politics?

[Answer] Not formal; institutional.

[Question] It seems, however, that the CDS is losing support in a sector which is traditionally its own -- the entrepreneurs. This is precisely the sector in which the party is supposed to be strongest.

[Answer] I do not believe that it is only in the entrepreneurial sector that the CDS is strong. I would say that it is strong in the working and middle classes too, as shown by the opinion polls that we have organized. In any case, the fact that half a dozen entrepreneurs have turned to Eanes is not of decisive importance. Either they were always pro-Eanes or they are entrepreneurs who have come from abroad and had links with the old regime and are therefore nostalgic for authoritarian solutions.

Poland and Turkey

Once again the CDS chairman showed himself to be interested in international topics, as he has proved in recent years. The first topic in this regard was Poland, as was virtually inevitable: "Clearly our condemnation of the Polish situation embodies something more than the defense of human rights," Freitas do Amaral began.

"The Polish regime was aiming at a broader social pluralism (which could eventually have led to political pluralism) as against a rigid, monolithic model of dictatorship, of a totalitarian system. Poland is a European country, close to us both historically and culturally. It is therefore our duty to condemn the reversal of that process."

[Question] But why do the leaders of the majority and of your government not issue a similar condemnation of the dictatorial situations in regimes such as Turkey, for instance, or of human rights violations such as in El Salvador?

[Answer] Despite everything, Turkey is a partner of ours in NATO, and there is a hope that it will progress to democracy, whereas Poland belongs to a bloc opposed to ours and is an enemy that wishes to weaken us.

Next the deputy prime minister made a point of reasserting a clear stance on the Turkish military coup: "In Turkey there was a coup d'etat against democracy. I have always condemned it and I still condemn it. It could be said that at least in this respect I do not follow Secretary of State Alexander Haig. Moreover, the coup took place when I was foreign minister, and at the time I issued instructions on the government's behalf that Turkey's expulsion from the Council of Europe be proposed. Strangely, not only was I not supported by any of the opposition parties, but I even received an unofficial message from the Belem Palace asking why the government was embarking on quixotic foreign policies."

Supporting Salvadoran Government

"The situation in El Salvador is not so simple. There have been lamentable excesses on the part of the authorities, or rather the forces serving the authorities, but the fact is that Napoleon Duarte previously won democratic elections after decades of extreme rightwing dictatorship, and the military, after staging another coup, felt unable to govern and summoned him again. In view of the origins of this situation I have no reservations in stating that the government is legitimate and that it is the duty of all the democratic forces in the world to support the present democratization attempt against an extreme right which is still active and against leftwing groups which want not pluralist democracy but the dictatorship of the proletariat. The massacres (which, for that matter, have occurred elsewhere) are condemnable acts perpetrated by peripheral forces difficult for Napoleon Duarte to control and opposed to his directives."

CASTRO MEETS WITH FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE MP'S

PM081639 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 8 Mar 82 p 28

[Frank Taylor dispatch: "British MP's Surprised by Castro"]

[Text] Havana -- Dr Fidel Castro, the Cuban leader, told a group of British MP's at the weekend that any role Britain could play in the search for peace in Central America would be "highly welcomed."

A key figure in the events now unfolding between the United States, El Salvador and Nicaragua, he also gave his full backing to Mexico's initiative aimed at reducing tensions in the region.

Ever the unpredictable one, he sprang a surprise on the MP's by calling them into his office in Havana on Saturday afternoon after they had been disappointed by his non-appearance at a British Embassy reception on Friday night.

Dressed in his customary olive green fatigues and appearing relaxed, Dr Castro was optimistic about the fact that Mr Alexander Haig, the American secretary of state, had met Sr Jorge Castaneda, the Mexican foreign minister, in New York for an initial exploration of the peace effort.

He told the MP's, members of the Commons' Foreign Affairs Committee, that the groundwork for a peaceful settlement in El Salvador could emerge from the talks between America and Mexico. He seemed to think that, in the first place, they could lead to a reduction in the warlike rhetoric that has flown back and forth between Washington and Havana since President Reagan chose El Salvador as the place to "draw the line" against communism in the Western Hemisphere.

The MP's will take Dr Castro's pronouncements into account when they compile their report for the Commons committee. Their task is to present suggestions to Mrs Thatcher that might see the formulation of a foreign policy towards Central America that does not ncessarily follow that of Washington.

The MP's, who are led by Sir Anthony Kershaw, also visited the Isle of Pines, off Cuba's southern coast, were thousands of children, most from African countries, are being given a Marxist-Leninist education in the hope they will be come the communist leaders of the future. Hundreds of the children, aged between 12 and 15, greeted the MP's with anticapitalist songs and chants.

Yesterday the eight MP's split into two parties to continue their fact-finding mission. One group flew to Costa Rica to make a tour of Central America while the other went to Venezuela, with later visits to Caribbean countries.

KIPRIANOU CAUTIONS AGAINST DABBLING IN POLITICS

NC081427 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 8 Mar 82 pp 1, 10

[Excerpt] In a very important speech at a tumultuous gathering Saturday evening the chairman of the Democratic Party and president of the republic, Mr Kiprianou, inaugurated a new direction for the people. The basic message in President Kiprianou's speech was the need for unity and cooperation of the democratic patriotic forces. He revealed that he has undertaken initiatives which, he stressed, are developing positively for the establishment of broad democratic cooperation.

The democratic cooperation President Kiprianou is promoting, as he himself explained, is not only for the purpose of electing a president but, as he said, "to put a final end to the efforts of those who are undermining the people's unity by trying to sell the country out and those who are being led and possessed by hatred and grudges and are ready to abandon our true goal of national vindication."

President Kiprianou launched a particularly strong attack against, and branded the efforts of, those who, in view of the presidential elections and for personal reasons, are supporting "supraparty" situations, and those who are promoting confusion which, he stressed, are linked only by grudges and reaction.

While crowds swarmed the movie theater and the surrounding areas and streets where the gathering was held, they showed support for what President Kiprianou said with demonstrations and slogans. At this point President Kiprianou stressed the following:

"In addition to these people, there are also some others who, due to their positions, should not involve themselves in politics. They want to look like they are serving the national cause by getting involved in backstage politics, by getting involved in politics, supposedly in the name of the national interests, and only causing harm to the country and to themselves. If they do not stop this involvement, he concluded, they will have to answer to the people."

IOANNIDHIS READY TO MAKE PRESIDENTIAL BID

NC061113 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 6 Mar 82 pp 1, 8

[Excerpts] According to absolutely verified information from reliable political circles, interlocutor Yeoryios Ioannidhis has finally decided to accept the candidacy as president of the republic in the next elections. This decision has been made by Ioannidhis in response to persistent urging from various groups of powerful persons as well as by representative elements and personalities who exercise influence on a broad number of people islandwide. Ioannidhis has also made the decision in the event the idea of a president who is above party politics is adopted by a broader spectrum of forces and by a majority of the people.

As is known, in various instances and in a recent interview, Ioanndhis stressed the present circumstances and conditions the country is passing through and the need to strengthen a solid domestic front to chart a joint course for a Cyprus solution and to dictate the formation of a strong and representative government of national unity or an all-party government, as well as expansion of the National Council.

Reliable political observers maintain that the selection of Paphos, the birthplace of Mr Ioannidhis, was made intentionally by President Kiprianou as the place for the start of his election campaign and that the whole thing is not unrelated to the president's fears of the possibility of Mr Ioannidhis running. According to reliable political observers, these fears have been intensified recently, especially after Mr Kiprianou's verified report that Mr Ioannidhis will certainly be his election opponent.

ATHENS PREPARING FOR REAGAN-PAPANDREOU MEETING

NC081125 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 7 Mar 82 pp 1, 3

[By Khristos Karanikas]

[Text] The Greek Government will submit its positions on NATO and the bases to the U.S. Government by 15 March. According to diplomatic sources, the Greek Government is interested in preparing the ground for Prime Minister Papandreou's meeting with President Reagan in Bonn on 10 June so the two leaders may arrive at solutions at the political level. The PASOK government's first policy aim is to find a solution to the political problems which have emerged and then to advance negotiations to the technical level. Papandreou wishes to seek out these solutions at the summit level with the U.S. President himself. In fact, in order to avoid a separate meeting with President Reagan -- which probably might cost politically on the country's domestic front -- the prime minister prefers a careful preparation of their meeting in Bonn during the NATO summit. The U.S. side has asked the Greek side to submit a general political outline of its positions as a personal briefing for the U.S. President, which the two sides can then process diplomatically. In any case, according to the sources, it should not be precluded that the Greek positions will be discussed during the spring conference of the NATO defense ministers in Brussels on 6 and 7 May in meetings by Papandreou with U.S. Secretary of State Haig and Secretary of Defense Weinberger.

If it is deemed necessary to hold these meetings, Greece will be represented at the conference by the prime minister in his capacity as national defense minister. It is believed that through careful and silent preparation it may be possible to dovetail two sides' viewpoints substantively so that the two leaders may be able to arrive at solutions at the political level and thus end their meeting with a significant achievement.

After all, Greek and U.S. positions are not so distant on both issues as it seemed when PASOK was in the opposition. The current government's main problem is control over the Aegean airspace and, specifically, essential recognition of the status that was in force until our withdrawal from the NATO military wing in 1974.

The Greek Government is facilitated in this aim by the fact that this status has been valid de facto following our return to the military wing in October 1980. The recognition of the status in force in the Aegean up to 1980 [as published] constitutes, according to the Greek side, indirectly a form of guarantee by the alliance of our eastern borders, so the same sources allege. After all, during his recent visit to Bonn, Prime Minister Papandreou stated that the insistence for guarantees on our eastern borders is not a one-way street and that there are more effective roads.

It seems that the prime minister is orienting himself toward the creation of substantive conditions of guarantees from within the country's complex of international relations and not from a provision of some unilateral written guarantee which can be easily upset, as so often happens on the international scene. Within this policy, on the issue of the bases the government will rather not insist on merely comparing our positions with what Washington has given to Turkey but, on the contrary, will seek to confront the entire problem on different criteria. These criteria are called qualitative as opposed to the quantitative that were in force thus far, the government believes. After all, this is what the government spokesman meant the day before yesterday when, in reply to a question on the issue of upsetting the 7:10 ratio of the balance of power in the Aegean, he said: "As regards our country, the essential issue is the quality of the weapons systems that are given and the conditions under which they are supplied."

According to the same sources, the Greek Government does not intend to insist on adherence to the ratio which, after all, it seems Congress is not willing to institute. On the contrary, the Greek Government will possibly accept a different ratio, provided it is given the possibility to choose the arms systems that will be given to us and that more favorable terms of payment are granted. The Greek Government does not intend to insist on joint comcand of the bases or probably on control over the information they gather, since in reality such control is practically impossible.

In any case, both issues -- NATO and the bases -- will be faced by the government as one and the same issue so that in the end it may assess advantages that will accrue from their settlement. It is for this reason that Papandreou proposes that they be solved at the political level when advantages for our country will become apparent. Actually it is believed that if solutions at the political level are found, the negotiations by the technical experts will advance quickly. Seen from this viewpoint, it should not be precluded that all negotiations may be completed faster than was planned by the previous New Democracy government, which was following contrary tactics.

The prime minister is interested in quick political solutions to these two issues for clearly economic reasons as well. So long as the suspense over NATO and the bases issue continues, the picture of a preelection PASOK is publicized abroad. This, however, means that the government's assurances of respect for private initiative are not sufficiently convincing. On the other hand, a successful settlement of problems with the Americans -- after postponing the plebiscite on the EEC indefinitely -- will give the green light for the attraction of foreign investors that the government currently needs so much. As a foreign diplomat observed, if the Americans are not the first to start, nobody will undertake the initiative; not the Europeans and even less the Arabs.

Deadline Denied

[Text] The government spokesman has denied the report in I KATHIMERINI that Prime Minister Papandreou intends "to submit" his views on NATO and the U.S. bases to President Reagan by 15 March. The government spokesman made the following statement:

"What has been reported in the press this morning on the NATO and bases issues as well as on Prime Minister Papandreou's position being given to the U.S. President by 15 March are completely inaccurate."

CHANGES IN USSR'S AEGEAN POLICY SEEN SIGNIFICANT

NC081147 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 7 Mar 82 p 9

[Editorial: "Diplomatic 'Quadrilles'"]

[Text] Two changes have been noted in the Cyprus issue and the issue of Greek-Turkish relations, and their significance may determine future developments in both problems. The new element in the Greek-Turkish dispute is the official rejection by the United States of the Greek charge that Turkey is threatening the integrity of Greek territory. By refusing to maintain the 7:10 ratio in military aid to Greece and Turkey, which had been dictated by the need for equality in arms between the two countries so that the aggressiveness of the second could be discouraged, Washington is showing that the Reagan administration rejects the existence of such a threat. Consequently the ratio of aid given to the one side in relation to the other is dictated by the strategic significance of each country as an obstacle to the flow of Soviet forces into the Mediterranean and Persian Gulf and not by the expediencies that previously were in force.

The change in the correlation of interests and activities with the intent or pretext of solving the Cyprus problem now emanates from the Soviet side. Through AKEL, Cyprus' doctrinaire communist party, through direct moves by the USSR's diplomatic representatives in Athens and Nicosia to the corresponding governments and through articles in the Soviet or Soviet-guided press. Moscow is trying to create the impression of increased interest in solution of the Cyprus problem. The procedure being proposed is the convening of an international conference, naturally with the participation of the USSR.

As opposed to the Cyprus side, the Greek side does not seem especially willing to let the Soviet "initiative" continue. This explains why Papandreou prefers to give "active support" to Greek Cypriot Hellenism, which is fighting for its vindication, by insisting that Willy Brandt undertake mediation and that briefing letters be sent to the leaders of all states which can contribute to the withdrawal of the Turkish troops from Cyprus, an indispensable prerequisite to rid the dialogue between the two communuties of the factor that renders it useless. The Greek prime minister's guarded position toward the Soviet "explosion of interest" may have more than one interpretation, but it can be due only to the precise determination that the change in Soviet intentions is directly connected with development influencing the Soviets' own plans and that does not stem from concern about Cyprus Hellenism.

Indeed, the Soviet Government was the first in September 1980 to accept the Turkish junta's reason for the imposition of the dictatorship as an action for the benefit of democracy and the Turkish people! Furthermore, General Evren's statement that in addition to their other responsibilities the political leaders were being accused of excessive pro-Americanism nurtured the hope among the Soviets of an expansion of their influence in dictatorial Turkey. The militarist regime in Ankara is now enjoying all kinds of material and moral support from Washington, while in Athens the immovably pro-Western government has been succeeded by a government which gives hope for increased Soviet influence in Greece. The first proof of this increased influence could be Greece's insistence on the convening of an international conference on the Cyprus problem so that the "truth" can be institutionalized that without the Soviet Union's direct intervention no Mediterranean problem can be solved.

Viewing the issue of Greek-Cyprus relations from the same angle, as long as there were governments in power that supported NATO participation as nationally necessary, Moscow evaluated excessive Greek interest as disturbing Cyprus' nonaligned, anti-NATO policy. However, Moscow currently believes the manifestation of the greatest possible interest by Papandreou's government in Cyprus operates in favor of Cyprus' anti-NATO leanings. However, Moscow has to do all these things while carefully avoiding any activity that could possibly truly displease the Turkish regime. And, for this reason it offsets rhetorical attacks against it with General Evren's warm reception by the more faithful members of the Warsaw Pact in the Balkans during his visits to that area.

However, regardless of any attemps by the "superpowers" to exploit both the Cyprus problem and Greek-Turkish relations to the benefit of their hegemonistic policy -- attempts which after all are not novel -- the thing that counts is to find a way to gain respect in practice for the UN resolutions on the Cyprus problem and to discourage Turkey from continuing its adventurist policy. If Papandreou's government succeeds in this, it will have done something different from what has been done thus far.

TURKISH 'VIOLATIONS' DURING EXERCISES CLARIFIED

NC051812 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 5 Mar 82 p 7

[Excerpts] The Turkish planes intercepted by Greek aircraft the day before yesterday in the eastern Aegean did not violate Greek airspace but did violate flight regulations by entering the Athens Flight Information Region.

This clarification was made yesterday by an authoritative National Defense Ministry source, who said the Greek side has increased its vigilance because it has been known for a long time that the Turkish air and sea exercise "Sea Wolf" was to be held. The same source stressed that the Turkish violations are an effort to test Greece's alert system through the entry of their planes into Greek territory from the Aegean at low levels. In such cases, Greece demands that the Turks make their flight plans known to the local air traffic control stations.

It should be recalled that this procedure is required by international regulations on the entry of foreign planes into the flight information region of a foreign state, but it is a fixed Turkish principle not to comply with this obligation.

Yesterday, in reply to a question on the issue of the extension of Greek territorial waters in the Aegean to 12 miles, a government spokesman said the government has no intention of making any clarification on the issue. In this connection, it is recalled that in a recent interview Prime Minister Papandreou said in reference to the same issue: "The only thing I can say is that according to international law this is the absolute right of the Greek Government, which, however, has not discussed it. It is an issue I discuss only with myself. It is a lonely decision that belongs to me only. I am not prepared to say anything on this issue. However, it should be stressed that my policy aims at peace."

1982 BUDGET SUBMITTED TO CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES

[Excerpt] Reconstruction of the country's economy, recovery of economic activity, reduction of inflation, and the creation of prerequisites for implementation of the 1983-87 social and economic development program are the basic targets of the 1982 general budget which, in the presence of Prime Minister Papandreou, was submitted this evening to the Chamber of Deputies by Finance Minister Dhrettakis. The budget provides for total revenues of 685.257 billion drachmas, total expenditures of 923.215 drachmas, and a deficit of 273.958 billion drachmas [figures as heard]. It provides for a 58.5 percent increase in revenue compared with 1981 and an increase of total expenditures by 35 percent, and provides for a 5.4-percent reduction in the deficit.

NC082247 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 2100 GMT 8 Mar 82

[Excerpt] On the occasion of the 1982 budget, which has been submitted to the Chamber of Deputies, Prime Minister Papandreou addressed a message to the Greek people on the country's economy. Among other things, the prime minister said 1982 is a transitional year and it is natural for the budget to be an interim one, a budget that allows us to check the downhill slide inherited from the rightwing and lay the foundations for economic recovery under conditions of social justice. Mr Papandreou stressed that the government has decided its options based on the national interest. He went on: We call on all working people to support the income policy and the more general policy of the government for realization of change and both the short-term and long-term elevation of our standard of living.

ANKARA NOW NOT BOUND BY BERN PACT ON AEGEAN OIL

NC090952 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 7 Mar 82 p 9

[Text] Ankara (HURRIYET) -- The Turkish reaction to Greece's beginning to prospect for oil on the eastern side of Thasos island in the Aegean, contrary to the Bern agreement, is gradually increasing in intensity. At 1130 yesteray Sotiris Varusakis, secretary general of the Greek Embassy in Ankara, was summoned to the Foreign Ministry, where he was handed a note to which "an early reply was demanded."

A competent official, who remarked that Turkish-Greek relations have been tense since the Papandreou government came to power, said: "We have been trying as much as possible to avoid replying to Papandreou's allegations. We are preserving our fortitude. But it appears that our vigilant attitude is encouraging the Greeks."

The official also maintained that the Greeks are gradually spoiling the atmosphere of friendship through their oppressive actions against the Western Thracian Turks and subjecting the administrators of the Turkish trusts to the orders of Greek civil administrators.

It was for these reasons that Ambassador Oktay Cankardes, deputy secretary general of the political affairs department of the Foreign Ministry, summoned the secretary general of the Greek Embassy in Ankara to his office on Saturday, despite the fact that it was the weekend, and handed him a note. The Greek Embassy official had a lengthy talk with Cankardes and left the Foreign Ministry at 1330.

Although no official statement has been issued, sources have said that for the Greek Embassy secretary general to be called to the Foreign Ministry on a weekend, there must be "an important reason." They have also stated that the length of the meeting was significant

The authorities concerned have stated that the Turkish seismic ship Hora had searched for oil in the international waters close to the eastern side of Thasos, where the Greeks have started prospecting for oil. They added: "Our ship obtained positive results during its search in that area, but it has not begun to prospect for oil. Prospecting for oil in the same area by the Greeks now will greatly increase tension. Nevertheless, we will wait for the Greek reply to our note. We will then assess the official reply."

The authorities have stated that the Greeks have violated the Bern agreement by beginning to prospect for oil in the international waters of the Aegean Sea and that from now on Turkey will not consider itself bound by the Bern agreement either.

According to the Bern agreement, signed between Turkey and Greece in 1976, both countries pledged to refrain from searching for oil beyond the continental shelves until the borders of the continental shelves of both countries are definitely determined. Turkey says this agreement is now being violated.

PAPERS APPRAISE STATE OF RELATIONS WITH FRG

[Text] Ankara, 9 Mar (AA) -- Talks in Tehran between a top-level Turkish delegation and Iranian officials on ways of boosting the two-way trade and economic relations are played to the maximum by Tuesday's national papers. But other papers are concerned with the deterioration in relations between Turkey and West Germany. Mehmet Barlas of MILLIYET writes that the issue at stake is no longer the Turkish workers, but the Turkish minority in West German. He says that Germans have started to shout loud and clear that they do not want the Turks in their country any more.

This is a communal reaction and both sides should be blamed for its eruption, he says. He notes that Ankara and Bonn should work out a formula for the issue before the anti-Turkish stand turns into a hysteria and a racial problem.

GUNAYDIN reports from West Germany that one Turk was found dead and two others wounded in a German city in the latest outburst of anti-Turkish hysteria in the Federal Republic. It also reports the latest developments on the West German consular official in Istanbul and says that Istanbul martial law authorities have launched an investigation into the insulting remarks of the German.

MINISTER DENIES COUNTRY'S ANTI-IRAN ACTIVITIES

[Text] State Minister and Acting Foreign Minister Ilhan Oztrak has said that Turkey has only feelings of friendship and affinity for brotherly Iran and that it would never allow activities within Turkey's borders that might harm Iran. Oztrak issued a statement in view of an increased number of reports on this issue that have appeared in the foreign and local press.

Oztrak pointed out that relations with Iran had recently improved, recalling that State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal was now in Iran. Oztrak added: Consequently, the fact that such reports are being repeated especially now show that the press is becoming a tool, unknowingly or knowingly, of certain circles which have certain aims.

It is also irresponsible on the part of the press of certain friendly countries to lay the groundwork for the rumors being propagated by others against our country. Relations between the two countries are increasingly strengthening. Certain circles that are trying to damage this relationship are concocting deliberate gossip. It is natural that our reasonable Iranian friends will not believe this gossip. The mutual confidence we have in each other constitutes one of the most important guarantees for the development of relations between our two friendly and brotherly countries.

Oztrak recalled that Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu had recently categorically denied similar unfound rumors.

GUNES APPLAUDS U.S. ENVOY'S REMARKS ON TURKEY

NC090803 Istanbul GUNES in Turkish 4 Mar 82 pp 1, 10

[Editorial by Guneri Civaoglu: "The Message of the U.S. Ambassador"]

[Text] The press conference held by U.S. Ambassador Robert Strausz-Hupe yesterday is very interesting, for, according to foreign policy traditions in Ankara, press conferences by ambassadors are extremely rare. The U.S. ambassador held a press conference on the first day of his arrival, and, by appearing before the Turkish public again, he has broken with tradition.

If we are to comment on Strausz-Hupe's press conference from a point of view of form, we see that unlike other ambassadors, the new ambassador prefers open, popular diplomacy and the maintenance of give-and-take relations with the Foreign Ministry to secret diplomacy. If the press conference is evaluated from a point of view of timing within a larger framework, it can be said that the United States is on Turkey's side on these two issues:

1. The attitudes recently adopted by Greek Prime Minister Papandreou.

2. Prevention of developments stemming from anti-Turkish attitudes in such international forums as the EEC and the Council of Europe.

Truly, by saying that "the solution of the Cyprus dispute should be sought in the bilateral negotiations and that the United States opposes the internationalization of this issue." Ambassador Strausz-Hupe has dealt a significant blow to Papandreou's efforts in recent weeks. As is known, Papandreou's aim is to spread the belief that the Cyprus intercommunal talks have reached a deadlock and to shift the issue to international platforms. We see that the United States is directly opposed to this formula.

Another message from Ambassador Strausz-Hupe to Papandreou is that the United States is worried on behalf of NATO about the anxiety felt over the recent behavior of Greece and some Western European countries. The ambassador's words in this respect are very clear: "From the point of view of NATO's internal harmony, we are worried about the differences that have cropped up on the relations between Turkey and the European allies." The United States has reminded both Greece and the Council of Europe as well as the EEC countries that we are in the same defense system and that any cracks in NATO might be handicaps from their point of view also.

The U.S. ambassador reinforced his message to the same circles by stating that "the United States believes the military government in Turkey is devoted to a political system based on elections."

The U.S. ambassador expressed the opinion that speculation in the Council of Europe and the EEC about a Turkey which is implementing a timetable for transition to democracy should be terminated. Undoubtedly, the ambassador timed his messages very well. Moreover, using this press conference as an opportunity, he also uttered some words in the way of winning the sympathy of Turkish public opinion. For example, he pointed out that in evaluating U.S. aid, not only directly extended aid but also indirect contributions should be taken into consideration. He thus stressed the increases, which have risen by 100 percent. He also announced that the United States has not suggested in any way that Turkey should participate in the Rapid Deployment Force that is being created as a strike force in the Middle East, and added that aid has been increased without asking for anything in return.

Unlike the past, the United States is not displaying the image of the "ugly" and the "inconsiderate." The United States can make positive contributions to a Turkish foreign policy which skillfully maintains a sensitive balance between the superpowers and which takes good care of its own interests amid the special characteristics of the region.

OIL PURCHASES FROM LIBYA, IRAN, IRAQ EXPLAINED

NC080804 Istanbul GUNES in Turkish 3 Mar 82 pp 1, 10

[Text] Tripoli (GUNES) -- The first positive response to the plans of the Turkish state and private sector establishments to obtain crude oil from Libya, Iran and Iraq against Turkish merchandise and to sell it in the free world market has come from Libya. Following the explanation given to the Libyan authorities by Ekrem Pakdemirli, director of the department for the implementation of incentives and director general of the Ipras refinery, the Libyan Council of Ministers met and decided to provide Turkey with as much crude oil as it wants against goods from Turkey.

According to reports, following the adoption of this decision by the Libyan Council of Ministers, the first initiative came from the export companies and the banks, which are the two private sectors of Libya. These two private sectors have held advance meetings with responsible officials of the Oil Ministry in an effort to determine the quantity and price of the oil to be purchased by Turkey.

On the other hand, the payment of the money the Libyan Government owes Turkish exporters has been subjected to a plan. According to this plan, $95 million that Libya will earn from selling crude oil to Turkey will be deducted from the $132 million Libya owes Turkish exporters. The balance of $37 million will be met from the crude oil Libya will provide. This amount will be paid to the Turkish exporters in Turkish currency by the Turkish Central Bank.

The firms of the Turkish private sector have already taken the second step, which concerns the plan for obtaining crude oil from Iran and Iraq and marketing it themselves. Ekrem Pakdemirli, director of the department for the implementation of incentives, who has returned from Libya, will soon be leaving for Iran for advance talks with the responsible official of the Iranian Oil Ministry. Turgut Ozal, who will be visiting Iran with an entourage of 70, will discuss the question of buying and selling oil. Similar proposals will be submitted to the Iraqi authorities.

FOREIGN MINISTER QUESTIONED BY ISTANBUL PAPER

First Installment

NC041220 Istanbul GUNES in Turkish 28 Feb 82 p 4

[First of two installments of interview with Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen by Suneyt Arcayurek -- date and place not given]

[Text] Toward the end of our conversation with Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, we dwelt on the atmosphere which has suddenly become tense after the government changes in Athens. Turkmen explained Turkey's determined attitude in delicate words peculiar to diplomats, stressing the representations we have made to our friends. I asked him: "Do you think your hope that the Papandreou administration will not commit an error of miscalculation has been correctly understood?" He replied calmly: "It is impossible not to understand."

After summing up Turkey's position in view of the Madrid conference on the international political situation, certain important points emerged from the answer he gave to our questions. Turkmen stated that according to calculations made in Europe, it was established that in July 1981 the Soviet Union possessed 250 medium-range SS-20 missiles and that each of these missiles is equipped with 3 warheads, which means that the Soviet Union has 750 nuclear warheads. Moreover, he said, the Soviet Union also possesses older SS-4 and SS-5 model strike weapons ready for use.

We said NATO is planning to install medium-range missiles in Germany, Italy, Britain, Belgium and the Netherlands. From a geographical point of view, Turkey is NATO's soft underbelly. Assuming the Soviet Union launches an attack, why is the installation of these missiles in Turkey not considered?

Turkmen responded: "The installation of these weapons in Turkey has never been discussed. It has been considered more suitable that they be positioned in NATO countries outside Turkey. It has never been suggested to us that these missiles should be installed in Turkey also. The absence of these weapons from our country does not by any means weaken NATO's deterrence and our defense. NATO's deterrent strength is not regional; it is a unified whole. When the center is strong, we benefit from the deterrent force it creates. Because when we are attacked all of NATO will go into action."

Saying that the United States has introduced a new approach to the matter, known as the "zero option," Turkmen added: "If the Soviet Union agrees to remove all the missiles it has installed in Europe, the United States pledges to abandon this project in the NATO countries."

Turkmen added: "Zero option does not mean merely transferring the missiles from one place to another, because a vast number of these missiles are SS-20 missiles, and even if you carried them behind the Urals they are capable of striking Europe...."

Stating that events in Poland have adversely affected East-West relations, the foreign minister added that the United States had made certain specific demands in a "determined manner," such as the release of political offenders, the resumption of the dialogue with the church and the trade unions and the lifting of martial law in Poland.

The United States has decided to implement economic measures against the Soviet Union and demands that its allies do the same because of Poland. When I pointed this out, Turkmen replied: "The United States has not stopped exporting grain to the Soviet Union, a commodity it needs most. No such decision has yet been announced."

The foreign minister continued: "Another matter that concerns NATO is a threat facing southwest Asia. The Afghanistan affair has brought this matter into the limelight. The instability in the Middle East is an element that renders the potential of the Soviet threat even more serious. You may say, 'You are talking about the potential Soviet threat and yet argue that our relations with our northern neighbor are stable, and then pose this question: Isn't this contradictory?' Then he answered his own question: "No, there is no contradiction, because it is NATO's principle to maintain stable relations with the Soviet Union and to maintain a deterrent force at the same time. Both these principles are being observed. In our present-day world we have no alternative than to admit that balance of power is the only guarantee of peace."

Stating that we have maintained "good mutual relations with the Soviet Union over the years," Turkmen's concluding words attracted attention: "From this point of view, the articles which have recently appeared in the Soviet press have naturally grieved us...."

Well, the foreign minister did not say so, but the prominent Soviet newspaper PRAVDA continued to carry anti-Turkish articles, while certain "radios which act as Moscow's trumpeter" have increased their provocative behavior.

Tomorrow: The United States or Europe?

Second Installment

NC050903 Istanbul GUNES in Turkish 1 Mar 82 p 4

[Second of two parts of interview with Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen]

[Text] It has been argued recently in Ankara that Turkey is pursuing a policy favoring the United States over Europe. I believe this is one of the issues on which Turkmen is dwelling seriously. Responding to a question in this respect, Turkmen said: "...Bringing up such an argument does not serve Turkey's interests. Preference is out of the question. Those who put forward such an argument are those who believe it would be in their interests if Turkey had to make such a preference. Our true friends in Europe want us to be on good terms with the United States in the same way the United States wants us to be on good terms with the European countries."

In stressing that Turkey "is pursuing a multilateral foreign policy" Turkmen did not neglect to say that "the policy maintained toward the Islamic countries has a distinct and valuable place in the multilateral policy."

Unfortunately, however, the Turkish delegate to the United Nations, Coskun Kirca, abstained from voting on the resolution urging Israel to withdraw from the Golan Heights, and this has led to discussions and comments both at home and abroad, since this attitude is in such contrast to the way Ankara views the Islamic countries.

Kirca was criticized for acting without consulting Ankara. This is what Turkmen had to say on this matter: "...Certain evaluations made in New York created some doubts in our minds; not about the provisions in the resolution on the Golan Heights, but about elements that certain other paragraphs contained...." Turkmen added: "We truly regret that we were unable to vote in favor of this resolution, for our basic policy and behavior in the United Nations is to support the Arabs as much as we can. This policy will not change and it is not fair that it should."

Responding to the question, "Did Kirca act on his own?" Turkmen said: "There is no question of his acting on his own, but as the text of such resolutions keeps changing up to the last moment, delegates are given their discretion. The delegate used this right within the framework of our policy and instructions. It is not correct to say our delegate to the United Nations exceeded his instructions...."

Later we dwelt on traditional subjects. Turkmen said the United States has not dropped the idea of forming a Rapid Deployment Force, and added: "Our participation in this force has never come up, nor has the United States made the slightest demand on us to extend facilities to this force."

Turkmen stated that not only the NATO countries but also the countries supposed to be within the new border have to consent to the extension of NATO's borders.

Referring to the U.S. secretary of state's visit, Turkmen said: "Haig was supposed to come at the first opportunity," and he used an appropriate definition of the "emergence of the monpolist attitude" after the government changes in Athens. He said: "...Athens' reasoning is that 'other peoples' rights begin where mine ends.'"

Turkmen concluded by saying that unilateral actions will not be permitted, and recalled Turkey's advice against a possible error of miscalculation.

I asked him whether this advice will be understood or not, and he said: "It is impossible not to be understood."

We hope that is what will happen.

GREEK 'SECRET DOCUMENT' ON THRACIAN TURKS QUOTED

NC091100 Istanbul GUNES in Turkish 4 Mar 82 pp 1, 10

[Cuneyt Arcayurek report]

[Text] Ankara -- In his recent visit to Cyprus, Greek Prime Minister Papandreou pledged to rouse the Greeks throughout the world and launch a crusade against Turkey and the Turks. Not content just with this, he also spoke in the Greek Cypriot House of Representatives and stressed at a press conference before his departure that he "would seek to vindicate the rights of the 100,000 Greeks who emigrated from Istanbul to Greece." With that tendency to boast that socialists possess, Papandreou kept repeating "the value" he attaches to "mankind and to human beings." This stemmed from a desire to decorate his personal shopwindow.

Papandreou was referring to mankind. He was using humane feelings as the main basis for his policy. But what are the secret plans his country and he himself are trying to implement against the Muslim Turkish minority in Western Thrace, whose rights are assured under the Lausanne treaty?

Our publication in Turkey today for the first time of a "secret document" will expose the oppressive measures imposed on the Western Thracian Turks by Greece and the secret plans involved.

The folloiwng is the first paragraph of a "top secret and personal" document, issued by the political affairs department of the Greek Foreign Ministry under Reference No 2 DF1105, 3/2-25, on the subject of the Western Thracian Turks:

"The carefully chosen personnel of the Salonika Pedagogical Academy, which was founded in 1966, has been the foundation stone of the policy being implemented against the Muslim minority. This academy has been functioning for the past 10 years and has yielded encouraging results in the plans to eliminate the Muslim minority in the next 8 or 10 years."

We conclude from this document that Greece has planned to "eliminate" the Western Thracian Turks in the next 8 to 10 years. This private pedagogical academy, known as SOPA, which Greece established as a means and as a foundation stone of its policy to exterminate or Hellenize our kinsmen in Greece, is being run by the Greek secret service, known as the KIP. This organization headed by educationist groups, selected and trained by the Greek secret service, has been active in "covertly serving Greece's interests."

The second paragraph of the document clearly exposes this aim. It says: "...Members of the minority who have graduated from the private pedagogical academy should be encouraged to undertake, in stages, the training of the minority in Western Thrace. These people should be ready to implement the minority policy. With the help of SOPA's educational program, Greek educationists, who are fully familiar with the philosophy of our policy and with the way of thinking and structure of the Muslims, should be positioned in SOPA, which will operate covertly in our interests."

The third paragraph is as follows: "Pedagogical elements, who will conform to this situation, who have experience in their approach to the Muslim community and to their way of thinking, and who are loyal to the national idea, should be employed.

And finally this sentence proves the existence of cooperation between Greek officialdom and the Greek secret service: "The selection of the training staff has been undertaken by the secret service (KIP)...."

The subsequent lines quote the Foreign Ministry evaluation of the work of SOPA as "...the results obtained so far have been found to be satisfactory by the secret service...."

The subsequent paragraphs of the secret document dwells on activities concerning the extermination of the Western Thracian Turks or their assimilation within the structure of the Greek nation. The aim is to obstruct people from occupying high positions in Greek society and at the same time defend the rights of the Turkish minority as stipulated in treaties. Graduates of this academy are forcibly placed by the Greek authorities in the Turkish minority schools. Despite the strong reaction and resistance of our kinsmen there, teachers of the academy are pressed both morally and materially by the Greek school inspectors to go to the Turkish villages, their number gradually being increased with each term.

This is the "secret" method practised by Greece against Turks despite the Lausanne treaty, a method which can hardly be described as being inspired by humane feelings and sentiments.

On the strength of the documents in our possession, we can cite some of the acts of oppression the Greeks are inflicting on the Western Thracian Turks through their local authorities: They are adversely influencing Greek public opinion by developing propaganda to the effect that the Istanbul Greeks are being oppressed by Turkey. Officials in government offices are openly threatening the Turks by saying, "There is no life for you here; leave Greece." Transport vehicles belonging to Turks are either prevented from circulating, confiscated or destroyed, together with places of business.

Greek wholesalers refuse to sell their goods to Turkish shopkeepers. Banks refuse to grant agricultural credits to Turkish villages. Turkish business places are heavily taxed. The sale or transfer of immovable property from Turk to Turk is prohibited, while certain facilities are extended to Greeks buying Turkish property. Roads are built across Turkish property, and Turkish property is expropriated against minimal payment, to say nothing of the oppression to which the authorities subject Turkish teachers. The efforts of Turkish students to acquire a university education are undermined. The names of Turkish schools are changed and teaching hours reduced.

The Turks are not allowed to have social organizations. They are prohibited from listening to Turkish radio or watching Turkish television. Turkish records are banned. Turks are not allowed to build new buildings or repair old ones.

On the other hand, Greece is fully prepared to give passports to Turks who are willing to emigrate to other countries. They are even provided with transportation facilities as far as the border at very low cost. It is suggested to them that they can go to Germany as workers.

These and similar oppressive methods are still being used against the Turks in Greece.

We wonder if Greece and the honorable Papandreou, who boasted about humaneness in his speeches, have anything to say about these facts based on Greek documents?

CSCE FAILS TO ACHIEVE CONSENSUS ON NEXT STAGE

LD051414 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1230 GMT 5 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Something unprecedented is happening at the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe being held in Madrid. In the year and a half that the conference has been underway, it has always been possible to obtain approval for the agenda covering the subsequent working period of the conference. At today's plenary session, Switzerland said there is no consensus. Let me repeat; this is the first time this has happened. It could be serious because if there is no consensus the 35 delegations will remain in plenary session and it is not known exactly what could happen.

GENERAL TESTIFIES KING AWARE OF 'CORTES PUTSCH'

[Text] Madrid, 8 Mar (AFP) -- The top-ranking accused in the "Cortes putsch" military trial testified here today he was certain that King Juan Carlos was aware of the plot to overthrow the government.

This was repeated several times by Lieutenant-General Jaime Milans del Bosch, first of the accused to testify in the court-martial stemming from the abortive takeover of parliament on February 23, 1981, by a civil guard unit under Lieutenant-Colonel Antonio Tejero.

Gen Milans del Bosch's testimony followed a wrangle between defence and prosecution, the latter contending that Col Tejero should be the first to testify. But the defence successfully argued that its "sacred rights" would be breached if the traditional hierarchy principle of court martials were ignored.

Gen Milan del Bosch said there had been at least three military groups -- colonels, lieutenant-colonels, and a Civil Guard group -- preparing violent action to correct what they saw as the grave national situation. He himself had done everything he could to stop the Tejero group, because a better solution had been put forward by the chief of staff, General Alfonso Armada.

Gen Milans del Bosch said that during a meal with Gen Armada, the chief of staff told him of a six-hour meeting with King Juan Carlos and Queen Sophia in which the King had said he had "had enough of" the then prime minister, Adolfo Suarez, and had decided to replace him. The King favored a civil government, the Queen a military one, according to Gen Armada.

Gen Milans del Bosch testified that he then did everything he could (?to) stop any violent anti-government action, because the "Armada solution" struck him as better, but there was no way of "stopping Tejero."

Gen Milans del Bosch said several times he was entirely convinced that the King was aware of the events that led up to the aborted putsch.

Asked about the identity of the anti-government colonels' group, Gen Milans del Bosch replied: "That, I shall never say."

NORDIC COUNCIL DELEGATES VIEW NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

PM081453 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 2 Mar 82 p 5

[Egil Sundar dispatch: "Nuclear-Free Zones in Nordic Council"]

[Text] Helsinki, 1 Mar -- The Norwegian delegation to the Nordic Council was unanimous in its view that the Nordic Council is not a suitable body in which to discuss foreign and security policy questions. But this does not mean that we cannot cooperate in the all-overshadowing task of securing peace, Norwegian Labor Party chairman Gro Harlem Brundtland said at Monday's general debate, stressing that the reduction of the nuclear threat to Europe and the Nordic community must have the highest priority on the political agenda.

"Cooperation on this most vital issue must find its place in the network of contacts we have between the Nordic countries and the Nordic governments," Brundtland stated, pointing out that because of their close cooperation the Nordic countries could also make positive contributions in international forums. For example, the United Nations special session will soon be dealing with the whole question of nuclear-free zones.

Swedish Nordic Council Presidium member Svante Lundkvist, a Social Democrat, said that the interest in preserving the Nordic countries' nuclear-free status should be able to make a positive contribution to the larger disarmament debate in Europe. It would be advantageous for the negotiations on arms limitations in Central Europe if these could be held against a background of certainty that Northern Europe will not be drawn into the arms spiral. Thus stability in the Nordic countries is important for other parts of Europe.

"Future discussion of the question of a Nordic nuclear-free zone will be deeply influenced by the widespread popular support the call has received in all the Nordic countries," Lundkvist said. In particular the support of the Nordic Trade Union and Political Workers' Movement for a Nordic nuclear-free zone is important in this context, Lundkvist said.

[Text] Introduction

The 24th PCF Congress is taking place in circumstances unprecedented in France's political history.

Giscard d'Estaing's defeat and the election of Francois Mitterrand to the presidency of the republic on 10 May 1981 and the left's victory in the June parliamentary elections ended 23 years of rightwing rule. For the first time in one-third of a century, Communist ministers are taking part in the government. A new period in the nation's life is beginning.

The PCF played its full part in the victory. The desire for change was the focal point of the campaign its members waged for the presidential election with their candidate Georges Marchais. Its votes made a decisive contribution to the 10 May victory and then to the election of a leftwing majority to the National Assembly.

The situation thus created is full of prospects but is complex and even contradictory.

The crisis is deep. The problems to be solved are vast. Capital's forces are determined to fight. Without constant and conscious intervention by the people's forces there will be no lasting progress. The serious electoral setback suffered by our party does not place it in the best position for contributing to that. At the same time, the reaction of rejecting Giscard's policy and the aspiration to overcome the crisis, the pledges made by the president of the republic, the role which our party plays, and the clearsightedness of the millions of workers who place their trust in it constitute real trump cards for progress.

In this situation the PCF, following the line laid down by its 22d and 23d congresses, has made an unambiguous choice: to take its full place in the new majority as it did in the victory; to use every opportunity to bring about the social, economic, and political changes necessary to start to steer the country out of the crisis and give it new impetus.

The PCF, weighting its increased responsibilities, is resolutely aiming at increasing its influence. it is determined to use its 24th congress to clearly perceive the reasons for its setback in order to start off again on a better footing, to highlight the full scope and implications of the crucial strategic choices of its last two congresses, and to consider in greater depth the political practice by which they can be implemented. It is doing this, aware that it is working for the country itself and in the conviction that the people's forces need a great communist party to change their fate on a lasting basis, in other words to progress via democracy toward a French brand of socialism.

I. The Lessons of the Recent Decades

The fact that leftwing victory went hand in hand with a major electoral setback for our party poses a major political question which concerns not only the Communists but the whole people's movement. To understand such a paradox, as our initial analyses have shown, it is, of course, necessary to make a critical examination of our battle for the presidential election and, more broadly, of the way in which the party has waged its battle since the 23d congress. But clarifying this requires a return to basics, and an examination of the overall trend of our history in recent decades, the changes in the situation which have posed unprecedented questions for us and the way in which we have answered them, in order to learn the essential political lessons.

1. A New Historical Age

The main fact is that, while honorably and efficiently facing the difficult tasks imposed by life, we took time, far too much time, in moving from strategic concepts which had proved themselves in the days of the popular front, the resistance and the liberation to the different concepts required by the far-reaching changes in the national and international facts of the revolutionary battle.

Changing France

Indeed, since the mid-fifties France has been changing.

First there was political change, characterized by the establishment of the Fifth Republic in 1958. Faced with acute internal and external problems, the French big bourgeoisie no longer found the institutional system of the Fourth Republic to be an adequate means of domination. It used the political crisis stemming from the Algerian war to break it.

The 1958 Constitution reduced the powers of the assemblies to the benefit of a non-omnipotent executive -- in other words, the parliamentary system was in fact replaced with a presidential system. In 1962 the decision to elect the president of the republic by universal suffrage -- allowing only the two leading candidates in the first round to fight the second round -- not only accentuated the personalization of power. It was a powerful factor in the bipolarization of French political life -- an attempt eventually to introduce the Anglo-Saxon practice of an alternation which is no threat to capital by pushing the revolutionary current to the fringes. We underestimated the serious threat which that new institutional mechanism posed to our party.

By this highly significant political change, the big bourgeoisie provided itself with the means it needed to more effectively guarantee both its domination and its profits.

The rapid rise of state monopoly capitalism after 1958 was accompanied by a veritable upheaval in French society. Material production almost quadrupled in the space of a generation and, being modernized and concentrated, it was strongly socialized. The dissolution of the traditional forms of the petit bourgeoisie in the cities and rural districts went hand in hand with a huge increase in wage-earning, which is now the condition of more than four-fifths of the working population. Millions of men, women and young people thus began to share, in varying degrees, the workers' experience of capitalist exploitation, action in support of claims and even trade union organization.

This development was closely connected with others: rural exodus and frantic urbanization at the expense of the workers, extension of education and a new segregating role in education, growth of sciences, technological changes and new forms of exploitation in the enterprise, high expansion of categories of workers like the semiskilled workers, technicians, white collar workers, influx of immigrant workers and massive influx of women into wage-earning activities. The scope and rapidity of those changes, the chain reactions they sparked off throughout national life disrupted the social balance, upset behavior and thinking, and that was accentuated by the expansion of new means of communication. In sharp contrast with the logic of profit and of intermonopoly competition, the growing possibilities for economic efficiency, improved living standards for the underprivileged and personal development were reflected in new aspirations for a new quality of work, and life, for justice, dignity and solidarity.

Faced with the growth in discontent and struggles, big capital gave an increasingly authoritarian twist to its state intervention in all spheres, while the demand for participation, responsibility and real democracy was growing.

Seriously affected by the loss of its colonial empire, forced to redeploy in search of other spheres of influence and profit within the framework of a reallocation of imperialist tasks, big capital pushed for European and Atlantic integration after De Gaulle's departure. But that destructive redeployment highlighted the now glaring contradiction between the nation's interest and that of the multinationals and increased the relevance of the ideas of democratic nationalization and cooperation in the mutual interest of peoples.

Thus, by trying to reshape France according to its class interests, the big bourgeoisie destablized the whole of society. It accentuated the radical contradiction between the new production forces and the old social relationships. And it expanded the circle of forces capable of liberating themselves from it. That is the source of the general crisis which we entered in the early seventies: In our country capitalism is reaching its historical limits. It is less and less able to control a social development fundamentally characterized by the challenges of the scientific and technical revolution, the needs for social justice and human emancipation, and the aspirations for progress and peace in the world. Today the omnipotence of the profit law means increasing waste, the sacrificing of live labor, the abandonment of industrial, agricultural, and intellectual potential. The deterioration of the environment, increased authoritarianism, public demoralization, regional asphyxia and national abasement. Preserving it proves incompatible with the country's harmonious development.

All the changes which have taken place over the past few decades can be summed up by this major fact: Capitalism's days are over; socialism is the order of the day.

The fifth Republic was only 10 years old when the events of May and June 1968 suddenly revealed what was beginning to develop in the depths of French society. These events were the first great confrontation between the mass of workers and the power of the monopolies and they demonstrated, rather confusedly, the nascent power of the people's movement, which aspires to liberate social relations and personal life, urges a reconciliation between intellectual and physical work and self-management, and calls into question the whole old order. They made it possible to glimpse that socialism was the only answer to the nation's problems -- a socialism which had to be in tune with our times in all respects, a French brand of socialism. Thus the country's entry into a new historical period posed completely unprecedented questions for our party, ordering it to give our people a political outlook in keeping with those changes and aspirations.

A Changing World

The need to renew our strategic thinking was stronger because France was not the only country which was changing. Its changes took place in the context of those which affected the world from the late fifties. The retreat of the cold war and the first signs of peaceful coexistence which characterize those years bore witness to the turning point in the balance of class forces at international level. The extensions and growing influence of socialism, the collapse of the colonial system, the struggles for a better life and for democracy in the capitalist countries, the rise of liberation movements, like the Women's Liberation Movement and the Young People's Liberation Movement for a Different Life, were all dimensions of the changes which were coming about.

For the first time in the history of this century, it is not world war which has given birth to major changes. The change in the balance of forces has prevented imperialism from seeking a remedy to its contradictions and its weakening in a general conflict. It has placed the preservation of peace within the scope of peoples' action. Its confirmation through constant tension and even partial setbacks has opened up new prospects for revolutionary struggle. While foreign or civil war had hitherto characterized the birth of all the socialist countries, a peaceful transition to socialism now seems a real possibility in some countries. That is true of France. Those changes made it even more necessary than even to adopt an original approach to the ways and means of socialist revolution.

The 20th CPSU Congress raised that question back in 1956.

By condemning Stalin's "personality cult," by revealing the mistakes and crimes committed in his days, beyond the immense shock produced among the communists and public opinion, it made it necessary to critically reexamine our party's activity and the real state of affairs in the socialist countries. Even more directly, by drawing from the analysis of the international situation conclusions favorable to peaceful coexistence and by taking up, in that context, Lenin's idea that all peoples will attain socialism but each in original forms, it revived thinking throughout the communist movement on the diversity of national paths to socialism.

That question had not remained foreign to our party. Maurice Thorez' interview in THE TIMES in 1946, in particular, put forward the idea that the French people could envisage other paths for the march toward socialism than that followed by the Russian Communists. But that indication did no more than recall a principle. The cold war, the situation at that time in the international communist movement, the state of our theoretical and political thinking made it impossible to take it further.

In a radically changing situation the 20th CPSU Congress helped lend great relevance to that thinking on national paths to socialism. During the months and years which followed, the persistence of faults in the socialist countries, which it had begun to analyze in a critical way, the problems stemming from their development and the growing diversity of solutions and experiments at a time when the problem of the political outlook was being forcefully raised in France confirmed that it was vital to approach this crucial question in a new way. It was necessary to go beyond the dogmatic view of a model of socialism built elsewhere which we would simply have to transpose, and to define in practical terms original paths to an original kind of socialism in a country like ours and in the conditions of our time.

An Unprecedented Strategic Stake

Thus our party was faced with a strategic question of unprecedented significance.

Each Communist must be fully aware of it: For the first time in France socialism is the order of the day, not as a distant and hence abstract prospect but as the practical answer required by our society's pressing problems.

It really is an unprecedented question because it concerns a peaceful transition to socialism by one of the most developed capitalist countries with national characteristics and in international conditions totally different from those experienced by the countries which have hitherto made the transition to socialism.

Solving that problem was particularly urgent -- it is easier to assess that today -- since the political system introduced in 1958 and the election of the president of the republic by universal suffrage now posed the question of power at the highest level in profoundly different terms. To maintain and more especially to increase its place in national life, to be credible as a candidate for the supreme responsibilities, our party had to offer an overall political outlook which was fully convincing and adapted to the situation in France, enabling it to rally support and lead the struggles for the revolutionary transformation of society.

What was to be decisive for our party in the past few decades was its ability to create a French path to a French brand of socialism.

2. The Party's Answers

What were the party's answers throughout that essential period to a question of such scope?

A Combative and Constructive Role

At the time when that question was beginning to be posed in an acute way, the party had to face dramatic political situations: the Algerian war, the coup of 13 May 1958 and the introduction of personal power. It defended the interests of the workers and of France, struggled to safeguard democratic freedoms and shouldered its international responsibilities toward peoples struggling for their independence -- and it did so by waging particularly intensive battles in the service of those just causes.

In 1958 it was the only party to oppose the accession of the new government -- an opposition for which it paid with a major electoral setback. Without allowing itself to be overwhelmed by the difficulties, it immediately assumed the task of rallying the necessary forces to the people's movement to launch an offensive, win back positions and obtain democratic changes. It was in keeping with that fundamental line that it set itself the goal of leftwing union behind a joint government program and, without sparing any effort, finally made possible the conclusion of such an agreement in 1972. It then constantly acted to make the joint program a success.

It combined that intensive political activity with an effort to analyze and with theoretical innovations, anxious to remove one after the other all the obstacles on the path to change. In 1963, at the Central Committee meeting in Ivry, Maurice Thorez unambiguously rejected the idea of the single party system as a precondition for the move to socialism and for building socialism. At the 17th congress Waldeck Rochet strengthened the link between the struggle for democracy and the struggle for socialism. In 1966 the Argenteuil Central Committee meeting developed a more general innovating approach to ideological and cultural questions. At the same time the Choisy study meeting on state monopoly capitalism renewed the Marxist analysis of the development of capitalism and of French society.

Following the events of May and June 1968, that strategic advance was accentuated in the Champigny Manifesto (December 1968), then, after an initial diagnosis of the crisis as early as 1971, took shape in Georges Marchais' book "Democratic Challenge" [Defi Democratique] (1973). But it was only the 22d congress in 1976 -- extended and enriched by the work of the 23d congress -- which began to define the full scope of the prospect of a French brand of socialism and the corresponding democratic path.

Throughout that period, therefore, our party made a combative and constructive contribution to the struggles for social progress and freedom and to the cause of national independence and internationalism. It developed new ideas and, above all that, it developed change. When we say that it played its full part in the left's victory in May and June 1981, it is not just 8 months of campaigning to defeat Giscard d'Estaing but more than 20 years of efforts to promote a different policy which justify that assertion.

A Historical Lag

Nonetheless, when we look back over this last 25 years we must admit that our party delayed too much in starting to explore the paths to socialism and the very forms of socialism suited to present-day France. It took us around 20 years to give this decisive question a comprehensive and appropriate answer in 1976 -- an answer which we lacked after 1958 and especially in 1968, a lack which was damaging.

Of course, this "1956 lag" highlighted by the 23d congress does not mean that history passed us by. Those years were certainly not wasted years, but what should hold our full attention today is the obstacle they posed for the future. We passed through the changes of the sixties and seventies with a real concern for understanding but without succeeding in obtaining an in-depth grasp of them. Even our most notable advances, which were for a long time imprisoned by a generally old-fashioned view, remained partly ineffectual because they were not integrated into the coherent strategy which gives them their full scope.

Of course, it was an immense task and we were spared no difficulty. Nonetheless, at the time when new forces were beginning to move confusedly toward a different choice of society we failed to say early and clearly enough: France needs socialism and this is the kind of original socialism we are proposing. This is the root of our strategic historical lag.

Our whole approach was affected by that, and particularly our policy of union. Since the stakes of the class struggle were being radically changed, that brought an equally radical change not in the permanent urgent need for union, of course, but in the content should be given, the form in which it should be brought about.

In order to open up prospects after 1958, our party, reactivating the traditional form of union for which the popular front was still the prestigious model, took as its objective the conclusion of a fundamental and comprehensive political agreement with the PS.

To do that was to misunderstand the fundamental difference between the periods. The world's development, the changes in French society and then the development of its crisis called for fundamental changes. Moreover, it was because we realized this that we successfully made every effort to give that agreement a really transforming content.

But since the joint program was concluded on that basis in 1972, the illusion arose that the crucial question of the nature of the necessary changes had been settled in advance, that the task of rallying the people's forces round high-level solutions had been solved and that the PS itself had been won over to such objectives.

Whatever efforts we might have made, that ran counter to our battle to make the masses fully aware of the nature and scope of the changes to be made and the extent of the struggles to impose them. And that made people underestimate the importance of the workers' action -- which was even more important since progress toward socialism presupposes their participation at all levels of responsibility. In short, the preferential search for and then conclusion of an agreement at the top, ahead of the real state of the people's movement, created illusions which paralyzed its initiative.

At the same time, precisely because it had a transforming content, the joint program blotted out the difference between the two parties and sowed illusions about the PS. In a context in which everything encouraged the bipolarization of political life to our detriment, that encouraged people to vote Socialist, which even Communist voters identified with a "useful" vote. And it also led to similar actions by the workers in the new wage-earning strata, who were attracted to the left by the joint program but whom we found it difficult to win over to our ideas because of our delay in defining the prospect of democratic and self-managing socialism.

They were prompted to do that in particular because, in face of the arduous problem which the presidential election mechanism posed for us, we twice thought we could overcome the difficulty by abandoning the idea of putting forward a Communist candidate: In 1965 in order to encourage agreement with the PS and then -- after its rejecton of our proposal for a joint candidate in 1969 -- in 1974 because there was an agreement. Thus we ourselves gave credence to the idea that our party should abandon its own role to make victory possible, that the path to change depended on its effacement in favor of a dominant PS.

The joint program undoubtedly had positive aspects. It bears witness to our constant efforts to achieve union. It popularized some great objectives of social change and led the PS to take account of them, although within the framework of its own strategy. That is now still one of the points of support for our struggles. But, given the nature of the problem, it had negative effects, as the 23d congress demonstrated. It crystallized the aspiration to change but hindered awareness of its content and its conditions. It favored progress by the left but at our expense.

The other political forces benefited greatly from that situation. The big bourgeoisie, which was aware of what was at stake, aimed principally at weakening us by every possible means while sparing the PS in order more effectively to achieve consensus on its policy. The PS, which was forced to learn from its collapse in the late sixties, finally accepted our proposal of a joint program with the avowed objective of taking millions of votes from our party in order to create a balance of forces favorable to its own plans.

In the final analysis it is all that which makes it possible to understand the complex development of our electoral influence: a considerable improvement after 1958, without however regaining the 1956 level, a continual erosion after 1973 and, in the most difficult election for us, a serious setback in 1981.

Thus, despite the aptness of our concerns and the vigor of our efforts, despite our awareness, from 1972 on, of the problems involved in the conclusion of the joint program and our attempts to solve them after 1972, the form of union in which our action was enclosed produced difficulties which could not be overcome.

The weakness of the people's reaction to the abandonment of the joint program by the PS and the difficulty of making many workers see its significance fully highlighted the extent of the illusions created by that form of union, and the masses' inadequate control of change.

The joint program, which was concluded for 5 years -- the length of a parliamentary term -- in 1972, had to be updated in 1977.

We approached those negotiations with the sole concern of maintaining its line and fundamental provisions without any excesses and of achieving victory for the left in the March 1978 elections. But the PS approached them in an entirely different spirit. Our election setback was not yet on the scale it wanted. The difficulties which appeared in 1977 stem from that: from the PS' desire -- expressed in particular at its Nantes congress -- to obtain, by weakening our party, a balance of forces which was much more favorable to it and gave it a free hand, either by forcing us to capitulate or by breaking with us and abandoning the joint program.

We were right not to capitulate. Allowing the joint program to be robbed of its most transforming provisions would have meant giving our own sober backing to the idea that it is possible to emerge from the crisis and resolve problems in the working people's interest without implementing essential economic and political reforms -- that is, the very illusion which must be dispelled if progress is to be made. Far from preserving the party's influence, this would have helped to call its decisive nature into question. Everything which went before shows that this would certainly have aggravated still further the fundamental difficulties we were facing and annulled the results of our initial efforts to relieve these difficulties. There was no responsible alternative to fighting to try to overcome the obstacle.

That is what we resolved to do -- and in the most difficult conditions, at a time when the impatience for change and the persistence of illusions made it possible to pass off as pernicious minor polemics the fundamental questions which we were raising about the real orientation of the PS and the essential conditions for emerging from the crisis.

The efforts we made to implement our strategy had profound effects which cannot be measured solely by electoral results. Without our fierce battle against the ideas of the inevitability of sacrifices for working people and the need for monopolist redeployment, Giscardian consensus and Social Democratic management of the crisis; without our campaign for a clear, firm union around the essential democratic transformations; without our proposals on essential issues such as social inequalities, temporary work, the role of the sciences and technologies, the need to produce French goods, the diversified development of energy sources, including nuclear power, nationalizations, regionalization and much more; without the concrete struggle we initiated to halt the policy of national decline and promote action by the people against the dramatic effects of the crisis -- who can suppose that the situation today would offer real opportunities for progress?

But when the election fell due, at a very difficult time for our party, when all the negative consequences of the preceding period were still making themselves felt, we did not succeed in getting sufficient extensive understanding from the working people. In a climate of merciless ideological warfare, some of our initiatives even provided the opportunity for the falsification of our positions and our real goals by the media. We saw this, for instance, in the struggle we had to cast light on PS policy and on the union, the need for which we never ceased to assert; over our rightful attitude on the Afghanistan question; over our efforts -- quite rightly giving priority to this matter, without ever being exclusive -- in favor of the most underprivileged working people.

This is also true of our stance on the situation of immigrant workers or on the ravages of drugs, a stance which was not always faultless, not always free of a certain tendency to want to resolve problems on behalf of the interested parties, even when we were courageously attacking questions whose urgency everyone must recognize today. But these faults and the part they played in our election results can only be understood on the basis of the major factor: the impossibility for us, in a short space of time and under pressure of events, to unfold all the novelty of the strategy of the 22d and 23d congresses, which ran counter to attitudes which had long become entrenched and were emphasized by the logic of the joint program.

It was ultimately our laggardness in elaborating this strategy which was to blame. This must be our starting point in gaining a better understanding of our serious electoral setback.

Developing in Full the Orientation of the 22d and 23d Congresses

Those are the lessons we draw from this essential period.

We do this without evasion, as is appropriate for a responsible party like ours, in the desire to analyze as lucidly as possible the heart of the matter and to find the new responses required by new problems. This is our way of remaining faithful to our party's exceptional heritage.

For without the party, without its fidelity to the revolutionary choice of the Tours congress, without what the struggles, sacrifices and quest of several generations of Communists have made of it, the democratic path to socialism would be inconceivable for our country. The historical raison d'etre of the revolutionary party of the working class, far from declining, is more urgent than ever. To those who pretend to wonder what is the purpose of the PCF, we can reply with the utmost assurance: Its purpose is to open up concrete prospects for progress toward socialism in this great capitalist country, France.

The chief lesson of the last 25 years is the absolute need for our party to give the people's hopes the prospect without which they will remain no more than dreams; that of the French brand of socialism.

The 22d and 23d congresses laid the foundations for this strategy.

The 22d congress, in abandoning, for France, the idea of the dictatorship of the proletariat, released our strategic action from the concept of a unique model of socialism. Since then, the ideas accumulated in the preceding period have been able to bear fruit in full measure and the indissoluble relationship between socialism and democracy has been able to display its fertility in the soil of national realities and the opportunities offered by the development of the modern world. That was and will remain the historical significance of the 22d congress.

The 23d congress deepened and enriched these ideas. Drawing essential lessons from the collapse of the joint program, it dissociated our political practice from the form of union born from the experiences of the popular front and the liberation, which was itself tending to act as a model for us. It thus brought about an accord between our concept of socialism and our concept of the path which leads to it. The strategic innovation of the 22d congress, linking socialism and democracy intimately, led to the revolutionary idea of the democratic advance to socialism, the path of self-management.

Nothing in our critical consideration of the historical period which has elapsed and its more recent developments leads us to call into question this cohesive group of theoretical and political innovations. On the contrary, our party has suffered from its slowness in elaborating these innovations and its difficulties in implementing this.

Today, in the situation which has now arisen, it is a matter of taking the logic and the implications of these innovations to their conclusion. That is the purport of the 24th congress.

II. Socialism for France

In 1981 the majority of the French people came out in favor of change. The task now on the agenda is really to satisfy this desire -- that is, to begin to resolve the difficulties of all kinds which beset working people and the country.

The prospects for democratic, self-managing socialism opened up before our people by our 22d and 23d congresses are precisely the fundamental response to this demand. The crisis does not arise from short-term problems, external causes or political errors. It is the crisis of the capitalist system itself. So to emerge from the crisis must necessarily mean changing society in the direction of socialism. There is no other way out.

So there is nothing more important for communists than to embark on a renewed examination of these prospects so as to fully master their content, draw all the necessary consequences in their activity, clarify them and enable the working people to share them. It is a matter of our party's full capacity to assume its role in the coming period.

A. Our Choice for France

The 22d and 23d congresses made the democratic advance toward democratic socialism the aim of our current action. Today we reaffirm this historical choice.

1. Our Goal: Democratic, Self-Managing Socialism

In order to meet the needs expressed by French women and men we must move progressively toward a new type of society and life for man, a new type of development and democracy for the nation, a new role for France in the world.

A New Type of Society and Life for Man

The policy pursued for decades by big capital and still emphasized by the Giscardian powers sacrificed the country's prime asset -- its men and women, its young people -- to the imperatives of capitalist profitability. That is the source of all the suffering, all the injustices, all the confusion endured by our people.

We, for our part, say that this intolerable, disastrous orientation must be reversed. Production must be at the service of man. That is the first fundamental change to bring about.

Eliminating unemployment, changing work and moving toward a society of full employment is in every respect a central goal. This goal is realistic: Satisfying the people's needs, building up national potential and developing cooperation with other peoples all require the creation of very many additional jobs. At the same time it is important to make full use of science and technology and to make productivity develop on various bases. This presupposes a quest for the economical use of material resources. It also presupposes a considerable improvement in working people's skills, the transformation of the condition of semiskilled workers, the suppression of casual work and temporary employment agencies, the renewal of the conditions and content of labor and of initial and permanent training, a substantial reduction in the length of work time, the lowering of the age giving the right to retire, an increase in leisure time and the development of opportunities for access to knowledge and culture, for better leisure and for the forging of new social relations.

Full employment is inseparable from the growth of consumption by the people. Low wages must be increased substantially, productive work and skilled labor must be revalued, social benefits must be increased and extended, social security must be democratized and made into a modern instrument for progress and solidarity, and the public and social services must be modernized and developed. Major tasks cannot wait any longer: free health care and the modernization and humanization of hospitals; free education, open to life, the concern of everyone, renewing secularity and declaring war on school segregation and frustration; the countryside repopulated and the cities accessible to the people's masses; confortable housing within the working people's reach; the promotion of collective transport facilities; the gaining of modern rights to continuous training, information, sports, leisure and culture.

Putting an end to poverty, reducing inequalities and building a more just society is a moral demand. It is also an imperative of growth. The poverty of a substantial part of the population, by limiting the domestic market, robs economic activity of an essential stimulus, while the stratum of the privileged squanders tremendous national wealth. So it is necessary to reduce inequalities of income and fortune. It is necessary to attack profiteers, launch major reforms of fiscal justice and combat parasitical activities. It is necessary to reduce the hierarchy of wages by increasing their purchasing power from the bottom up. It is necessary to put an end to segregation in access to employment and in responsibilities in the public and private sectors.

A better life requires a freer society. That is the opposite of an amoral society. Through the crisis of traditional morals and ideas there is an increasingly profound aspiration toward disalienated relations and truer values. Attacking the crisis and its effects is the first condition for enabling this aspiration to prevail and thus itself to contribute to the renewal. It is in this spirit that we call for a struggle against the degradation of social life, demoralization, drugs and violence, for action with working people and families to force back such social scourges as alcoholism and to resolve serious questions like those of insecurity, social segregation in places of residence and respect for the rights and dignity of immigrant workers.

We want a society for your people, really guaranteeing them the right to training, qualifications and jobs and responsibilities, offering them wider, more diverse access to culture, sports and leisure activities and permitting them to find a meaning in life and take a hand in their own future. We want a society where children find wide opportunities for development. We contribute to the women's liberation movement, we fight with them to put an end to discrimination, to ensure a new place for women in work, the family and society and to attack retrograde mentalities and behaviour everywhere. We want a society where retired people, whose numbers will increase substantially, can plan a full part in social life and in the struggle, a society which ensures them the means for a happy life and satisfies their new aspirations. We call into question the dominance of financial relations, discrimination of all kinds and racism and we work to develop social relations in which new solidarities can be woven between people and between groups.

All in all, it is a question of advancing toward a new civilization where humanism ceases to be a mere word and becomes a living reality.

A New Type of Development and Democracy for the Nation

Our people have exceptional assets for advancing along this path, but they must also overcome considerable obstacles.

France has natural and human resources, economic, scientific and cultural potential and international influence such as few other countries have. But the policy of the big bourgeoisie has allowed these assets to grow old and has often soiled them. The development of science and technology provides the possibility of very great progress in productivity and unprecedented flourishing of the human being, but this requires profound economic and social transformations and a true cultural revolution. The correlation of forces in the world, which favors the forces of peace and liberation, makes it possible for France to develop in the service of its people, but big capital exercises powerful constraints, externally and internally, in opposition to this orientation.

To mobilize these assets and overcome these obstacles, certain fundamental choices impose themselves as regards means.

We regard as necessary a new type of growth for France, and therefore a modification of its economic structures and political institutions.

The full utilization of production forces and the continuous boosting of consumption and services will make a lasting recovery possible for national production. This new growth will aim to make a new conquest of the domestic market and to promote our foreign exchanges by restoring their balance and diversifying them. It will first utilize and give due value to our natural resources, our human potential, our intellectual heritage, our innovative capability. It will look after natural equilibrium. It is necessary to invest in France as a priority, changing the criteria of social profitability and effectiveness. It is necessary to develop and modernize all branches, all regions; to ensure the expansion of agriculture; to invent new activities, new products; to move toward energy independence for the country while developing all forms of energy in a balanced way; to give new impetus to the universities, to scientific research and to cultural life.

This revival of growth presupposes an effective battle against inflation. So it is essential to attack capitalist profits and waste, to establish true prices and costs and to manage public funds and credits democratically. A tax must be imposed on company capital in such a way as to favor job creation and militate against waste.

The high level of these transformations, which are needed if we are to emerge from the crisis, calls for the broadest possible involvement of working people. Thus democracy is at the heart of change. It is not only the essential end of the march to socialism, it is also a means. Its progress calls for an unprecedented fourishing of freedoms and opportunities for choice in all spheres. If the working class and all the working people are to take their full place in social and public life, it is necessary to attack the dominance of capital and eventually break it, to implement profound anticapitalist reforms and to install new economic structures.

This means, first of all, democratizing the public sector and nationalized enterprises, ensuring opportunities for the working people to participate in them at all levels and giving them a motive role as regards economic efficiency and social progress. It also means breaking the power of money by democratizing credit and reforming finance and distribution. Other nationalizations will be needed. The private sector, in particular small- and medium-sized enterprises, will nonetheless play an important part, which implies guarantees for its activity but precludes abusive privileges and monarchic leadership style. Working people must have new freedoms and rights of a self-managing nature within the enterprise, enabling them to express themselves, to organize themselves, to change the conditions and organization of labor and to take part in decisions, notably by creating workshop and service councils. The economic rights of enterprise committees as regards employment, investment and finance must be extended.

It is also necessary to democratize political life and restructure public institutions in self-management terms. This means shielding the state from the power of money, opening up access for the working people to all levels of leadership functions, instituting proportional representation for all elections, respecting and broadening parliament's prerogative and making information pluralist and honest. Working people must take part in the definition and implementation of economic and social policy within the framework of decentralized, contractual planning. The decentralization of the state is an essential reform which should make it possible to resolve problems with interested parties, in the closest possible contact with realities, needs and possible solutions. It is necessary to implement local community self-management, to renew the role of the department, to create real regional power and regional life, to abolish useless state tutelage and to put an end to authoritarianism and bureaucracy. It is necessary to recognize the right to self-determination of the peoples of the overseas departments and territories and to satisfy their urgent requirements for development and democracy.

All in all, it is a question of taking democracy further than ever before, to new forms of self-managing democracy.

A New Role for France in the World

France's foreign policy has been affected as negatively as its domestic policy by the class choices of the big bourgeoisie. Its profound modification is an essential condition of the march toward socialism, since a new type of development of the nation calls for a new orientation of its international relations. Our country cannot advance without contributing to other countries' advance.

France has a duty to ensure its own independence, sovereignty and security. This presupposes that in all circumstances our country will remain master of its own decisions, preserve its own means of action and ensure an independent national defense, based on the maintenance of the nuclear deterrent force and a democratic army of national conscription. At the same time it must seek diversified, balanced cooperation with all peoples.

France should aim to give a major boost to initiatives in favor of peace and disarmament with security for all, peaceful coexistence, noninterference in countries' internal affairs and the simultaneous dissolution of blocs. It can thus implement an active policy of nonalignment while respecting its alliances.

France has a positive role to play in Europe. It is up to France to help orient Europe more toward social progress, democracy, open doors toward the world, cooperation with developing countries and action in favor of peace. Within the framework of the Common Market it can promote cooperation in all spheres based on respect for mutual interests and the sovereignty of each party.

At the same time France must play an appropriate part in the struggle against the scourges of another age which are still the lot of more than a billion people in the world; hunger, slavery, underdevelopment, illiteracy. It must favor the development of its relations with developing countries, combat neocolonialist plundering and all forms of imperialist domination and make proposals and seize every opportunity to promote progress in the direction of a new world economic and political order. It must assert active solidarity with peoples fighting for their freedom and rights.

All in all it is a question of implementing an innovative, generous foreign policy. By changing the course of its own development France can contribute to the imposition of a new course in world evolution.

The sum of these political choices constitutes our party's general program. The plan of struggle defended by Georges Marchais in the presidential election campaign provided a precise, coherent approach. If the proposals it contains may seem too bold to many French people, they are nonetheless necessary if the country is to be led out of the crisis.

The transformations which must be implemented are in no way an abstract program. Their formulation is not rigid, it is enriched by life. They are not located on the horizon of a distant time, or even at the limits of intermediate stages. The need for them results from the current realities of the crisis. The possibility of implementing them depends on the progress of the people's movement.

At the same time there are fundamental transformations. Each of them is inevitably the stake in a class struggle where the interests of big capital confront the irreconcilable interests of the working class and all working people. That is why they constitute a call for the struggle and for union for democratic, self-managing socialism.

2. The Path of the Democratic Advance

The path leading to such a society must necessarily be democratic and self-managing itself. Our choice is clear: France's march to socialism will be, at every step, a democratic progress.

Our last two congresses specified the essential aspects of this democratic path. It is indissolubly a path of the rallying of the people and of union, a path of the struggle and the autonomous role of our party.

The Path of a Majority Rallying of the People

It is up to our people to decide on the transformations they want, on their breadth and rhythm. So no democratic advance is possible unless a majority rallying of the people is formed and develops, expressing itself in universal suffrage and ensuring that the verdict of that suffrage is respected.

This rally cannot confine itself it supporting the necessary changes. It must play an active part in them. Since it is, in effect, a question of transforming society in the direction of increasingly profound democracy, the participation of working people, taking matters in hand themselves, and the sharpening of their revolutionary conscience are essential conditions of success. This is the conclusion we have drawn from the experience of the joint program. Democratic, self-managing socialism cannot be granted or programmed from above. It requires efforts to build, in the struggle, the conditions for the march toward socialism, the only timetable being that determined by the masses' needs, their level of consciousness and the development of the correlation of forces.

Struggle in all spheres, in order to develop realities and consciousness; a union which is firm because it is built among all interested people around goals which they themselves have set; a union which is able to express itself, whem the time comes, in agreements between political formations which come out in favor of these goals: these are inseparable avenues in the democratic advance and irrevocable choices for us.

Our last congress was persistently presented as an abandonment of our policy of union. The exact opposite is true, and our participation in the new majority is a scathing rebuff for those who denied it. It is precisely in order to enable the union to surmount the obstacles on which it had foundered and to start again on clear, lasting foundations that, learning the lessons of experience, we have defined a new concept of union.

The Communist Party and the Socialist Party are two different parties. They intend to remain so.

Union with the PS as it is -- profoundly different from our party in terms of its history, social composition, ideology, organization, international ties, strategy -- therefore sets a complex problem for a revolutionary party like ours.

The 23d congress cast light on the conditions for resolving this problem: The development of a rallying of the people at a high level in the struggle, autonomous activity by each party and cooperation between them on the basis of agreements which correspond to the current state of the movement instead of anticipating it, which conceal none of the differences between the partners behind what unites them and which promote action rather than retarding it.

We are convinced that this concept and this practice of union will make it possible to push the union as far as is necessary -- to socialism, which we firmly intend to build in France in cooperation between parties which come out in support of this goal, in political pluralism.

The Path of the Struggle

Progress along this path makes a twofold demand: for our party's independent activity and for the struggle.

There can be no advance toward socialism without the Communist Party -- the revolutionary party of struggle and of government -- permanently playing its irreplaceable role. A party of the working class, it is the political organization which the working people need to defend their interests and realize their aspirations. A revolutionary party, it emphasizes in all circumstances the demands of the class struggle and its overall prospects. A party struggle, it acts in all spheres to change things and clarify ideas. A government party, it makes an origianl, responsible contribution to the development and implementation of a new policy. It is at all times necessary to strengthen its capacity for initiative, its organization and its influence.

After all, the democratic path to socialism is always a path of struggle: the mass struggle for concrete goals, promoting all possible progress, the struggle of ideas on the content of the necessary changes; the electoral struggle, giving democratic expression to the people's will.

All progress must result from a retreat imposed on capital, and any progress forms a bridgehead for the imposition of new retreats. Only a series of persistent struggles will make it possible to win increasingly profound democratic gains, to raise the level of consciousness of the rallying of the people, to overcome the contradictions and conquer the illusions inherent in the desire for change, to create the conditions for extensive, lasting rapprochement between Communists and Socialists and to win over new forces to act to transform society. This alone will make it possible to change the correlation of social and political forces in such a way as to make decisive transformations possible.

B. A Choice Based on Reality

There is nothing arbitrary or voluntarist about this choice for France. If it is well suited to the specific problems of French society, this is because its elaboration is the result of in-depth thought, illuminated by the lessons of practice, about the realities of the nation, the realities of the crisis and the realities of the modern world.

It is important to consider in full the reasons for it as well as its effects. The delay in elaborating it is not entirely in the past: In some respects it still characterizes our political practice. The effort to reveal clearly the basis of this historical choice is therefore an urgent, lasting necessity for all Communists.

1. Socialism and French Reality

It is first and foremost in the realities of the nation that our party seeks a response suited to the problems posed by its struggle for the socialist transformation of society.

For French Communists, this national aspect of their march and their struggle is of long standing. Since the thirties, it has inspired many of our party's important initiatives. This is what has made it an organic part of the French personality.

In any case, taking full account of the national traditions and conditions of each people is entirely in the spirit of scientific socialism, as opposed to any abstract view of things. But it must be recognized that for a considrable period we lost sight of this fundamental idea of Marxism, formulated by Marx and Engels: "For us, communism is neither a STATE which must be created nor an IDEAL by which reality must be ruled. What we call communism is the REAL movement which abolishes the current state." [capitalized words italicized] This living, concrete view of history was contradicted by the idea of a unique model of socialism, which prevailed for a long time.

The 22nd congress freed us from this. Each country's transition toward socialism and the socialism which it builds, though they necessarily obey general laws drawn from experience -- laws which are in any case relative in historical terms -- do not follow an all-purpose pattern, merely embellishing it with national peculiarities. They are always peculiar in their very nature.

We regard the march toward socialism and socialism itself in our country as a concrete response to the country's concrete needs, as the continuous development of the French nation along its own path, with its specific fundamental features, which cannot be reduced to those of other countries, still less to any model.

Specific French Features

The national reality of France today is that of a major, advanced capitalist country. But what we must see behind this characterization in general terms is the particular face which it overlays, shaped by a particularly rich and varied history.

France is the country where the age-old struggle for freedom has taken further than elsewhere the universal affirmation of human rights and citizens' rights, the demand for secularity, pluralism and personal independence. Through innumerable struggles for freedom of conscience and expression, which intellectuals have caused to reverberate throughout the country and the world, great popular and human causes have triumphed. Through intense class struggles, institutions of a democratic nature have taken root, as well as a real politicization of the masses, which the big bourgeoisie tries to reduce by kindling reactions tending to reject politics. The development of the workers movement increased the stake in the struggle for freedoms. The field was enriched by struggles for trade union rights, social rights, the right to vote for women and young people. Spurred on by the gains of 1936 and 1945, the movement for freedoms for associations has become widespread since 1968. Thus depite the basic limitations which it encounters under capitalism, the desire to live in freedom has exceptional breadth and diversity in France.

France is also a very complex tangle of types of property. The role of a large, diversified rural and urban petite bourgeoisie was considerable until recent decades. Many working people combine access to paid work with the maintenance of activity of the land. Ownership of personal housing is developing widely. Crafts and small enterprises occupy an extensive place,constantly undergoing renewal. The worker and peasant movement has also paved the way for the development of cooperative and mutualist forms. These complex realities influence mentalities, particularly those of the new paid workers. The defense of the interests involved cannot help but entail some opposition to class struggles aimed at reducing social inequalities -- struggles which respect these forms of property insofar as they add to individual freedom and the vitality of the economic and social fabric.

Monopoly ownership of the major means of production and exchange, while slower to develop than in other capitalist countries, has established itself powerfully. But the advances of the popular front and the liberation gave rise to an important public sector of remarkable dynamism, and this counts for much in the popularity of the watchword of nationalization.

Despite the communal prerogatives which have their roots in the distant past, France is still an exceptionally centralized, ramified state power, and this is a powerful factor for national cohesion, but also a privileged tool for all shades of reaction in a country characterized by absolutism, Bonapartism, the bourgeoisie's Versailles traditions [reference to support for Versailles Assembly opposed to Paris Commune in 1871] and, more recently, presidentialism. At the same time the republic is the fruit of great struggles in which the people's masses have participated energetically. The tradition of Jacobin origin which regards centralism as a democratic weapon against retrograde particularisms and the long history of a parliamentary system where it has been possible -- thanks to the ballot paper -- to bring about much progress from above without ever calling the capitalist system itself into question again have consolidated the habit of delegation of power. This is a considerable asset for a big bourgeoisie which has much experience in the art of maintaining its hegemony in all circumstances.

But France is also a workers movement which is marked by these realities and these struggles and which has made its own profound mark on them in turn. Anarchosyndicalism, social Christianity and above all the socialism of Guesde, Lagargue and Jaures have become components or points of reference in the people's consciousness. The influence won by the CGT has enabled the concept of class trade unionism to gain the upper hand among working people, at the cost of constantly renewed efforts. Our party, its roots among the masses for several generations, has forged a revolutionary current which plays a major -- though bitterly disputed -- role in the country's life. The result is a disposition of forces which is reflected today in a highly individual political situation.

All these features go to make up a French character which is both historically determined and constantly evolving. This is what makes France a very different case from the FRG or Britain, and even more from the United States or Japan. This is what gives the crisis in French society a dimension which is above all national.

France today is a coherent whole made up of individual assets accumulated over a long history: highly diverse industrial and agricultural resources, a productive machinery which is highly -- though unevenly -- developed, highly skilled and experienced working people, remarkable technological breakthroughs, scientific activity and artistic life of world stature, social achievements which are among the most advanced, and international influence of the highest order.

But it is also the sum of contradictions and confusions developed on the basis of a crisis which has exacerbated disparities, shaken national cohesion and launched a decline which is worrying without being irreversible: a high living standard, but huge social and regional inequalities; a strong economic and cultural potential, but with whole sections of it eroded; high productivity, but working people who are subject to downgrading and worn out by exploitation, while the effectiveness of investments is compromised by the methods and orientations of big capital; a civilization with deep roots but a social fabric which is coming apart, the Americanization of consumption and of culture; considerable international potential which is, however, curbed by European and Atlantic integration.

It is on the basis of this concrete reality that we have given our strategy its national foundations.

The French Brand of Socialism

So the prospects for socialism in France cannot be defined merely by superimposing variants on an all-purpose model. Specific solutions must be elaborated which accord with a society determined by concrete reality. That is what our 22d congress did in relation to the key questions of the advance to socialism, such as the socialization of the major means of production and exchange, the establishment of the political power of the working people and the democratic transformation of social relations.

We considered the question of ownership, defining a form of socialism which has nothing to do with "collectivism." In order to break the dominance of big capital and find a way out of the crisis, it is necessary to carry out effective, democratic nationalizations in relation to the whole of the banking and finance sector and major capitalist groups in industry, trade and the services. But this has nothing to do with the desire to hold everything in common. Alongside public ownership, social ownership -- cooperative, municipal, departmental and regional social ownership -- there will also be an organic place for private ownership in socialism in the French style: personal ownership of consumer goods and durables, of course; and also small-scale individual and family ownership -- peasant, craft, commercial and industrial, which will find in socialism the support needed to overcome its current difficulties and find new prosperity.

Equally, on the question of the state, the 22d congress marked a turning point in our thinking by rejecting for France, alongside the dictatorship of the proletariat, any idea of centralized state control. Extending Marx's thought on the Paris Commune: The great revolutionary task is "the regaining of state power by society, for which it becomes a living force instead of the force which dominates and subjugates it." It is necessary to reverse the relationship between working people and the state, which must become not only the representative power, but also the instrument of democratic life for the masses themselves, participating at all levels, finally enabling the working class to exercise a leading political role to the full and to take over responsibility at all levels. This is the aim of all the proposals on boldly democratizing institutions and advancing toward self-management.

This is also true of freedom. The 22d congress defined the socialism we want as a new era of freedoms -- of all the freedoms except that of exploiting other people's labor: fundamental individual and collective freedoms, which must be deepened, and new freedoms which must be won: freedoms within the enterprise, in the city, in the state, in all spheres of life: freedoms in information, education, creation and culture, where pluralism must be the rule.

Since that time we have constantly developed our consideration of the French character. It was from this viewpoint, for instance, that we deepened the analysis of the primarily national nature of the crisis and advanced the demand for the production of French goods and for investment in France as a priority. As supporters of a new growth we have revealed the need to restore national cohesion in our economic activities, our skills, our technological and scientific advances, our efforts in the sphere of social justice and education, our regions and our exchanges, our culture and our language -- with the aim of promoting a new logic of the flourishing of individuals within the flourishing of the nation. Advocating the struggle against all forms of oppression, we created the committee for the defense of human freedoms and rights in France and throughout the world.

It was in the same spirit that we approached the question of France's place in the international environment. We have reasserted that we intend to preserve France's independence in all circumstances and guarantee its people the freedom to choose their destiny while respecting alliances. This also determines the French path to socialism -- the only path enabling the country, while maintaining good international relations, to implement the necessary transformations intact. Concerned for France's security and its defense needs, in 1977 we defined a policy which, while drawing on the democratic tradition of an army in the service of the people and the nation, took account of the role of the French strike force. Aware of France's international responsibilities, we adopted a stance in favor of a working people's Europe and set the example of the initiative for a new international order.

The fertility of this path is as inexhaustible as the French character itself. It should permeate our attitude in all spheres and at all levels of reality. In general it is a question of implementing a constantly living political style in the content and form of our initiatives, our proposals and our interventions in the battle of ideas.

Thus socialism will develop in the French style. In return, France will develop in socialism. Only socialism, indeed, by giving our people full control of their means of working, living and deciding, will free the national character from its present fetters and distortions.

In 1936, at the Villeurbanne Congress, in the face of the rising tide of fascist perils and the abandonment of national interests by the big bourgeoisie, our party called on the working people to "reconquer France." Today we continue this path by calling on them, in face of the threat of France's decline created in new conditions by the same class interests, to revive France in socialism.

2. The Democratic Path and the Realities of the Crisis

It is also on the basis of the realities of the crisis affecting French society that we define our fundamental choices.

Our party was the first to see and to say, more than 10 years ago, that France was entering a profound, all-embracing, lasting crisis. The crisis is because the capitalist structures, the profit incentive, the type of growth which has prevailed are completely unsuited to the needs and challenges of our era -- an era marked by the upsurge in science and technology and the will for liberation on the part of men and peoples. Too much accumulation of private capital, too much exploitation of the working people, too much pressure and too many levies on other peoples caused the crisis.

Since then everything has confirmed that this analysis went to the heart of the matter and that there is no way out without calling into question the domination of capital, without profound democratic transformations in the direction of socialism.

But the fact that socialism is the objective response to the problems posed is not enough in itself to ensure that the people's movement is oriented in the direction of socialism.

The Contradictory Nature of the Crisis

For the crisis is a fundamentally contradictory reality.

It is the sign of unprecendented opportunities and the crucible for new aspirations, but at the same time it is the proliferation of confusion of all kinds, the accumulation of the worst difficulties, which absorb millions of men and women in the day-to-day effort to attend to the most urgent things, place millions more in the condition of recipients of assistance and therefore tend to narrow horizons, discourage action and cause people in general to fall back on their own resources or indulge in illusory escapism.

The crisis is hunger for change, but also fear of change: fear of losing your job, your property, your rights, your freedom; fear of economic chaos, moral disorder, political adventure; fear of war; fear that the future may be even worse than the present -- all the fears of the year 2000, which are today the most terrible destroyers of hope.

The crisis is general, but unequal. It builds up disparities everywhere at the same time as solidarities. It hides the fundamental antagonism between working people and big capital -- which remains, for many, a distant, abstract reality -- behind countless oppositions which are fallacious, but palpable and banal: between the person who signs on at the ANPE and the person who has work; between the temporary worker, the probationer, the auxiliary, and the person with a stable job and statutory guarantees; between the semiskilled worker and the technician, the engineer, the cadre; between the person with training and culture and the person who lacks these things; between the inhabitants of one region and another, the immigrant and the French person, the young person and the adult, the woman and the man.

The crisis is the acute form of the conflict between the new things which are emerging and the old things which fiercely begrudge them room.

So any unilateral, mechanistic view of the evolution of the crisis must be eliminated. Nothing would be more futile than to expect change and socialism to emerge from some liberating catastrophe, from a spontaneous, ineluctable collapse of the capitalist system.

The Political Dimension of the Crisis

It is therefore necessary to take the measure of the political dimension of the crisis. While placing socialism on the agenda, it also gives rise to ideas and attitudes which are liable to counteract or divert the will for change. This is all the truer in that the big bourgeoisie plays on these contradictions in order to exploit them to its own profit.

In response to the aggravation of the lot of the working people and the country, recent years have seen the development of discontent, an upsurge in the struggle, where the CGT and our party have played an essential role. The Giscardian powers found themselves in difficulties. Their mass base was constantly shrinking. Aware of the extent of the danger, the big bourgeoisie, without yielding an inch in its class orientation, stepped up its efforts to adapt to the situation. With every means at its disposal it launched a political and ideological counteroffensive to safeguard its power at the same time as its profits.

Its first aim was to convince people that the crisis is inevitable and that the only possible policy was therefore its own. To this end it played on another contradictory dimension of reality. The crisis is above all national, its source is in the class choices imposed by big capital in all spheres in the country. But what is true of France is also true, in different ways, of other capitalist countries. So the crisis also has international dimensions, which, in their turn, affect the development of the crisis in each country.

The authorities' propaganda, while concealing the first, fundamental aspect, strove to make the crisis look like something external and inevitable, to blame a "hard and dangerous" world, and in particular the Arab oil-producing countries. Against this background it presented the policies of austerity, redeployment and profitability as the choices of realism and courage and gave to solidarity the sense of a sharing of sacrifices internally and monopoly integration externally.

At the same time the big bourgeoisie undertook to discredit progress and eradicate revolutionary ideas. Everything possible was done to ensure that labor was in itself assimilated to exploitation, the new technologies to unemployment, scientific progress to dehumanization, public intervention to state control. Everywhere they sought to arouse, even -- above all -- among the underprivileged, a great fear of change, of change as identified with "collectivism" and "totalitarianism."

The development of the socialist countries is not exempt from difficulties and errors: Planned slander has depicted them as a 20th century hell. The constant, central aim running through all these efforts was anticommunism. Our policy was the target of relentless distortion on television and radio, in newspapers and books. Nothing was too low for our party, its activists and its leaders. It was necessary to make our people despair of the future.

The culmination of this counteroffensive was the justification of resignation and consensus. The crisis multiplies the drama of failure: in school, at the employment agency, in personal life and social relations. The dominant ideology and culture made the victims culpable, sowed the spirit of skepticism and resignation in them. Precariousness and dependence, aggravated by uncaring attitudes and repression, encouraged passivity. The age-old habit of the delegation of power was used to the utmost by authoritarianism and bureaucracy. The powers played on all the divisions, denouncing the less underprivileged as well off, attacking the most militant as dangerous supporters of a worse state of affairs, fundamentally exploiting trade union differences and the disunity of the left in order to gain acceptance for their own policy.

But nothing worked. In this war against the forces of change the right lost a major battle. But it would be naive to suppose that the left's election victory dispelled as if by magic the weight of realities and the backwardness of consciousness. Today as much as yesterday, though in different conditions, the aspirations for more justice, freedom, responsibility and dignity, the will to work, live and decide in a different way, in a word all that promotes the struggle, union and change and can develop the idea that the way out lies in socialism -- all this must forge a difficult path for itself through the contradictory realities of the crisis and an intensive political and ideological battle.

This is the deep origin of the chief obstacle which must necessarily be conquered if we are to advance: The considerable gap between the objective demands of the transformation of society and the political consciousness of the people's forces as it stands, between the level of the solutions required by the search for a way out of the crisis and the level of the goals around which it is possible, at present, to rally the large forces needed to advance.

That is the major problem which we must work to resolve.

A Self-Managing Path

In these conditions it is an illusion to think that we can confine ourselves to carrying out propaganda in favor of an all-embracing program -- however good -- and thereby accumulate the forces to impose it when the time comes. That would be a perpetuation, in a different way, of the fundamentally utopian idea of the "great upheaval."

Nor will it be possible to step over the difficulty, leaving it entirely up to the action of the government -- even a leftwing government with communist participation. The great questions raised at the top are essentially the condensed form of those raised at the bottom. They will not be resolved at the top unless progress is made at the bottom.

So we cannot do without a patient, keen struggle to confront the workers themselves directly with the great problems, on the basis of their day-to-day experience and on the concrete ground where the crisis does its evil deeds in all aspects of their life. The obstacles in the path of self-managing socialism will only be overcome by self-management itself, by the involvement of the working people, themselves taking charge of the transformation of reality.

Only the struggle to change what is going badly will show that things can go better and demonstrate how they can go better. Only the gaining of new positions, as we said at the 23d congress, will create firm bridgeheads and develop new correlations of forces for more ambitious advances and increase awareness of the real causes of the crisis and the real ways of escaping it, thereby reducing, little by little, the gulf between the possible and the necessary.

This requires us to cast more light on the necessary prospects and at the same time to advance at the pace of the possible, to bring to the fore those goals which accord with the needs of the working people and the country, goals which are both transforming -- that is to say, which break with the logic of capital in crisis -- and realistic -- that is to say, within the range of the struggle; at the same time we must cast light on the political ins and outs of every aspect of the struggle.

That is the self-managing democratic path which we choose. It is a process which brings into the present the movement of an entire historical period. This path alone enables us to move, not toward coping with the crisis, but toward transforming French society in the direction of socialism.

3. The French Path to Socialism and International Realities

It is ultimately in the context of a world in profound transformation, in the light of increasingly diverse experience in the socialist countries and in the spirit of a new internationalism, that we make our strategic choices.

A New International Correlation of Forces

In a few decades the world has changed more than it changed in a century before. The scale of the problems, but also of the possibilities, arising from the contradictory movement of societies is that of a real mutation of history. Our own advance must be related to this if we are to have a sense of perspective.

This results, first and foremost, from the strengthening and the conjunction of the chief liberating forces in operation at the four corners of the earth.

Socialism has become a world reality being built by 1.5 billion men and women on all continents. This building does not take place without problems and errors, but the influence exerted by the socialist countries is already decisive and is growing as the world evolves. This is true from the economic viewpoint: Their share of world production, in particular industrial production, is increasing and their role is extending in the development of new cooperation relations. It is true from the political viewpoint: Their initiatives in international bodies, their proposals and their acts in favor of detente and disarmament carry great weight in maintaining coexistence and peace. It is, above all, this influence, in conjunction with their military efforts to counterbalance imperialism's insane arms race, which has enabled us to experience 36 years without a world war. For hundreds of millions of men and women who are still subject to imperialist domination, the socialist countries are a prop in their struggle in favor of national liberation, economic independence and social emancipation. Thus socialism's contribution to mankind's progress is indisputable.

The capitalist world is suffering a perceptible acceleration of the crisis. Increasing unemployment, inflation, industrial collapses and monetary disorders are profoundly affecting society's life. The policies of reactionary or social democratic management of the crisis, though they may have retarded the people's movement, are now experiencing increasing difficulties. Major social and political struggles are developing, particularly in Europe. Aspirations to national dignity are being asserted forcefully in Northern Ireland. The will for change which made the leftwing victory possible in France is energetically expressed in other countries. In the United States Reagan's austerity policy is meeting with serious opposition. From London to Paris, from Rome to Copenhagen, from Bonn to Tokyo, the dominant feature of the people's movement is undoubtedly the protest against the escalation of the arms race and the strong upsurge in demands for peace.

Since 1945, 90 countries have liberated themselves from colonialism and gained the means of development. This liberation movement is continuing today. Zimbabwe has victoriously shaken off the racist yoke. On the very doorstep of the United States, the people of Nicaragua have swept aside Somoza's dictatorship, while the struggle of peoples like the people of El Salvador is increasing. Imperialism is suffering setbacks on all continents. In Afghanistan, its attempt to eliminate the progressive regime and destabilize the entire region has been checked. Its support for the former butchers of the Khmer people is not stopping Kampuchea from overcoming hunger and embarking on the path of reconstruction. Despite its pressures, the Palestinian, Saharan, Namibian and other peoples are progressing in the courageous struggle for recognition of their national rights. There is a growing demand for a new world economic and political order, expressed particularly by the movement of nonaligned countries, whose role and authority are asserting themselves.

Supported by these great revolutionary and progressive currents, huge liberation movements are developing in all countries: the struggle for human rights and freedoms, to which we make our own contribution; the struggle against all kinds of racism and segregation; young people's struggle to take their place in society and build their future; women's struggle for complete liberation, which asserts itself as one of the chief factors in changing social relations and attitudes.

The simultaneous and indeed convergent action of these highly diverse currents has altered the correlation of forces to the point where imperialism can no longer have its own way. Mankind has the opporutnity to prevent the unleashing of a third world war and to act with success to resolve local wars and tensions.

The second fact which is shaking the modern world is the tremendous accumulation of knowledge, the unprecedented upsurge in science and technology, which are revolutionizing material production, calling into question the old social structures and giving people completely unprecedented opportunities for controlling their relations with nature and among themselves.

This makes it all the more intolerable that this 20th century, now nearing its end, is still, for whole peoples, a century where people die of starvation, where people have no remedy for illness or ignorance, where the applications of science are turned to murderous ends, where fantastic social and national inequalities are being exacerbated.

The universal hunger for liberation and the level reached by productive forces and knowledge call for a new civilization. To pass from the old world, shaped by man's exploitation of man, to a world of justice, freedom, dignity and solidarity -- that is the question. It is, in the last analysis, the historically specific question of the transition from capitalism to socialism.

These transformations are, at a worldwide level and in each country, the stake in a terrible struggle. The forces of the past have everything to fear from this world in motion, since they must confront its problems in the context of the crisis of their system. So they try with all their might to block change, to preserve and even reconquer their positions. This is the direction of the counteroffensive which imperialism launched some years ago in adapting to the new conditions of the class struggle of an international scale.

This counteroffensive has come up against major obstacles and has created new contradictions. The attempt to revive European and Atlantic integration continues. Under U.S. pressure, attempts to concert their efforts are multiplying among the imperialist countries. But rival interests persist and are even becoming exacerbated, for instance in the monetary sphere. The multinationals try to impose the burden of the crisis increasingly on the people, but they are meeting with growing resistance and struggle.

Imperialism has not succeeded in deflecting the fundamentally favorable trend in the evolution of the correlation of forces on a worldwide scale. Recently it has sought to call the equilibrium of military forces into question again and to gain supremacy in this sphere. The United States has considerably increased its war budget. It is trying to strengthen its network of military bases abroad, which has been called into question in several countries. It strives to exacerbate tensions rather than responding to proposals for negotiated solutions. "Limited nuclear war" is becoming a doctrine, with the open intention of concentrating a possible conflict on the European Continent. The NATO decision to install new American missiles in Europe and the decision to produce the neutron bomb are part of the same strategy. But this adventurist policy must take account of the weight of realities and world opinion.

Imperialism's aggressiveness is not a sign of strength, but of its crisis. It betrays imperialism's difficulties in the face of a world which is gradually escaping its domination. This does not lessen the danger of the revival of the arms race and the escalation toward means of mass destruction, which are arousing protests and making action for peace and disarmament more necessary.

We draw a twofold lesson from this evolution.

The changes which have taken place in the world open up new opportunities for the peoples in struggle, not only for preventing war but also for advancing toward socialism according to the particular path which suits them. Our strategy sees this as one of its chief concrete foundations. But conversely, in order to turn these opportunities into reality, it is necessary to step up the class struggle against imperialist intrigues and for the defense and consolidation of peace, peaceful coexistence and solidarity with people fighting for progress and democracy.

This is particularly true of the struggle for peace, which the PCF, true to its long traditions in this sphere and aware of imperialism's current efforts in search of military supremacy, regards as a major axis in its struggle.

Today peace and peaceful coexistence rest largely on the global military equilibirum which has grown up. Commonsense requires us to act to impose a balanced, progressive reduction of all types of arms. It is necessary to negotiate without preliminaries. This is proposed by the socialist countries -- in particular the USSR, at the 26th CPSU Congress -- and by the neutral countries and the Nonaligned Movement, as well as by the most varied political, social, religious and intellectual circles in the world. In Europe, the peace movement contributed considerably to the opening of the Geneva talks. It is a question of securing the limitation and reduction of all medium-range weapons, American and Soviet.

But peace cannot be based only on equilibrium of weapons. It is not only the affair of states, it demands active involvement by the people. In Europe a people's peace movement of unusual breadth is developing in diverse forms against the installation of new nuclear missiles or the manufacture of the neutron bomb, against the presence of new creation of military bases, for the creation of regional nuclear-free zones. The PCF intends to contribute actively to these struggles, through its support for the struggles of the peace movement as well as through its own activity, by itself adopting or seeking in conjunction with others -- communist parties and various progressive and peace-loving forces, whether socialist or Christian -- initiatives capable of responding to the demands of the situation and promoting joint action for peace and disarmament.

The need to step up efforts also applies to international solidarity with all revolutionary and progressive forces. This is an irreplaceable component of the class struggle on a worldwide scale. Every step forward for a just cause, every success for a people contributes to the favorable evolution of the correlation of forces, limits imperialism's sphere of action and, by weakening it, opens up opportunities for other peoples. It is in this spirit that French Communists display their solidarity in concrete form with all forces acting in the world for social emancipation, progress and socialism, human rights and freedoms, sovereignty and national independence, a new international order, peace and disarmament.

Our own struggle for socialism in France, while benefiting from the positive changes which have taken place in the world, has international relevance. This is the greatest contribution we can make to the peoples' joint struggle.

Socialism Now

The experience of revolutionary forces in the world and the diversity of the processes of socialist building are equally a source of enrichment for our thought and for our struggle.

In the face of frenzied attempts to discredit existing socialism, the 23d congress formulated an overall assessment of what it has given to each of the peoples concerned and to mankind as a whole. The years which have since elapsed lead us to reaffirm this assessment.

For our part, we strive to assess the development and the contradictions of the socialist countries as they really are, without blinders or prejudices. We intend to continue to follow this path and to do more to make its results known to the working people. This effort to be objective leads those who agree with it to reject the caricature which represents the socialist countries as a uniform bloc of societies fixed in totalitarianism. In fact, despite the legacy of feudalism, capitalism and colonialism which these countries had to overcome to begin with, despite the obstacles of all kinds and the terrible wars which imperialism imposed on them, despite the serious consequences of the concepts and practices of Stalinism, alien to the very name of socialism, these countries have, in the course of a history which is as yet brief, undergone development of revolutionary breadth and novelty in all spheres.

Apart from the fact that their upsurge has created an international correlation of forces which is conducive to peace and progress, they have put an end to the exploitation of man by man, hunger, illiteracy and -- in nearly all cases -- unemployment. They have achieved results which are usually unknown to French public opinion. What do people in our country know, for instance, of their industrial and agricultural successes, their technological and scientific progress, their impressive social and cultural achievements, the original forms of mass participation which have developed and grown strong there in a wide range of different conditions?

This tendency toward progress -- and more rapid progress than in the capitalist world -- is confirmed today. Studies carried out by the World Bank show, in the socialist countries taken together, an average annual growth rate in GDP of 5.6 percent in the period 1970-1978, which is superior to that of the preceding decade, while, conversely, that of the capitalist countries fell to 3.2 percent in the same period. While most capitalist countries are now experiencing zero growth and sometimes negative growth, and while their prospects for the coming years are uncertain, growth is continuing in most of the socialist countries, albeit at a more moderate pace.

Western experts predict that their growth will remain superior to that of capitalist countries in the years 1985-1990. This highly significant prospect is one of the chief sources of imperialism's uneasiness and aggressiveness with respect to the socialist countries.

Naturally, such an evolution cannot be without problems. The problems include, first, those which are due to their international environment: the effects of the crisis of the capitalist world, such as the deterioration in exchange rates and the repercussions of monetary disorders; the constraints of the arms race imposed by imperialism. Then there is the burden of the multifaceted aid which they grant to peoples struggling for independence and development.

Then there are also, and above all -- particularly for the European socialist countries -- the contradictions and difficulties which result from their progress itself. In moving from extensive to intensive development, they must do still more to combine the economic efficiency demanded and made possible by the scientific and technological revolution, the social progress required by their population's new, diverse needs and the exercise of democracy required, in all spheres, by the solution of the problems posed. Experience shows that democracy is the key issue in their development. This does not only concern administrative measures which this or that country may substitute for the necessary political and ideological struggle -- measures on which we express our disagreement -- but, more fundamentally, concerns all that runs counter to the increasing desire for the more profound democratization of all public life, for the decentralization of responsibilities and for the liberation of initiative at all levels of society. This confirms the assessment of our 23d congress on the universal democratic necessity inherent in socialism. Only an effort to answer all these questions together will enable these countries to pursue their development further.

The elaboration of such an answer is the current concern of most of the socialist countries, which are implementing original experiments and ideas in undertaking -- in some cases, with promising success -- major reforms adapted to the realities and demands of their specific situation. The development of decentralizing measures and initiatives to increase the working people's responsibility in the USSR, experiments with autonomy for enterprises and certain forms of self-management in Hungary or Bulgaria, the struggle against bureaucracy in Vietnam, the establishment of new people's authorities in Cuba: the fact that our media remain silent on these initiatives, examples of which could be multiplied, does not prevent them from existing and developing.

Without doubt, this evolution is itself subject to fumblings and errors. Delay in embarking on it causes the emergence of new problems, which could become critical. This is demonstrated by the current crisis in Poland. We have followed with interest the efforts made since August 1980 to resolve fundamental questions concerning economic life and social and political democracy. It is regrettable in every respect that errors of the past, difficulties and excessive promises have brought the country to the brink of chaos and the proclamation of the state of emergency. Our attitude toward this situation was dictated by a sense of responsibility as regards the Polish people as well as the interests of peace, detente, cooperation and socialism. We hope that the Polish nation will find the necessary resources within itself to overcome the crisis and find the anwers to the questions raised which socialism makes possible.

Like all living realities, socialism is constantly diversifying. Every decade new peoples choose to orient themselves along this path, in Asia, Central America and Africa. From Belgrade to Hanoi, from Havana to Luanda, socialism is the work of peoples with very different histories, highly individual traditions and the most varied attitudes. Far from regarding this as a cause for concern or a handicap, we see this evolution as natural and fruitful.

This growing differentiation confirms us in our choice of advancing toward socialism by individual paths, without in any way weakening our solidarity with parties and peoples who are building socialism in their own way and without claiming to make our own conception a model for others.

A New Internationalism

In this spirit, we rejoice in the new relations which exist between communist parties today. For a long time we have come out in favor of the implementation of relations based on independence, strict equality of rights and noninterference, the search for flexible, effective forms of joint action toward common goals and recognition of the right to different viewpoints and possible divergence on a particular question. This concept permeates all our practice. This was shown, in particular, in early 1980 by the major meeting between our party and that of the Soviet Union -- a meeting which defined the nature of our relations and our joint action on a basis taking account of our respective stances. This is also indicated by the number, range, form and content of the initiatives we have taken in common with other communist parties and progressive movements in recent years.

We wish to develop our relations with all communist parties, including those of China and Albania, which have broken with us. China's positions on international issues, which are in complete opposition to ours, above all on European questions, do not, in our view, constitute an obstacle to the resumption of relations between our two parties on a clear basis.

We devote increasing attention to the development of our solidarity and links of cooperation with liberation movements and all progressive forces fighting in very varied situation and forms. The PCF is resolved to continue its efforts in favor of a new internationalism in accordance with everything that is advancing in the world.

At the same time we are greatly interested in the fact that communist parties in a number of capitalist countries -- including ours -- have placed the development of democracy at the center of the paths to socialism which has been called Eurocommunism -- a term which is disputable, because it is too narrow. We note that this same democratic demand is now encountered outside our own continent and in parties or liberation movements which are operating in extremely diverse contexts. We rejoice in this.

Finally, our party is prepared to give concrete form to all opportunities for joint actions with socialist and social democratic parties, in particular in Europe and, more widely, throughout the world, toward goals which meet the interests of the peoples concerned, particularly peace and disarmament. It intends to pursue its efforts in favor of positive cooperation with forces representing the religious world.

A democratic advance toward a democratic socialism specifically adapted to French realities, the realities of the modern world: that is the great prospect to the fundamental problems which are posed in the present situation.

C. The Democratic Advance Today

The defeat of Giscard d'Estaing and the social and political forces which he represented has brought the question of change -- of its content, its extent and the means of achieving it -- to the fore today. This question, which has dominated debates within the left in recent years, is not settled in advance.

A New Situation

After last summer's political victory, millions of working people expect an alleviation of their fate and the commencement of efforts to resolve the most serious problems and to lead the country out of the difficulties which beset it. In the context of a crisis which is continuing to make its effects felt severely, this is not possible without embarking on the path of transformations which all call into question the domination of big capital.

That is why every step forward in this direction is the stake in a real class confrontation.

The initial social and democratic measures, the struggle which has been launched against unemployment and for training and reforms such as nationalizations or decentralization indicate that the action of the government and the majority, in which we are participating, is oriented in the right direction. True, the measures adopted do not all correspond to what we consider desirable. Major questions still remain, including those of unemployment, inflation and purchasing power and working people's rights. We intend to utilize all the new means now available to contribute to resolving them, convinced that progress can be made to the extent that the people affected themselves take part.

In the face of government initiatives the big bourgeoisie and the forces of the right are mobilizing and organizing themselves to hinder all progress. They are stepping up economic, financial, political and ideological pressure in an attempt to check the implementaiton of positive measures and wreck the new policy or deflect it in a direction which would suit them. Within the left, forces which contributed to the electoral success of 10 May want to avoid confrontation with capital for fear of seeing the working class playing a major role in that confrontation, and they preach class collaboration and seek to limit the people's participation, confine struggles within certain channels and weaken our party.

It must be noted that the major news media, in particular television and radio, are waging a war against change. The manipulation of information, deliberate silences and obsessive campaigns are still their day-to-day practice. Anticommunism is their chief weapon in opposing the transformations the country wants. The right to information -- an essential element in a new citizenship -- has still to be won. We call on all who are enraged by this challenge to democracy to say what they think of television and radio and to act in such a way as to make them respect pluralism and honesty and become -- more than they are today -- an instrument of culture, creation, emancipation and freedom. In this sphere as in others, every step forward always presupposes action by the people.

The working people expect a great deal of the new majority and the government, which are thus faced with the task of not disappointing their hopes. By making its ideas heard and through its action, our party can contribute to significant progress in this respect. This can already be seen on a number of issues on which it has waged major struggles together with the working people in recent years. So it is by no means inevitable that the present situation will make the country embark on a social democratic experiment. It is possible to implement another policy besides that of managing the crisis to the profit of big capital.

Our Party's Attitude

On the basis of this analysis we took account of the results of the universal suffrage and the choices which they indicated as regards the transformations of society and the pace of these transformations, and we decided to do everything to promote success.

In this spirit our party held discussions with the PS in order to determine whether sufficient convergences existed to make joint governmental action possible. Believing this to be the case, it concluded a positive political agreement with the PS and decided to take part in the government on this basis. This decision, which responds to the profound wishes of millions of French women and men, is fully in accordance with the political path defined by our 23d congress, whose resolution noted: "We are and always will be prepared to assume all our responsibility in the service of the working people and the people at all levels, including in government. We are all the more willing to participate in managing France's affairs in that otherwise the working people will not obtain the changes they need."

And this is an event whose significance has not yet been fully assessed. For the first time in 34 years, communists are taking part in the government of a major country in the capitalist world. The working people can henceforth assess the additional asset which this represents for their struggles. They know that our party will do everything in its power to respond to their hopes.

Moving Forward

In thus respecting the choice expressed by universal suffrage, we do not, of course, renounce our own ideas and our proposals. While taking an honorable place in the new majority, we develop our own action there and express our own specific features.

This is true in government, in an unfailing solidarity to keep the commitments made jointly with the PS. It is true in the National Assembly and the Senate and in local and regional communities, where our elected representatives incorporate in the action of the new majority their own initiatives based on commitments made to their voters. And it is also true in the country, in enterprises and localities, where, as a revolutionary party, we play our unique, independent role. In all spheres and in each individual case we strive to help those involved to utilize, in suitable forms, every new opportunity for resolving problems. In a frank spirit and in concrete terms we seek to clarify the situation and prospects, to rally people and to persuade them to act. Explaining, proposing, gaining, building -- that is our rule of action.

This multifaceted contribution by communists to the implementation of a new policy is absolutely irreplaceable. The class struggle did not end 10 May. On the contrary, the profound reforms which must now be implemented increase the stake and step up the bitterness of that struggle. Working people know from long experience that in the daily struggle against capital the Communist Party is the party which they always find on their side. Today they are checking to see whether the party can take its responsibilities in the country's leadership in the same spirit. Life is showing them and will show them that they need a big Communist Party.

So an upsurge in its influence is clearly in the interest of the people's movement. To those who habitually vote for it but who felt that a different vote was more useful in the peculiar circumstances of the last elections, our party said at once that it still regards them as communist voters. Today they have every reason to give thought to this. Working women and men, aware that our election results do not give us all the means of action that we desire, aware too that our participation is necessary if the change is to succeed, will gain new assets by giving their support to the Communist Party. We have confidence in the future. Nothing is ever won or lost in advance. In order to appreciate the current situation it is important to see clearly that, for the first time since the 22d and 23d congresses, we have favorable conditions for implementing our strategy successfully.

The future will depend largely on our ability to develop this stragegy to the full in the prospects which are now open.

III. A New Political Practice

Our strategy poses the problem of our political activity in new terms. This novelty is increasingly highlighted today. A party of the class struggle, our party is also, from now on, a member of the majority in power and a government party. This is a totally unprecedented situation for the vast majority of its members. So every communist and every party organization must be up to the level demanded by this situation.

True, we have at our disposal the ideas put forward by our last two congresses and the experience accumulated in implementing them. But the conclusion to be drawn from the period which has elapsed is that we have not yet made sufficient progress along this path. The current situation commands us to go more quickly and further.

1. A New Style of Mass Activity

So what does it mean, in today's conditions, to implement a new political practice?

Developing Realities and Consciousness

First of all, it means the improved translation into life of our strategy of democratic advance to change realities and consciousness. That is the central issue. It is essential to see clearly how it is posed from now on.

In today's situation all the major problems of French society in crisis are in the forefront of life today: the problems of unemployment and jobs, inflation and the cost of living, nationalizations and the extension of working people's rights, school and training, fiscal reform, decentralization, the pluralism and honesty of information, France's initiatives in favor of peace and disarmament, and many more. They are in the forefront not only in governmental or parliamentary deliberations, but everywhere in the country, in the people's everyday preoccupations. And this is occurring in a context where despite the obstacles, it is possible to make progress.

It is not only possible, it is necessary. If we did not resolve these major problems, progressively but resolutely, in the interests of the working people and the nation, there could be no way out of the crisis, no profound and lasting change. To fail to advance in this direction would be to meet with the failure which the big bourgeoisie is openly anticipating and preparing for.

Nothing is more important than to make this possibility and this necessity clear to the working people and all forces of the people. They are still far from being obvious to everyone, and many ambiguities surround the word "change", the content which it conceals and the means it demands. So how can we bring about progress simultaneously in the solution of major problems and in the working people's consciousness? That is the point in the implementation of our strategy in a new style of mass activity.

The first requirement, which determines all the others, is to develop this activity on the ground and in life, at the place and time where these fundamental problems face people, in terms of their concrete difficulties, claims and struggles. It is to be present, active, inventive in discussing with them the means of resolving these problems, defining with them the goals which lead to progress and which can be attained, conducting action with them in forms which make it possible to achieve results. To begin to change things today, that is the great watchword.

It is a question of being in on all the working people's struggles to gain all possible advantages, rights, freedoms and positions. And in this struggle it is a question of highlighting the successes achieved without ceasing to note their limits, increasing understanding of the causes and the profound solutions of the crisis and of the class stakes in the battle to emerge from it, in order to ensure that the will to bring about the more profound transformations which will launch the country firmly on the path of renewal, can progress.

It is in this very process of action to advance things that we must advance our ideas in the working people's consciousness. That is the way to be understood better in developing our original proposals. That is the way to be incisive in the debates aroused day after day by great questions such as those of the working class' role in the nation, the contribution of science to progress, the conditions for new growth or self-management, the new world order. That is the way to make people understand that the socialism we are proposing is not a dream, but is precisely designed to meet the working people's needs, the demands of the situation and the opportunities of our country and our time. To sum up, it is a question of making clear the innovative solutions we propose, without claiming to have resolved all the problems in advance. We will thus make clear all the prospects for the advance step by step.

That is what we must do, with all our might, all our capacity for initiative and all our tenacity. That is true at all levels -- at the level of the government and the assemblies, but also -- above all -- in the country, in enterprises, in the people's housing districts, wherever all the problems of the crisis are present and the main battles are played out. We must, in doing this, make use of all the possibilities which arise today: The opportunities offered, for instance, by the new rights which must be ensured for working people in nationalized companies; the opportunities -- which must be better appreciated and which the working people must be made to appreciate better -- which enable them to deepen their political involvement in the sphere of enterprise management; the opportunities which should be opened up by the new powers of elected assemblies in regions, departments and communes.

Whether in a majority or a minority, our elected representatives have an unprecedented role to play there as a force for proposals, attentive to the quality of their relations with the population and the implementation of self-management. It is through this mass activity on the part of all communists that, in conjunction with the development of the working people's struggles, we want to push our people's democratic gains -- at the pace they themselves decide -- as far as socialism.

Taking Account of Everyone's Interests and Aspirations

Developing our political activity in this way implies taking account of the interests and aspirations of all components of the working class, from the most exploited strata to technicians, and of all categories of manual and intellectual workers.

In practice the rightful concern to respond more fully to the needs of those working men and women who suffer the greatest difficulties has sometimes resulted in less attention being paid to the needs of others, as if priority meant exclusivity. We must take care to confront simultaneously the problems of all working people in all their varied categories and situations, while making ourselves more fully understood on the need to recognize the place and role of the working class in national life.

Expressing and defending the working class' interests is our first preoccupation.

Whatever the theorists of its decline may say, the historical role of the working class is continually strengthening. This is the result not of dogma, but of facts. The working class, viewed in its full extent, represents nearly half the active population. It is the living force in the production process. The first, chief victim of the crisis, it has the greatest interest in change. Excluded from responsibilities and power by capital, it has acquired experience of struggle and organization which give it an irreplaceable political capability for the nation. Its action is decisive in advancing the class struggle. Its claims and aspirations are at the core of all French society's major problems. Their satisfaction accords not only with its own interests, but with those of all other categories of working people and those of the nation itself.

The development of productive forces again extended its historical role. Scientific and technical progress, by powerfully emphasizing the social nature of production, make production rely increasingly on a real "collective worker" combining all production functions. The quality of the work force has improved, whether it is a question of the level of workers' education or of the fact that most technicians -- like employees or certain engineers in production -- are today an integral part of the working class, which underlines the increasing share of intellectual work in production. Thus its ability to take charge of production capacities, which have been misused by big capital, and to master all aspects of the process of revolutionary transformation of society has grown.

The working class' role is strengthened all the more because the essential framework of its activity -- the enterprise -- now occupies a central place in the country's life. It is there that the great technological and social changes characteristic of our era are manifested, that the depth of the crisis is expressed most severely, in its effects as well as its causes. It is there that the working class -- from semiskilled workers to technicians -- and employees, engineers and cadres meet and new prospects are opening up of collectives of working people based on free, responsible cooperation between varied abilities being exercised in complementary functions. It is there that we find the mass of immigrant workers, whose rights and dignity we defend in all circumstances. The enterprise is the prime site of the class struggle. That is why all political forces attach such importance to it today. That is why the bosses are making unprecedented ideological and political efforts there. Conducting a battle at the enterprise and winning it must be the first goal for all the party.

Since the 23d congress a weakening of our work at enterprises has been noted, as indicated by the loss of several hundred cells. True, this is partly due to the major movement of close enterprises which has characterized the recent period, but it is also -- above all -- due to the inadequacy of our activity in this sphere, from the Central Committee to federal committees. All the consequences must be drawn from this without delay. It is here, first and foremost, that it is important to implement a new political practice: To change the dimension and quality of our political activity and our initiatives in the struggle, to enrich our knowledge of current realities in the enterprise and to take account as closely as possible of the transformations taking place among wage earners, and in the working class itself, whose unity requires unceasing efforts. This requires that at all party levels -- Central Committee, federal committee, section committee -- we deploy our leading forces on the basis of these goals, in order to stimulate concrete activity by communists and to strengthen the party in all enterprises, particularly in big ones. The party as a whole must be convinced that the upsurge of its influence and the democratic advance toward socialism are interdependent.

At the same time we must develop constant activity in response to the legitimate needs and aspirations of all categories of working people. Employees, though lacking the cohesion and experience of the working class, have increased considerably in number, and are confronting working and living conditions which make their interests converge increasingly with those of the working class. There are new grounds here for sustained work by communists among them, with a view to ensuring the in public office, in banks and insurance companies, in big stores and in all enterprises, employees take their place with other working people in the struggle.

The number and role of engineers and cadres have also increased with the upsurge of science and technology. Increasingly closely involved, and in diverse forms, they, like workers, are facing business strategies dictated by the law of profit and monopoly redeployment. We call on them to disassociate themselves from the bosses' authoritarianism and ideological pressures and to act to gain recognition for the irreplaceable nature of their activity and their knowledge, and this does not run counter to the effort to give the working class its rightful place in the enterprise and in the nation.

Alongside them, intellecturals today number 4.5 million women and men carrying out their activity in various spheres of production, in research, education, literary and artistic life, information, health care, social life, urban planning, justice and major public bodies. As the Bobigny National Council stressed in February 1980, their social status has changed profoundly. For the most part, with each sector's specific features, they are today, properly speaking, intellectual workers, affected by the crisis in differing degrees. Their mass participation in the struggle to change society has become a historical possibility. But for many reasons, the contradiction between the aspiration for change and the fears which it inspires is often expressed in a particularly complex fashion in them. Winning the great majority of them over to the democratic and revolutionary struggle means combining a persistent effort to illuminate the class nature of the problems they encounter with a struggle, with them, for the rebirth of French culture.

The peasant masses have suffered severely from the effects of a policy which strikes at agriculture, restricts public consumption, makes their incomes fall and leads to the elimination of many family farms. Their opposition to this policy, their adherence to national independence and the developments of the cooperation whose gains we defend create firm foundations for joint action by them with the working class. We will win them over in greater numbers by fighting with them for their rightful claims, defending the interests of French agriculture in a common market whose expansion we fight and by further publicizing our concept of modern agriculture based on the family farm within the prospects of the French brand of socialism. The distribution of la terre is a precious asset in all these battles.

Craftsmen fall victim on a large scale to capitalist concentration. It is by joining the working class' struggle that they will be able to achieve their claims for social and fiscal justice and the modernization of their useful independent economic activity. Like that of craftsmen, the activity of small traders is useful for the present and the future.

Small- and medium-sized enterprises in trade and industry are also victims of the crisis. In all circumstances we defend the interests of working people, who are often subjected in these enterprises to forms of exploitation common in another age. At the same time we must show that these enterprises have no way out of their present difficulties and no firm prospects for the future except in the advance toward socialism.

To take better account of everyone's interests and aspirations is also to pursue and develop the work which has been commenced with women and young people. The massive entry by women into their struggle is one of the major changes of our time. We are the party of their liberation, which will mark a new advance of civilization, enriching for men as well as women. This forward movement is not, of course, without contradictions. Women -- workers, employees, intellectuals, agriculturalists, or without professional activity -- do not form a homogeneous category and perceive the means to their liberation in very different ways. It is an essential aspect of our activity to proceed on the basis of their particular claims and their aspirations to equality, in order to win them over for the struggle for new rights, democratic progress and socialism and to enrich that struggle with their unique contribution.

Young people played a prominent role in the victory of the left. They aspire to liberation from the injustices and social selectivity which deprive them of real training, condemn them to unemployment and casual labor, suppress their aspirations and deny them responsibilities. But things will not change unless young people themselves make them change. The democratic advance toward socialism and the struggle for peace and a new world order need them in the millions. Young people today, discovering the world through crisis, have great potential for the struggle, but are at the same time susceptible -- sometimes in an alarming degree -- to the degradation of social life. Helping them to find the path of action is possibile only if, while giving constant, increased support to the communist youth movement -- an essential base for communist activity among them -- all party organizations regularly talk to young people and students frankly and responsibly, approach their problems in concrete terms, take initiatives with them and familiarize them with our proposals. Much remains to be done to ensure that -- as the Central Committee recommended in 1979 -- every young person hears our call to struggle, from this moment on, to defend his life and build his future.

All these efforts are essential for the development of the majority rallying of our people, which is a central goal of our strategy. But matters must be looked in the face: The extreme diversity of specific situations, the particular effects of the crisis and ways of living, thinking and reacting in the cirsis make this task very complex. It is no more a matter of a random rallying of malcontents than of asking each category to lose its identity in the union. Without blurring anything that differentiates and at times opposes different categories, it is necessary, through struggle and the ideological battle, to promote the development of awareness of the fundamental convergence of interests.

Acting in the Broadest Possible Union

The same will to rally our people motivates our call for joint action by all who, beyond differences of philosophy, belief or choice, want to take part in changing society. This appeal is addressed to believers who are sensitive to all that injures man in the world and in France but also to the hopes indicated by the people's struggles and who want to give active social expression to their faith. How could our struggle for justice and solidarity, democracy and self-management, peace and a new world order, the development of individuals and respect for their dignity fail to meet their aspirations? We always attach particular importance to the development of dialogue and joint action between Christians and communists. Without losing sight of the obstacles which the church heirarchies place in the path of such a rapprochement, but being aware of all the movements developing within the churches, we, for our part, are resolved to give a new dimension to our relations with Christian working people and with all believers and to make an effort to overcome the narrow attitudes which can still overshadow them.

This appeal is also addressed to all who react as patriots to whatever diminishes France, alienates its independence and tarnishes its image in the world. Throughout their history communists, as they know, have always placed the development of the nation and its independence and security at the center of their concerns. With the left's arrival in power, guaranteeing Frances' existence as a major sovereign nation and ensuring its proper role in the world are more than ever topical tasks, inseparable, today, from the prospects of socialism. We want to unite all those who regard these goals as their own, over and above the features which distinguish us.

This appeal is also addressed to those who display their will to live, work and decide in the regions, who act to preserve and enrich the character of their own region and fight for a France in which national unity is combined with the diversity of living regions with their own autonomy and democratic means of resolving for themselves the problems within their jurisdiction. It is addressed to those who are fighting, in the most diverse forms, for a new quality of life and of the environment, for all the causes of social and human solidarity. In issuing these appeals we are not pursuing the design of confining the great diversity of possible contributions to progress within stereotyped formulas for struggle and union. On the contrary, we believe that, following the logic of our belonging to the majority and our presence in the government, unprecedented convergences cannot fail to appear between us and men and women with whom we have not previously been in the habit of acting. We develop this path without restraint, since the goals of the struggle clearly express the people's needs.

In short, we are prepared to respond with everyone, in the broadest possible union, to the interests of the people and the nation.

Communists, the Trade Union Movement and the Life of Associations

To implement our strategy in concrete form in order to allow it to grow in life is to give more impetus to our mass work. If we devote particular attention to this aspect of the party's own activity, this does not mean that we are any less aware of the importance of the trade union movement. As was stressed by the still topical document on this subject which our party published in 1979, the French trade union movement, where the spirit of the class struggle predominates at the cost of a continuing fight, is a decisive force for defending wage earners' rights and helping to open up the path to social progress, freedoms and socialism.

We rejoice in the special nature of the relations which exist between our party and the CGT, the country's foremost trade union organization, which has the confidence of millions of working people of various shades of opinion. Still stronger class and mass trade unionism is an indispensable asset for thwarting the bosses' maneuvers, giving the struggle more breadth and effectiveness and creating the conditions for a positive emergence from the crisis. These are all reasons for communists belonging to the CGT to play a full part in its activity and in strengthening it, with strict respect for its statutes and its program. Taking into account the trade union movement as it is, in its present diversity, and without concealing any of the affinities, differences or divergencies which may exist, we are moved by a sincere desire to establish and maintain fruitful relations with all representative trade union organizations -- in mutual respect for the nature and the independence of each -- for the struggle and for common goals in accordance with the working people's interests and aspirations.

Social, family, women's, cultural and sporting movements, school parents' associations, associations for the child, for the defense of the handicapped, of tenants, of veterans, of consumers and of pensioners, associations of a cooperative or mutualist nature and more besides, which form the rich diversity of the life of associations in France, enable millions of citizens to take collective charge of their own problems.

The Communist Party bases its relations with these movements and organizations, as with trade unions, on mutual respect for the independence of each of them, for its purpose and for its freedom of assessment and criticism. On this basis it is prepared to develop, with all who wish it, meetings, exchanges and convergences useful to the people's movement as a whole. It fights for the free development of the life of associations, as is indicated by the actions of its elected representatives. The democratic, self-managing socialism for which we are fighting will promote its flourishing.

Aware of the value of these organizations' role, communists wish to contribute to their creation, their vitality and their initiatives. They intend to be more involved and more active in them. They are guided in all circumstances by the desire to do everything to ensure that the organization to which they belong serves the interests of those who trust it well. It is in this spirit that they assume the responsibilities and mandates entrusted to them in these organizations. Through long years of struggle within the trade union and association movement and the frank, mutually enriching debates they have held, communists have demonstrated their competence, devotion and ability to act with everyone. Today one of their major contributions to the upsurge of the people's movement is to advance still further in this direction.

2. A Revolutionary Party Taking the Initiative

A new style of mass activity, putting into practice a strategy of revolutionary scope: That is the full response to the problems facing us. But this response would be nothing without a revolutionary party capable of opening up the path to self-managing socialism.

A Capacity for Initiative and a Heightened Political and Ideological Level

At all our congresses we emphasize the need to improve the party's activity, strengthen its organizations and improve the standard of training of its members. Today there is no question of merely reiterating the importance of these continuing demands. What we must do is to assess their qualitatively new aspects.

By organizing our entire strategy around the continuing advance of the struggle and thereby giving still more concrete meaning to our party's vanguard role, our 22d and 23d congresses gave rise to the demand for a new political practice by communists and party organizations profoundly different from the practice which met the conditions of the preceding period. Pursuing to the utmost the living adaptation of our political practice to today's tasks is therefore a real issue.

It is, first and foremost, a question of the party's capacity for initiatives: the initiative of its leadership at all levels, which naturally remains essential; the initiative of grassroots organizations and activists, who must be ready to seize rapidly, imaginatively and responsibly the concrete opportunities which arise in life in order to implement our policy in a creative way -- that is the decisive question. This poses, with even greater force than in the past, the problem of the role of the cell, of all cells, of their regular activity, their political discussion, their aptitude for action, and thus the work of cell bureaus. And this increases the need for political assistance, which must be given to cell secretaries and to section leadership bodies, whose participation is essential to promote thought and stimulate mass activity on the part of their organizations.

A greater capacity for initiative demands a higher political and ideological level. Today every communist and every party organization must, in order to face more complex situations more quickly, be capable of confronting in their daily actions the great questions of changing society and of finding answers to these questions which are both fundamental and specific. They must be well up on the development of national and international realities and the evolution of the knowledge and experience on which our strategy is based, so as to be able to master that strategy in depth, contribute to its continuing elaboration and implement it in an increasingly well-adapted way.

This makes it incumbent on the party to ensure really collective intellectual activity within the party. It also makes it essential for every communist to engage in personal labor and effort to broaden his knowledge, enrich his culture, deepen his thought and participate in the most active possible way in the party's life and the development of its policy.

Hence the increased importance of the circulation of information and the critical exchange of experience, in which our press plays an essential part. Hence the need for a more extensive effort -- continuing and diversified -- to educate communists at all levels of the party and to develop reading and fight for our books and journals. Hence the significance of creative theoretical research, putting into practice the 23d congress' new ideas on the living nature of our theory and its links with our policy. In all spheres, beginning with history and the social sciences, Marxism is more than ever demonstrating its fruitfulness through the collection of works and the public expression of their gains. The development of the Institute of Marxist Research is opening up vast prospects in all these spheres.

A Broader Popularization of Our Policy

Taking the initiative also means popularizing our policy through rapid, direct, multi-faceted propaganda linked with action and means taking part more and more rapidly in the daily battle of ideas. We must extend our efforts in this direction, particularly at enterprises. At the same time we must step up the democratic demand that television and radio at least speak honestly of our party and its activity and proposals.

We devote particular attention to our national press and our three regional dailies. For 2 years great efforts have been devoted to the circulation of L'HUMANITE and L'HUMANITE DIMANCHE. These efforts have enabled us to reverse the downward trend and to ensure some progress in circulation. But they are not yet up to the level required by the current situation. The reading of our press by all communists is more essential than ever -- first and foremost the reading of L'HUMANITE, which expresses our policy day by day and is an irreplaceable means of circulating information and promoting thought in the party. Increasing the paper's circulation means making a powerful contribution to enlightening the working people, helping their struggles and increasing our influence. So this should be still more the concern of all the party leadership. At the same time efforts must be pursued to ensure that an upsurge in the circulation of revolution enables our weekly to play its full role in the country's political, ideological and cultural life.

A Stronger Party

Developing our initiatives in all directions in this way is inconceivable without a mass party that is stepping up its relations with the population and is thus very firmly installed, particularly in decisive areas: in enterprises -- big, medium-sized and small -- where millions of manual and intellectual working women and men are gathered, as well as in the people's cities.

Our party, with 710,000 members and 27,500 cells, including 9,500 at enterprises, already has a considerable force at its disposal. The substantial progress made in this sphere since the 22d congress is one indication of the fruitfulness of the strategy adopted by the party at that congress. But this cannot be enough, since it is a question of forging a rallying of the people involving the vast majority of the nation.

In this respect it is essential to form a good assessment of the opportunities offered by the current political situation. Tens and hundreds of thousands of men and women, above all young people, of different origins, education, experience and even philosophical and religious convictions could join our party. They wanted the left to win. They now want it to succeed, and hope to make the best possible contribution to this end. Even if they do not yet know our party well, they know they can count on it. They have their place among us. They must be welcomed unreservedly.

Naturally, this means that special attention must be devoted to the speedy integration of these new members, that conditions for welcoming them into our organizations must be substantially improved and that intensive educational work must be carried out to help them to adopt our policy and put it into practice, thereby immediately giving the utmost effectiveness to the correct choice they have made.

A Richer Democratic Life

All this leads us to continue the effort to enrich the party's democratic life.

This question must be the constant concern of every communist and the party as a whole. At a time when the revolutionary struggle is confronting new questions, when the aspiration for responsibility is continuing to increase and when we ourselves have placed democracy at the heart of our strategy, the conscious participation and creative, critical contribution of members to the elaboration and implementation of our policy are essential to progress.

In this sphere our party has made much progress, and that is a good thing. It will continue to progress. It will do so by increasingly implementing its characteristic organizational principle: democratic centralism.

Free, profound discussion; majority decisions; their implementation by everyone, without excluding the right to retain a different viewpoint -- these great rules define the only method of organization which corresponds to the demands of a party which is waging a revolutionary struggle and therefore needs a genuinely democratic life. That is why this is the specific mode of operation of the Communist Party.

Democratic centralism enables every communist to participate fully in the party's life and its collective decisions and enables the party as a whole to base the effectiveness of its action, as well as its fidelity to commitments made to our people, on a joint resolution. It creates the means for a diversified and at the same time cohesive understanding of reality, for thought which is both personal and collective, developing into practical initiative and based on experience of struggle. We are all the more committed to it in that it is more than ever the condition for the development and implementation of our strategy and thus for the democratic advance to socialism.

That is why our total opposition to the system of organization based on currents is self-evident. It is only necessary to observe to become convinced of this: Far from ensuring a richer exchange of ideas, the formation of currents crystallizes positions, reduced debate to confrontation, aligns supporters behind leaders and personalizes all problems. With this system there can be no collective elaboration of strategy, and in many cases there can be no elementary guarantees of internal democracy for supporters, or any assurance that public commitments will not be called into question again by groupings of staff officers. The system of curremts is a caricature of democracy. It is the very opposite of what is suitable for a revolutionary party like ours.

No indeed, our democratic life has no fear of comparison or criticism. Nor is it enclosed in fixed forms. The forms are modified as the conditions of the political battle evolve and as our strategy develops. It was in this spirit that the 23d congress made substantial amendments to our statutes. Initiatives have been taken to implement these, whether it is a question of the role of the National Council or of the discussion platform, which prepared one of its meetings to discuss our activity among intellectuals.

We must continue along this path. The task of our leadership at all levels -- from the Central Committee to the cell bureau -- is to put this will into practice more effectively in the life of our organizations. This is also a matter for every communist. The party's democratic life, while it has every opportunity to develop within the framework of our rules of operation, finds its wealth in the irreplaceable contribution of the experiences, thoughts, viewpoints and proposals of every member.

The party's cohesion, to which we are committed, has nothing to do with a monolithic approach. The idea that communists should renounce their differences and express themselves and react as one man is not our idea. Everyone comes to the party with his own reasons, his own experience, his own knowledge. Everyone is increasingly facing large-scale questions and a rapid succession of unprecedented situations, which give rise to numerous, rich and impassioned ideas and discussions. Far from fearing this diversity and vitality, we regard it as a great wealth which must be made to bear fruit. Just as diversity is not division, so unity is not uniformity.

The 710,000 women and men of the PCF today have more reason than ever to reaffirm their fundamental choice, a choice they renew every year, to be members of the revolutionary party of the working class.

To be a communist is to want to transform the world and to free mankind. The current situation in France offers a vast new field of application for this will. If our party has nearly always been in opposition throughout its long history, it is because those who exploit and those who oppress have hitherto nearly always been in power. But the party is only the implacable opponent of the forces of the past so that it is better equipped to be the builder of the future.

To build the future; that is the task today.

FITERMAN 4 FEB ADDRESS TO CONGRESS SESSION

PM151423 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 5 Feb 82 p 10

["Text" of speech by Politburo Member Charles Fiterman at 24th PCF Congress on 4 February: "The Communists Have a Calling To Build, Administer, Govern"]

[Text] Since Communists entered the government, a game has been played almost daily by one commentator or another. Their game consists of asking the question: "Are they ministers first and Communists second, or, vice versa, Communists... and then ministers?" It is as though Anicet le Pors, Jack Ralite, Marcel Rigout and I had to change costume and even ideas according to the place and the circumstances.

A serious problem! A bogus problem! No, gentlemen; rest assured we do not suffer from this painful split personality. We feel at home sitting around the table in the Council of Ministers to do our work there seriously and with a sense of responsibility, and we feel at ease, very much at ease here, at this congress of French Communists.

That is quite natural. Communists are not destroyers. They want to transform society, and that of course makes them oppose the forces of the old society, which continues to survive, fight all injustice and try to destroy every Bastille, as the saying goes. This is the path they have to take. The desperate efforts made to prevent them from holding any responsibilities to isolate them and treat them like "barbarians who must be kept outside the city gates" have made them wage this struggle with increased determination.

Let us recognize that although this long period of opposition that has been forced on Communists has developed their qualities, it may have also established certain reflexes and habits. I recall the suggestion made to us in an interview with that immensely talented entertainer Raymond Devos in L'HUMANITE DIMANCHE. He said: People misjudge you Communists. They think you are against everything. One day you should splash the words "We agree" across the whole front page of L'HUMANITE.

A Sense of the General Interest

But indeed, what are Communists if not fundamentally builders? The whole point of their ideal, of their commitment, is to work to achieve a concrete improvement in people's lives, to establish justice everywhere, to open up all realms of freedom to everyone, to contribute to the progress of the economy, technology, science and French culture and to beget and build a society that will be a milestone in the advance of French society and civilization.

This positive ambition has not remained mere talk; it has long been part of reality. Everyone is ready to recognize the devotion, initiative, competence and sense of the general interest shown by Communists holding responsible posts in every sort of association, in the leadership of town councils and departments and in the National Assembly.

Within the same context how could they not, therefore, take their place in the government with the same passion and devote themselves to serving the country now that the conditions for participation have been created, partly, by their own struggle?

Yes, the Communists have a calling to build, administer and govern as they are, for what they are. And let us say without any false modesty that the fact that this possibility is now open to them again is a good thing for France. In saying that, I am not losing sight of the concrete conditions and the political framework within which the new government was established.

In the past period we put forward and defended the solutions we thought were the right ones that the country needed truly to emerge from the severe crisis it had sunk into. It is true that these solutions did not get the support we needed. We have suffered a setback, but we have not, however, changed our minds with respect to these solutions -- we have had no reason to do so.

The fact that immediately and without hesitation, for reasons that have to do with the very foundations of our policy, we took into account the verdict of universal suffrage, as we did, does not imply any renunciation on our part. To be a democrat does not mean changing your mind depending on which way the wind is blowing. There has been no sudden change in the crisis, and what we proposed amounts to an objective and radical response to it.

And then, to think that it is precisely the fact that we fought over the solution, and also the way we did so, that is responsible for our setback is, as we have said, to miss the point and gloss over the problem, thinking to resolve it. For that is to leave unanswered the question of why we were not able -- and we would not have been any more able if we had corrected this or that failing -- to gather enough support for our proposals for them to be not necessarily an alternative in themselves but a decisive basis for one.

It is obvious that the reply to this question relates to evolutions and phenomena infinitely more deep-seated and longer term than the events of the last few years.

Seed That Will Germinate

In the conditions created by these deep-seated tendencies, on the strength of the analysis that we have undertaken and of the new persepctive we have begun to offer to the country, we have chosen simply to fight. There is never dishonor in doing this for ideas that are just, and in doing it with sincerity we have sown a seed that will germinate.

Having said that, as soon as the French people expressed their will, taking into account the fact that the insufficient backing we won had limited our possibilities, we had to answer the question of what, in the new situation, the choices were that could make it possible to alleviate the difficulties of millions of working people and families, improve the situation in the country and make progress toward the necessary changes. Our reply was unambiguous; we contributed to the victory of 10 May. With the PS, we sought to define -- within the framework of the new policies the country wanted -- sufficient common ground for governmental collaboration, and we succeeded in doing so. And, as the president of the republic suggested to us and as we ourselves had persistently been demanding for years, we took our place within the government.

We did so because we were well aware that the only way to advance was with the majority of our people -- as it had expressed itself -- at their pace and basing ourselves on their experience. We did so because under any circumstances our calling is to be there as soon as a possibility -- however tenuous it may be -- arises for improving the lot of the men and women of this country as well as that of the country itself. And how could we not have been there at a time when a wave of hope was sweeping the country?

Finally; we did so because, without in any way underestimating the handicap of our setback, which has to be kept in mind, we cannot underestimate, either, the aspiration for change and the desire to obtain it contained in the results of the polling last spring, and what we ourselves represent as a force whose reality is already proven in the fact that its presence seems necessary to the government.

So we got down to work. You would be surprised if I said that the task was easy. It is quite obviously not. First and foremost, we are running up against the many consequences of the disastrous policies pursued for so many years by governments of the right. There is a veritable constant flood of letters, appeals, requests for meetings, gaps opening up all over the place that have to be plugged as a matter of urgency, files of multiple interlinked problems.

Producing Appropriate Solutions

Of course, we were expecting this. Let us say that we have not been disappointed. To confine myself to an example with which I am familiar, that of the French National Railway Company, I found myself faced with a company with certain indisputable technical achievements to its credit which was nonetheless also in a very difficult financial situation and had immediate urgent needs, sectors that were in ruins, others that were on a path of planned decline, and a steadily decreasing staff, all of which was having a profound effect on behaviour and mentalities. I would add that the situation cannot be assessed and dealt with outside the context of its relationship with other modes of transport, the roads and canals, and the difficult problems in these sectors themselves must be taken into account.

This brings me to note in passing that on all questions of any importance, and those are not few and far between, interministerial work is essential and is conducted according to the usual rules. Do problems arise? That's not at all surprising. The main thing is gradually to find appropriate solutions within the context of loyal and constructive cooperation that fits in with the policies chosen by the country. It is in this spirit that we work and have begun to make progress.

And we are doing this with the help of an administration and officials whom we have not prejudged a priori and against whom we are taking care not to exercise any discrimination at any level, asking them simply to serve the state and the policies the French people have democratically chosen for themselves in accordance with French public officials' tradition of loyalty and fidelity to the national interest. I have already said that things are proceeding satisfactorily, although it is true that any change requires effort.

Some people have said that after six or seven months it is still too soon to make any assessments and I do not want to draw up a list here of the measures taken. They are numerous and varied and are the beginnings of a movement that is, overall, unquestionably positive. I would like to point out that this is due not only to the concrete results achieved in various fields on the basis of the decisions that have been adopted, but also to the fact that this new situation has made it possible to make progress with issues that had long been deadlocked and in many cases to open up new possibilities in a new climate. That is not to say that everything is going smoothly.

We Have Only Just Started

Of course, we are nowhere near the end of our task: we have only just started. Especially as the forces of the right, as was inevitable, are not doing anything to make things easier. Filibustering and the appeal to the Constitutional Council have delayed the implementation of the reforms necessary to establish the foundations for change or encouraged pressure to limit their scope. At the same time, leaders on the right like Messrs Chirac, D'Ornanq and Giraud, even going so far as to shamelessly contradict certain past initiatives of their own, are not hesitating to give domestic political considerations priority in questions where the country's fundamental interests should be the sole consideration, for example, with regard to the contracts for gas supplies signed with the Soviet Union and Algeria.

There are also reservations about and resistance to supporting the policy of recovery, investment and winning back the domestic market, as well as those forms of pressure that consist in painting a catastrophic picture of the situation in a particular sector which is totally out of proportion to the real state of affairs, as the Federation of Real Estate Developers has just done.

There is no justification for this behavior; the government of the left it not one of revenge. It has embarked on policies whose main objective is to boost economic activity, investment and employment and, to this end, it has increased the amount and range of assistance available and the incentives offered. Though there are still things to be done in particular fields the possibilities for doing them exist. Anyhow, the French people expressed their wishes. It is the duty of all who hold responsibilities in national life to respect those wishes.

In this connection Premier Pierre Mauroy said a few days ago that "change must be continued and even resolutely accelerated" to make "1982 a decisive year in this respect." This is of course very desirable.

I recently visited the little commune of Novillars in Doubs Department. There is a paper mill there that was threatened with closure. Action by the staff and local elected representatives and intervention by the state made it possible to avoid this and keep half the staff on. The other half, 140 men and women -- with children and parents to support -- are greatly upset because there is no other possibility of employment in the area. They came to see me, and I will never forget that scene nor the words of the union official who said to me, tears in his eyes: "We acknowledge that a step has been taken. But no one can rejoice if half of us are condemned to unemployment and poverty. You won't behave like preceding governments. We're counting on you. And don't forget that 75 percent of Novillars voted for Francois Mitterrand."

Yes, the country needs change, it has to be pursued and developed with seriousness and a sense of responsibility, but without delay. Let everyone be assured that the communist ministers are doing their best in their position and with their resources to achieve this. Although they are not, of course, claiming to be able to replace the necessary initiative from the millions of men and women who need change.

The venture we have embarked upon, as everyone knows, is complex. But we have not specified its duration in advance. We are not trying to play for time pending better days. We want to build better days by working, as we are doing, in the service of the country.

I want to say in this connection that we must beware of simplistic comparisons with the past. This is neither 1936 nor 1945. There are many differences, which are not all of the same nature.

I have mentioned the disposition of political forces, but also the fact that in assessing influence we must not confine ourselves to the figures. The struggles we have waged -- even in the context of the joint program, which, moreover, had the consequences we have mentioned -- have sown ideas and advanced the forces. These are important factors. There are others. I am referring to the extent of the changes that have taken place in French society in the last three decades and at the same time to the severity of the crisis that all this has resulted in. A crisis which embraces destruction, waste, upheavals, needs and far-reaching new aspirations.

The international environment must also be taken into account. It is made up of constraints that are more severe than in the past owing to the interpenetration of economies and the links between currencies. But there are also profound changes that have taken place in the world that have a considerable effect on international relations, and on France's opportunities to develop -- within the framework of its alliances -- its own policies and to act in an original way with its European partners. Ideas and lessons can be drawn from the various international experiences.

There are many people in our country who, on the basis of all this, seriously want the changes to progress and at the same time are looking to the long term in the hope that things work out and the forces of the left prove their ability to master so complex a situation.

The Future Is Wide Open

For our part, it is on the basis of the facts that I have briefly mentioned that we are defining our path to French-style socialism the French way, a path marked by political changes and by struggles which result in advances, nurture new ideas and promote new options. And notice, by the way, how in a short space of time the fact that communists are present in the government of a major Western country like ours has become normal -- I almost said commonplace -- for our citizens, when not so long ago this was proclaimed and perceived as heralding the worst catastrophes. It is not for nothing that forces opposed to change are now redoubling their efforts, dreaming of changing this situation. A priori, we are certainly taking a long-term view of our actions today -- including our actions within the government. We are and always will be ready to go as far as possible, as far as the people of this country want to go down the path of change.

In his speech Georges Marchais described this choice as a challenge to our partners, using a phrase recalling the "democratic challenge" of 1973. And the approach we have embarked on in very concrete terms today is basically the same as the approach that was begun then. I also have confidence in our ability to sustain our competition, which must, of course, serve our people and be harmonized with a constant concern to ensure, together within the union, the success of the jointly decided objectives.

We communists have our faults, like anyone else, but also, and above all, we have original qualities which prompt us to defend the people's interests; to promote anything that contributes to national greatness and prosperity; to love peace and to be committed to friendship and equality among peoples; and to struggle to realize our ideal of justice and liberty via socialism.

These are new times, exciting and uncertain ones. Nowhere is history written in advance. The future is wide open. In order to build it, our people need us and will need us even more tomorrow.

PCI Message to Congress

PM121121 Venice L'UNITA in Italian 7 Feb 82 p 15

[Report on PCI message to PCF Congress delivered by delegation leader and Secretariat member Adalberto Minucci at Bobigny: "PCI's Greetings Message Delivered by Adalberto Minucci" -- date not specified]

[Text] Paris -- Comrade Adalberto Minucci delivered the PCI's greetings to the French Communists' Congress, speaking at a meeting in the city of Bobigny. Having recalled the long years of cooperation and solidarity between the parties since the years of fascism and the resistance and the class ties forged between the French workers movement and Italian migrants, Minucci expressed his pleasure at being able to convey the PCI's greetings actually in the city of Bobigny -- a city of important traditions for the workers and democratic movement, which has been governed by a leftwing administration and by communist mayors for several decades.

"Italian Communists and workers," Minucci added, "enthusiastically welcomed the political turning point achieved in your country with President Mitterrand's victory and the formation of a leftwing government with the communists' direct participation. The policy of economic, social and political reforms that you have undertaken, the resistance to their implementation being presented by the conservative forces and the relationship between government initiative and the mass movement constitute an important experience not only for France but for communists and the left throughout Europe. We have long been convinced that socialism tolerates no 'models,' that it is not a commodity which can be forcibly imported, still less exported. More than half a century of history has shown that socialist progress and building have succeeded in enabling several countries to surmount endemic conditions of backwardness and to achieve extraordinary social and civil gains that have helped to change the face of the world. But it has also shown that the conception and practice of the 'single model' tend to cause very serious damage, as confirmed by Poland's tragic crisis and as previously confirmed by other serious crises."

"It is now our belief that the phase in the development of socialism characterized by that conception and that pracrice has now exhausted its driving thrust. In our opinion, it is necessary to work to open up a new phase in the struggle for socialism. An essential contribution in this direction can and must come from the capitalist countries' working class -- a working class whose political maturity is the result of major struggles for democracy and an experience of struggle in the places where the development and crisis of capitalism has reached its peak. It is in these countries that capitalism is tending increasingly to conflict with the historical gains of political democracy, with the citizens' freedoms and rights and with the very function of the democratic institutions. And it is here that the struggle and the advance of the working class, by basing itself on the indissoluble bond between democracy and socialism, can make its own necessary contribution to transcending capitalism and to regenerating the entire revolutionary movement."

After stating that in the difficult struggle we are now waging in Italy our watchword is "peace above all," Minucci continued: "Recently a broad unitary movement has developed in our country, as in a large section of Western Europe, against the establishment of new nuclear bases and weapons, for disarmament and for the resumption of detente. We have condemned and still condemn forcefully imperialism's responsibilities in the new arms race, the danger posed by Reagan's aggressive attitudes and by U.S. intervention against liberation movements or in support of bloodthirsty and corrupt regimes -- from El Salvador to Nicaragua, from Guatemala to South Africa and South Korea.

"Within this framework it is true that the existence of the blocs is a fact, but we too are convinced that a bloc policy and logic are not in line with the peoples' interests and with the demands for peace. Peace and disarmament cannot be gained by setting power politics against power politics, show of strength against show of strength. We are fighting for the success of the nuclear disarmament negotiations with a view to the elimination of the opposing military blocs. At the same time we are convinced that a major role can be played by the forces that do not want to identify with the bloc logic and that want a world no longer 'frozen' by the bipolar balance. We have in mind the possible role of Western Europe, which, to emerge from its crisis, needs greater autonomy from the stifling rule of the dollar and a new thrust to detente. It is no coincidence that several European governments have shown significant resistance to the U.S. rearmament policy. We have in mind the role in terms of dialogue and peace that can be played by the broad front of nonaligned countries, which can only start to resolve the tragic problems of underdevelopment and famine within a policy of coexistence, disarmament and economic and scientific cooperation between North and South."

Approaching his conclusions, Minucci said: "This is one reason why we attach great importance to the development of profound ties of solidarity between the capitalist countries' working class and the immense forces of the national liberation movements in the newly independent countries and the entire antiimperialist alignment. The very interests of peace now demand that the crisis in Poland be resolved by rapidly ending the military regime and restoring the rights and freedoms achieved during the admittedly turbulent renewal process. And the interests of peace also demand the rejection of the attempts by the United States and NATO to impose a policy of reprisals and economic sanctions against the Polish people. For the sake of peace and a new phase in the struggle for socialism, the PCI, in line with a new kind of internationalism, will do its utmost to maintain and develop relations of cooperation with all communist and workers parties and with leftwing and progressive forces -- relations based on the full autonomy and independence of every party and on equal dignity. By working together and by frankly and fraternally comparing our respective stances, we can issue a positive answer to the growing need for socialism now becoming apparent throughout the world and more pressingly than ever in the heart of old Europe. In this spirit, dear comrades, I convey to you, on the Italian Communists' behalf, the most fraternal good wishes for good work and success."

Turkish Party's Greetings

TA101735 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 10 Feb 82

[Greeting address by a member of the Turkish Communist Party delegation participating in the 24th Congress of the French Communist Party in Limoges, date not specified -- read by announcer]

[Text] Dear Comrades, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee greets the 24th Congress of the French Communist Party [PCF] with deepest wishes of success and extends the revolutionary struggle greetings of our country's working class and toilers.

Comrades, your congress is being convened at a time when the U.S. imperialists and the NATO ringleaders are threatening the whole of mankind with their dangerous, adventurous and warmongering policies and attempts. Efforts to engage in a policy of confrontation with the socialist countries, to accelerate the arms race -- at the risk of being dragged into a thermonuclear war -- to deploy new U.S. missiles (?in Western Europe), produce the neutron bomb, to declare as their region of vital interest countries and regions located thousands of miles from the United States and to spread the restricted nuclear war doctrine are increasing this danger.

What lies ahead of the communists, the most persistent defenders of peace, as an urgent task is to struggle in order to foil these dangerous moves, to request the resumption of the arms limitation talks, and to realize the people's aspirations to coexist in peace. The TCP believes to be most important the persistent peace policies being pursued by the Soviet Union as well as the socialist countries and the responsible steps they are taking for the sake of all of humanity. The constructive peace proposals at all levels and for countries around the world advanced at the 26th CPSU Congress constitute the greatest and strongest assurance of all forces fighting for peace and progress.

Comrades, in the general elections held in France in 1981, the large masses of the electorate openly opted for change in their country as well as for the restriction of the influence of the monopolies and for the elimination of problems created by unemployment and [word indistinct]. Presently, the PCF is responsibly struggling for steps to be taken in this direction in the economic, political, social and cultural fields, exerting devoted efforts for the unification of the broad forces of peace and democracy. It is at a time when such conditions and tasks have gained a great importance in France that your congress is being convened.

Comrades, on 12 September 1980, after the reactionary military junta seized power in Turkey it began fiercely attacking the working class and the progressive forces in our country. These attacks are continuing. The generals, who seized power under the pretext of eliminating terror and anarchy, are intensifying their pressure on the working class and its political and trade union organizations and on the progressive and patriotic forces -- which in fact had put up the most unyielding fight against terrorism. What the reactionary military dictatorship has accomplished since then is: 30,000 political prisoners -- according to official figures -- the execution of 10 persons, systemized torture -- including the democrats killed during this torture -- progressives being shot at in the streets, strong pressure imposed on the Kurdish people and an economic policy that has brought the great majority of the people to the verge of hunger.

Currently 52 officials of the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK] are being tried in a military court with the request of a death sentence for having only acted as trade unionists.

In mid-December 1981, a series of suits were filed against the TCP -- the only communist party still banned in Europe. Members, sympathizers, even those who have no connection whatsoever with our party are also being tried and condemned to prison in these trials for having only supported the cause of peace and socialism and for having organized associations to this end. On the other hand, the persons mainly responsible for the terror, namely, the ring leaders of the Nationalist Action Party, are being released one by one.

In a bid to deceive the Western European public, the junta announced a schedule for the restoration of democracy in our country. A consultative assembly composed of members appointed by the junta is being portrayed as a genuine parliament. However, the Western European public has not been deceived by these maneuvers.

Though no draft of the constitution exists, reactionary and oppressive laws are being enacted one after the other in a bid to form the basis of the future constitution. University autonomy and independence of the judiciary are being harmed. Preparations are being intensified in a bid to eliminate the role of the large people's masses -- first and foremost of the working class -- in the life of the community. The people are being offered the choice of a reactionary dictatorship or a dictatorship based on the constitution.

Comrades, the Reagan administration as well as the ringleaders of NATO, which are engaged in a worldwide warmongering, have reserved a special palce for our country. Pressure is being imposed on the junta and antipeople policies are being supported in various ways ways in a bid to force Turkey to play a more active role in our region against the Soviet Union and the national liberation movements.

A joint defense group has been established between Turkey and the United States following the visit of U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger to Turkey. There is information that secret agreements have been signed in connection with joint air fields. The U.S. administration is willing to deploy new missiles in Turkey as has been done in Western Europe. The Reagan administration as well as the NATO ringleaders are openly supporting the pressure being exerted in Turkey, the mass trials and the violation of the basic human rights and liberties. The Turkish communists and the Turkish people are therefore determined to expose the deceiving stand on the Reagan administration and the NATO ringleaders in favor of workers and democracy in Poland. A legal administration is ruling in Poland. Constitutional measures have been taken in Poland to eliminate the anti-socialist and antirevolutionary forces; while in Turkey the constitution has been completely abolished by the military junta. The 52 officials of DISK are being tried with the threat of a death sentence for only having conducted union activities. In contradiction of the Helsinki Final Act, members of the TCP are being condemned to prison for their political beliefs.

Comrades, since May 1981, the reactionary dictatorship in Turkey has intensified its attacks against the TCP. Police raids are being accompanied by a disgusting anti-communist campaign being waged in the reactionary press organs.

The TCP Central Committee has nevertheless successfully convened its plenum in August 1981. The TCP is continuing to struggle in conditions much harsher than in the past and is trying to accomplish its tasks of providing the political unity of the Turkish working class, of organizing the unity of action of the broadest democracy forces and of establishing a single (?front) of all the national democratic forces.

I would like to announce to you here on this occasion a very significant development. In February 1982, discussions have been held at the highest level among the Turkish Labor Party, the TCP and the Turkish Socialist Workers Party, which are the parties of the Turkish working class. The three parties agreed to organize the relations among them, to coordinate their political struggles and to intensify activities for establishing the widest possible front.

The development has great importance for the Turkish working class and for the progressive forces of our country. It is also a powerful answer to those who speak about the (?invalidity) of Marxism-Leninism, because the joint appeal issued at the end of the meeting is concrete proof of the fact that Marxism-Leninism is a very powerful force under the present conditions.

Comrades, the solidarity movement in France with the Turkish working class and the forces of peace and democracy has been growing since the reactionary junta assumed power in Turkey. It has especially increased following the trials aimed against the syndical and political organizations of the Turkish working class.

The PCF is in the forefront of this [word indistinct] solidarity movement in France. We would like to thank you, and, first and foremost, PCF Secretary General Comrade Georges Marchais, for this internationalist solidarity. The TCP is attached to the PCF with ties of common struggle ideals and internationalist solidarity. The TCP extends its best wishes of success to the 24th Congress of the PCF.

Long live the PCF!

Delegates Discuss Poland

PM111505 [Editorial Report] Paris L'HUMANITE in French on 8 February carries on pages 9-12 a 12,000-word unattributed report giving extracts from speeches made by delegates to the 24th PCF Congress during the general debate on 5 and 6 February. L'HUMANITE quotes from speeches made by two delegates on 6 February on the Polish question:

"After stressing the emotion they aroused among the French Communists, Sylviane Ainardi (Haute-Garonne) stated that events in Poland do not conflict with our view that socialism contains inconsistencies and also the means of overcoming them.

"It is necessary to take account of the socialist countries' starting points before discussing Poland's development since the last war, its handicaps and achievements, and its inconsistent development, characterized in particular by a rate of production that does not correspond either to the workers' potential or their level of awareness.

"The question of democracy, which has a universal value, is posed differently in each practical situation, depending on the country. The effort to understand, and the desire to see the Polish people overcome the difficulties prevent us from taking a generalized and narrow view of the situation. This situation is not one in which there is on one side an incompetent and ossified Polish United Workers Party [PZPR] and on the other a conscious working class possessing the truth revealed by Solidarity.

"Our party's position is the most responsible one from the viewpoint of the interest of socialism and the Polish people. It is the expression of our will to do all we can to ensure that Poland resumes its forward march for socialist renewal and for a return to democratic life."

L'HUMANITE also gives extracts from a speech by Northern Federation Delegate Jacques Estager:

"Aside from some legitimate questions, the Communists in the north have unreservedly approved of the position adopted by our party, and have done so for three fundamental reasons: First, as of 13 December it was necessary to avoid an internal confrontation at any price since that would be suicidal for the Polish nation. The risk of civil war was a reality in Poland in December.

"Our party's position is the only possible one in view of the Polish people's vital interests. It takes account of the great threat the destabilization of Poland would pose to peace.

"The second reason is that this position makes the solution to the present situation in Poland dependent on the restoration of constitutional rights and individual freedom, the resumption of the process of socialist renewal and the pursuit of reforms. That solution does not depend on us. It is the Polish people who write their own history. By taking account of the intentions expressed by General Jaruzelski in the letter to Georges Marchais, we are taking account of the only possible democratic solution to the Polish crisis.

"Our third reason for approving the party's position is that it does not undermine our independence of judgment and in no way limits our consideration and analysis of the problems posed by the development of socialism in Poland and elsewhere. It leaves us completely free to assess, as the draft resolution states, 'the reality of progress and contradictions in the socialist countries without narrow-mindedness or prejudice....'"

"The working class in the north stops and thinks when it sees the employers of the region heading a campaign in favor of Solidarity and trade union rights in Poland with their political representatives and their newspaper NORD ECLAIR...because the workers remember October and November 1948, when a state of emergency was declared in the mining area. When the mines were occupied by the army, 3,000 strikers were arrested, 2,200 were given prison sentences ranging from 2 weeks to 1 year, thousands were fired, some of whom only had their rights as regards the number of years counted toward their retirement recognized after the 10 May victory....

"The aim is not to explain events in Poland by imperialism's machinations. Nor is it to close our eyes to the machinations of imperialism, for which the situation in Poland is an unexpected opportunity to try to destabilize a socialist country in difficulty....

"In France recently a number of statements tried to call into question the Yalta agreements. Last Saturday the president of the republic, speaking about Poland, suggested that the Polish people are paying for the Yalta agreements and have been under martial law since the postwar period.

"The tragic consequences of World War II for the Polish people are not the result of the Yalta agreements but of the ruin and destruction caused by the war; the cities razed, the accumulated ravages and disasters and the 6 million dead.

"Jacques Estager demonstrated that socialism instead has enabled Poland to experience a remarkable economic development arising from that disastrous situation.

"That is why, in our view, we are not witnessing the historical failure of socialism, as some people are hurriedly presuming and declaring, but the failure of a policy at one stage in Poland's development, which led the PZPR to move away from the people in a dramatic way. The Polish crisis proves that democracy is the key question in socialist societies. It shows that unless that requirement is taken into account, it can have serious results."

HERMIER PRESENTS RESOLUTION COMMISSION REPORT

PM161627 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 8 Feb 82 pp 8-9

[Text of 24th PCF Congress Resolution Commission report, presented by Politburo Member Guy Hermier; passages between slantlines printed in italics]

[Text] On 9 October the Central Committee adopted a draft resolution in preparation for the 24th Congress, and this was submitted to the whole party for examination and published by L'HUMANITE a few days later.

The importance of that document stems from the fundamental problems we are facing. Indeed, the whole analysis of trends in French society and the world leads us to this immensely significant conclusion: Socialism is now the order of the day in our country. The unprecedented political situation created last May makes that strategic view a practical task. In these conditions we are able to assess better than ever the value of the advances made at our 22d and 23d congresses, which now enable us to provide a prospect for the people's hope: a French brand of socialism.

But those advances remained partly dependent on the political circumstances in which we had to make them. The 22d congress defined the characteristics of the French brand of socialism, but that historic innovation still sought expression in the logic of the joint program, which contradicted it. The 23d congress in turn outlined the path of the self-managing advance toward socialism, but it was scarred by the difficulties resulting from the breakdown of the leftwing union, which clouded the awareness of a large section of the workers.

Therefore, in the new period the country entered there was a need to review the whole question of our strategy. Our party's serious setbacks in the 1981 elections placed a direct obligation on us to do so. Clearly understanding the reasons for this setback in order to start forward again on better footing, highlighting the full scope and implicatons of the crucial choices made at our last two congresses and giving deeper consideration to the new political practice, enabling us to implement those choices, are the major questons life was posing for us. It is these questions the 24th congress document answers.

Each communist has fully appreciated what is at stake in that document. That is why the discussion we are able to assess today was distinguished by its scope, depth and democratic richness.

As regards its scope, I would like to recall that the consideration of the new situation was started back at the Central Committee session last June. Based on the lessons learned from 3 months of discussion in the party, the draft resolution vigorously revived the debate. For almost 4 months our cells generally have devoted several meetings to it and -- I stress this -- they were well attended. Thus tens of thousands of cell meetings prepared the section and federal conferences. That vast discussion was expressed in the forum to which L'HUMANITE devoted a whole page and sometimes more for 58 days. No less than 957 contributions were sent to us, and 230 were published; and they alone would form a large volume of around 1,000 pages. Never before has one of our party congresses been prepared with such a prolonged and extensive debate.

In addition to that scope, the discussion had depth, concentrating, like the draft resolution, on our strategy itself. The party meetings and conferences, the contributions published and the amendments proposed concentrated more than usual on the essence of the most important questions -- the questions of the changes in France and in the world, our backwardness and progress, existing socialism and the socialism France needs, the struggles and the union leading to it and the new practice they require from the party. It is probably also true to say that the drafting of the basic aspects of our policy has never before concerned all communists to this extent.

This broad and far-reaching discussion was democratic throughout in the full sense of the word. In saying that I do not simply mean no taboo subjects; there was no opinion, however extreme, that was not given full freedom to be expressed, even in L'HUMANITE'S forum -- so much so that the enemy press was shocked into silence for a time. I mean something more profound: The responsible boldness of a debate which, while demonstrating the Communist's fidelity to the revolutionary voice of the Tours congress and the achievements made in our history, succeeded in making a public critical examination of our past lag and assessing the efforts we now still have to make if the party is to play its vanguard role fully.

Freedom in discussion and responsibility in action -- that is the democracy that characterizes our party, a democracy which, in our view, is not just a good thing per se but is a vital precondition for constantly and accurately drafting the strategy of the democratic advance to socialism. That will obviously not convince those whose anticommunism is their social justification. After the long passages Georges Marchais devoted to this question in his report and the confirmation provided by the congress' discussion, I will simply say to those people that when it comes to democracy we are never completely satisfied when we examine ourselves, but we have reason to be proud when we compare ourselves with others.

So what are the results of this vast debate in the party on the political line proposed by the draft resolution? Of the 20,514 delegates at the federal conferences, 20,189 voted for the document, 232 abstained and 93 voted against. To our knowledge 86 cells out of 27,541 and 5 sections out of 3,090 voted against the draft. Thus, at the end of a broad, far-reaching and free discussion relating to complex pressure from outside to sow confusion, the vast majority of communists voted for the strategy proposed. This is a major political act; an act which is even more meaningful because everything shows that this party unity is the reverse of superficial unanimity.

It is the unity of a way of thinking and a will for action fed by a great diversity of viewpoints and experiences. It is the unity of a /great living party/.

Recently a political columnist who previously predicted a long life for the Giscardian government diagnosed countless crises in our party, described it as torn apart by internal opposition and concluded by condemning it to retirement. Well, if there is anything senile about French political life it is this obdurate concept of journalism which constantly replaces the most obvious facts with biased commentaries. As for us, backed by the strength of our living unity, we have good and real reasons for viewing the present and future confidently.

Dear comrades, the commission which you elected Wednesday has studied all the amendments handed to it in other words the 465 amendments adopted by the federal conferences and also the 1,635 which they did not adopt and those which, although they had not been adopted at any level, were sent to it by individual members in accordance with our rules. Thus the commission had to examine a total of 2,565 amendments. It would be an understatement to say that this provided it with some work, but the commission is not complaining because all those amendments were a source of great richness.

After expressing an initial opinion on those amendments, it informed you of that opinion in the form of the document handed to you yesterday morning, in which all the amendments which we suggest you adopt are underlined. The delegations were able to discuss that document, they accepted our reasons or put forward their own, and it is on the basis of that discussion that the commission has improved or added to its proposals in a leaflet handed to you early this afternoon.

In these circumstances, I obviously do not propose to go over each amendment in detail. I would simply like, on the commission's behalf, to briefly outline the principles which guided it and then dwell on the four political questions which dominated our work.

Our basic principle was, broadly, to adopt the amendments adopted by the federal conferences, which condense the party's very rich discussion. In addition, we considered that some amendments not adopted by the federal conferences deserved to be adopted by the congress. Consequently, we proposed that you adopt 241 amendments, many of which overlap on some points and which, in form and content, will clarify and enrich the document and hence the policy which the whole party will have to inplement after its adoption.

I would like to mention one of the additions to the initial text which posed a problem for us, as it did for several federal conferences. It concerns alcoholism. After careful consideration, believe me, we came round to the opinion taken by the federal conferences which, while refusing the place this question on the same level as that of drugs -- a refusal which the commission goes along with -- thought that we should nonetheless draw attention to the worrying resurgence of this social scourge.

However, we set aside the amendments which seemed to us to pointlessly overload the document or to alter its form -- a form which has not always been regarded as easy but corresponds to the high level of the problems tackled. For instance, we do not think it appropriate to spell out the party's positions on individual points -- for instance in the sphere of social demands, education policy or international cooperation. Indeed those positions are explained in documents which are not rendered null and void by the congress, unless the reverse is specifically indicated.

The same applies to the assessments we have already made of our past action. For instance, to cite just one example, we said several years ago that it was a mistake not to immediately publish Georges Marchais' report to the Central Committee session convened to give its verdict on the joint program in 1972. Of course, that statement is still valid. Consequently, repeating it in the first part of the document is not only unnecessary in our view, but unjustified because it would divert attention from the basic problem: the fundamentally unsuitable nature of the joint program strategy, which would not have been altered in any way even if we had published the report in 1972 and not in 1975.

The same approach made us decide not to adopt amendments stressing the need to continue the examination of our history. We did that simply because that need was forcefully noted by the 23d congress and since then that research has been developed and has borne fruit. It goes without saying that it will be continued, especially within the framework of the Marxist Research Institute, and it will deal not only with our history but with French society and its changes, the French political parties and their strategy, the socialist countries and their development and many other questions too. The fact that we think that our 24th congress has drawn all the essential /political/ lessons of these recent decades in no way contradicts the need to further research on our history.

I would like to say another word -- actually about a word: the word /alliance/. Some comrades have wondered why that term does not feature in the document to describe the relations established in action between the working class and other social strata or categories. I must point out therefore that the problem has already been discussed, especially at the Bobigny National Council Meeting on the Intellectuals and Culture, not of course -- is there any need to stress this -- to regress at all on this crucial question but, on the contrary, because the notion of alliance in some respects seems to lag behind the social changes which have occurred in the recent period and which, for instance, mean that most technicians and a number of engineers are now an integral part of the working class from the economic viewpoint. Thus this is a vast unsolved problem on which we think that the resolution should take care not to freeze current thinking.

After making these remarks I now come to the great political questions on which the debate rightly centered and which in some cases were the subject of proposed amendments which fairly radically alter the draft resolution's political line but, this deserves to be strongly emphasized, have never received more than a few votes at the federal conferences.

The first question is that of the assessment to be made of the 1977-1981 period. It is a question which has generated a great deal of discussion and is generally regarded as a question on which the whole party, through this rich debate, has gained great maturity of thinking and great cohesion of thought. However, some comrades have said, one of them even on the congress platform, that the document did not satisfy them on this point. According to them, it is in our behavior over the past 4 years, in our policy and its implementation that the reasons for our electoral setback should mainly be sought. Some, a very few, went further: We should make a self-critical examination of this period as a "sectarian interlude" in our strategy. But if those comrades were right and the fault lay with our behavior from 1977 onwards it was /only then/ that our election results should have fallen. Everybody is well aware that that is not the case and that the erosion of our support began well before, including in the 1973 parliamentary elections and the 1974 by-elections.

There is therefore /another reason./ It is impossible to escape this conclusion. And we now see clearly that the other reason was the fact that we were lagging behind history at the intersection between the 1950's and 1960's. Of course it is not that lag in itself which directly explains our bad election result last year. But it is all the effects it had on our strategy and our political practice. It is what /we did not do/ in time, because we failed to realize quickly enough that socialism had become a matter of direct relevance in France and hence to draw up the concept of a French brand of socialism quickly enough, to adopt the appropriate approach to the conflict between the real level of awareness and the level of the requirements for a fundamental transformation of society. And it is what /we did/ instead, the unsuitable form of union in which we locked our own political action, with all the negative consequences to which the draft resolution points.

Does this deep and true analysis lay the responsibility at another's door and draw a veil over the real problems of the 1977-1981 period? Quite the reverse. It alone makes it possible to understand the following paradox: It was at the very time when, at our 22d and 23d congresses, we were drawing up our strategy of democratic progress toward a democratic kind of socialism, in other words at the time when we /were solving/ the central problem facing us, that we had most difficulty in making a section of the workers heed us because the logic of the joint program, to which we ourselves had given life, countered all our efforts. It alone makes it possible to gauge the achievements of the past 4 years, in which we began, against all the odds, to implement this strategy, and the new policy of union it implied, by waging struggles and by scoring points which are crucial for today and the future. In fact, as it was very well expressed in our congress discussion itself, it was precisely what we have had the courage to do since 1977 that made 1981 possible and that ensured, as the draft resolution says, that "It is in no way inevitable that the situation will commit the country to a social democratic experiment."

That is the decisive lesson of the experience. That is why we propose that the congress adopt no amendment which, however just it might be, in any way undermines the scope of this analysis, which is crucial not only in understanding the past but in taking effective action in the present struggles.

Protagonists in Change

This brings me to the second question which deserves attention. The thing which emerges forcefully from this necessary review of our history is, therefore, the relevance of the strategy which we have drawn up, the need for the whole party and for each communist to fully develop its implications. And we must do this not in an abstract way but in a new practical situation which is unprecedented for the party. It is understandable that this should raise many questions on which I would like to dwell.

First I would like to point out that during the 4 months which have passed since the draft resolution was adopted, things have of course moved forward in the country. It has been said once again here that they have moved in the right direction but major problems still have to be solved -- problems on which we have choices to advocate, proposals to make and action to take. Many amendments relate to this point and it is on the basis of them that the commission proposes that you should very considerably enrich the document.

But the main question which arises from the very progress in the situation is, of course, that of how far it will go. For our part we refuse to answer this frequently asked question by making prophecies. We say the progress will go as far as the workers want and at the pace they choose. In other words we are not taking gambles as spectators but are shouldering our responsibilities as protagonists in the change, determined to do all we can to ensure that it goes as far and fast as possible, in the interests of the people and the nation.

That is why the commission did not follow those who thought that the document should say more on this subject and describe the nature of the PS. If that means that it should unambiguously highlight the fundamental differences which exist between the PS and the PCF, in our view the document as it stands says all that is necessary. But it sometimes seems that the aim of that proposal is more or less to enclose the assessment of the present situation and the prospects for its development in a definition of the PS. In our view to do that would be to replace the analysis of a practical and open situation with abstract and closed pronouncements. However, the balance of forces in French society is not only a fact, it is also and more especially a result -- the result of the workers' action, of our revolutionary action. Will the hope of change be dashed or will our country instead progress toward socialism? That depends on our people and, to a large extent, on us, on the inventive implementation of our strategy, on what the document calls a new political practice, which is certainly the decisive question now.

That brings me to another remark. Faced with this view of the democratic advance toward socialism, some comrades expressed anxiety. For them the concept constitutes an abandonment of the idea of breaking with capitalism, of a revolutionary leap, on the pretext that things happened differently at other times and in other places and that they were envisaged differently by Marx and Lenin in the circumstances they experienced -- as if the class struggle could boil down to citing the classics.

Those comrades are deeply mistaken. The social appropriation of the main means of production and exchange and political power of the working people in which the working class plays a leadership role, which is what we advocate and are fighting for, have not stopped being a break with capitalism just because they take forms in France today different from those of collectivism and the dictatorship of the proletariat. The outlook outlined by the draft resolution and Georges Marchais' report -- that of the democratic advance toward a democratic and self-managing socialism /is certainly a revolutionary outlook/ and the class enemy makes no mistake about it.

The real question lies elsewhere: It lies in the concept of socialism and of the path leading to socialism which corresponds to our specific situation. On the basis of the contemporary situation of France and the world, the revolutionary break in our country clearly cannot be some kind of repeat of the capture of the Winter Palace, a /moment/ when everything teeters, but instead must be a /process/ which takes place over a whole historical period of struggles. It is this which those who confuse the chaff of words with the grain of deeds fail to see. We can go further: To persist in viewing the revolutionary break in France today as a final moment, a great evening in the future for which we could now do nothing but gather forces, is in fact to /back down/ in the face of the requirements of the revolutionary battle. For the crisis requires fundamental changes in French society without delay and we must progress toward socialism without delay.

That is the essence of the new political practice which cannot be detached from our strategy. In this respect it has been stressed that our lag is not entirely the result of the past. Without underestimating the experience acquired, we must devise the daily practice necessary to achieve further progress in the situation and in people's awareness in order to lift the people's movement to the level of the changes to be made. Valuable ideas were put forward on this subject at the December Central Committee session and in the discussion and amendments adopted by many federal conferences. We suggest to you that these be included in the document.

The Socialist Countries

The third question which dominated our work is that of the socialist countries and, of course, especially the situation in Poland since 13 December. Many federal conferences adopted amendments or expressed wishes aimed at including in the document a short outline of the position we have adopted on this subject. It is absolutely remarkable that those wishes and amendments all show, without exception, complete agreement with that position, with our analysis of the causes which led to these tragic events, with our responsible attitude in face of the formidable campaign to pour fat onto the fire, with our deep wish that the Polish nation might find in itself the necessary resources to provide the solutions for its problems which socialism makes possible. It is for that reason that we are introducing a new development into the text.

It is only natural that those events should have forcefully revived the thinking and debate on the historical development of existing socialism. Given the extreme wealth of the report presented by Georges Marchais on this question I will merely make one remark. The communists are being strongly urged from all sides to give up on the socialist countries once and for all. In vain. The reason why that siren song was rejected by virtually all the delegates at the federal conferences and by our congress itself is that giving in to it would be the most fundamental historical mistake.

Indeed, how can anybody fail to see that it is primarily the existence and strength of the socialist countries which mean that the world is not doomed to the apocalypse today. It is their existence and their strength which have enabled mankind to go 37 years without experiencing a world war. That is just one sentence but is full of blood and tears. It is their existence and strength which have enabled and are enabling dozens of peoples in Asia, Africa and America to open the door wider to national and social emancipation. That too is crucial for those who regard class solidarity at international level as empty words. And it is primarily because socialism exists in the world, whatever judgment we freely pass on some of its aspects, that we can envisage building a French brand of socialism in France.

That is the class meaning of this vast question. Big capital and imperialism are not only aware of it, they are obsessed by it. That is the reason for the formidable campaign which the media are waging against socialism and, more widely, against any idea of progress -- a campaign for which France is preferential ground and in which our party is the main target. Many people expected change in the media after 10 May. However, for the most part there has been no chsnge. Worse still: The events in Poland have provided the opportunity for an unprecedented wave of lies.

But enough is enough. The federal conferences have just revealed what could be described without exaggeration as a qualitative change in the state of mind of the communists and many others. Nearly all the conferences adopted amendments on this point, each saying in their way: This time things have gone far enough. We will no longer tolerate this impudent challenge to the majority will for democratic change. Let the political and professional circles of the press and broadcast media note that a considerable political and cultural event is occurring. Democratic change in the media is becoming a powerful social demand and a political and moral requirement in France today.

The Right to Pluralist and Honest News

In this connection, if the congress will permit me to, I would like to make a brief aside in this report. Probably like many of you, I have heard commentaries here and there, especially on the Europe 1 Radio Station, on the decision I took yesterday not to take part in Sunday evening's Press Club program. All the different suppositions made on that subject lead me to explain why I took that entirely unusual decision. I did it for reasons of dignity and responsibility.

It is a matter of dignity because, although we communists are accustomed to being slandered and insulted and to seeing our policy caricatured, we are not resigned to it. I do not think that being a communist should force us to accept anything in this sphere. When an intolerable point has been reached it should not be tolerated.

It is also a matter of responsibility because, as everybody can see at present, the right, which is sometimes described as the American Party, and the left that is leftwing only in name, which have great influence on Europe 1, are doing all they can to try to make the PCF and PS oppose each other and to create the conditions for breaking the government coalition and the people's hope.

Well, they can indulge in these petty political maneuvers if they wish, but I say quite calmly: Do not expect the communists to go along with these maneuvers or to witness doubts being cast on the people's desire for change without reacting.

To return to the thread of my report, I would like to say that, in keeping with the spirit of many dozen amendments and wishes expressed by the federal conferences, we propose that a large section on the media be added to our text. But obviously on this question, as on others, it is not enough to talk, we must act. That is why, from the platform of this congress and, I am sure, on your behalf, we appeal to all communists, to all those men and women who want democratic change: Take every opportunity to say in the most diverse ways what you think of radio and television to the professional public deceivers. Join with the workers to take this battle for freedom a very long way in order to secure respect for this now fundamental human right: the right to pluralist and honest news.

Party Democratic Life

All these struggles raise the question of the kind of party that should advance them -- a party that continuously takes the initiative and meets the very high political and ideological standards demanded by the situation. The commission has adopted all the amendments which it considered enriched the document in this direction. But finally, I would like to discuss for a moment the issue that has undoubtedly prompted the most discussion in this regard: the party's democratic life.

At the beginning I stressed the extent to which the preparation of this 24th congress confirmed the fruitfulness in our life of our organizational principle: democratic centralism, the principle of freedom and responsibility at the same time, which we must increasingly inject into our work at all levels within the party and in all fields of our practical life. However, some comrades objected to the principle itself. Are we really being thorough, they ask, in our deliberations on the lag and in our critical process? We have abandoned the dictatorship of the proletariat, the single model of socialism and Marxism-Leninism, but to remain consistent with ourselves, we should abandon this obsolete Bolshevik idea, namely democratic centralism. Nobody has said that it should be exchanged for the obsolete reformist idea of the system of tendencies, and this is worth noting. But the question has clearly been raised and I will answer it.

First, I would point out that this argument is based on a complete distortion of our process of innovation, which is dismissed as a mere abandonment of our theoretical and political principles. No, we have abandoned none of the principles of the revolutionary class struggle by discarding, as far as we were concerned, the inappropriate notion of the dictatorship of the proletariat in favor of a democratic concept of the power of the working people; we have abandoned nothing of scientific socialism by rejecting the strict idea of a single model of socialism and have abandoned nothing of our fundamental theory by surmounting the constructions and ossifications of Marxism-Leninism for a truly living and open conception of Marxism. And in the same way we have not yet /abandoned any aspect/ of democratic centralism by now going beyond the forms it may have taken at a particular past period in our history in order to harmonize it with our self-managing strategy.

Is our democratic centralism a rigid principle? To say that is to underestimate our constant progress in this sphere too. Over the recent period, without claiming to make an exhaustive assessment, I would like to recall for instance that we have created and operated the party National Council, extended the organization of discussion forums to occasions other than the preparations for the congress, recognized each member's right to send amendments rejected at a particular level directly to the congress, accepted the notion of resignation from the party and discontinued the practice of expulsion for political disagreement, ended any role of arbitration and officialization by the leadership in the sphere of theoretical and artistic creation, instituted the right of individuals to run for any office, introduced the secret ballot in the election of the leadership bodies and the publication of the votes obtained, extended not only the responsibilities but the rights of members in the new rules adopted by the 23d congress. The course of the discussion at this 24th congress has itself demonstrated that nothing is rigid for us. I could extend this list. Life will lead us to extend it still further. Yes, there is no doubt that everything, particularly the very nature of our strategy, requires us to constantly enrich our concept and practice of democratic life. That is precisely why we are and will remain unswervingly opposed to the formation of factions, which, as all the indications show, turns its back on democracy.

But it is important to see clearly the new conditions in which the question of our democratic life is now raised. For instance -- and this will be my last remark -- I was speaking just now of the media's role. We are sometimes criticized for making communists into television members [of the party] -- that is the fashionable expression. Well! Let's discuss that.

It is true that today, given the present state of means of communication and the acute nature of the class struggle, any important event and even any stance imposed hurriedly by current events on the party leadership, for instance, inevitably reaches communists via radio and television /before/ they have been able to find out about it in L'HUMANITE -- not to mention those who do not read it. Everything, therefore, first reaches them loaded with distortions, punctuated with omissions and stifled under the treachery of the commentator -- it is frequently unrecognizable.

Take our congress for instance. We who are here cannot be told stories about it. But what about all the other communists? If there had not been conflicting aspects in the speeches we have heard the media would have told them: high mass is being celebrated. Were there some conflicting aspects? Never mind, they spoke of orchestration. So what can be done about this impossible situation? Should the leadership remain silent and the communists stop listening to the radio and watching television?

Of course nobody can think that way. But we must think this problem through. If the class struggle to win over everybody's mind now has a new intensity, we must all be communists of a new quality. In other words we must be communists who are, as far as they can be, fully linked to the party's life, reading its press, active in their cell, anxious to raise their level of education, constantly using their critical and inventive spirit. In short we must be communists who are aware that all these questions sometimes seen as routine rubrics at the end of resolutions are in fact now questions which are /decisive/ for developing our democratic life and having a party capable of meeting its historical responsibilities -- the responsibilities which make us take as this congress' sign: "Building a French Brand of Socialism."

These are the remarks and proposals which I was asked to submit to you on the commissions' behalf. These are the reasons why we propose that you adopt the amended document, if you agree, in the light of these ideas.

Report on Party Finances

PM151343 [Editorial Report] Paris L'HUMANITE in French 6 February 1982 carries on page 10 the 2,400-word apparent text of the report of the PCF Central Financial Control Commission elected at the 23d PCF Congress which was presented to the 24th PCF Congress by Armand Guillermot. Guillemot examines the party's accounts for 1979, 1980 and 1981 and the effort which needs to be made in the financial sphere in 1982. The report is accompanied by a table giving the PCF Central Committee's accounts for 1979, 1980 and 1981.

MARCHAIS ADDRESSES BANQUET FOR CONGRESS GUESTS

PM161145 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 9 Feb 82 p 3

[Unattributed report on speech by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais at a banquet for foreign delegations to the 24th PCF Congress in Vitry on 8 February: "Solidarity With the Revolutionary and Progressive Forces Throughout the World"]

[Text] The following is the text of the speech delivered by Georges Marchais:

"Dear friends and comrades, it is with great joy that the Politburo and I welcome you to this fraternal meal. I warmly thank you for coming in such great numbers. Never before has one of our party congresses welcomed so many delegations from communist parties, national and democratic movements and socialist parties. This illustrates the powerful advance of the revolutionary and progressive movement which characterizes our times. Permit me also to regard your presence as the sign of the interest you show in our battle.

"Our 24th congress is over. I hope that its work will have given you a better understanding of the situation in our country -- a situation which is unprecedented in many respects -- and a better understanding of our party's objectives and the conditions governing its action."

At this point Georges Marchais departed from his text and recounted that a delegate from a fraternal party had told him: "I was surprised. I thought the congress would be difficult and the discussion fierce." Georges Marchais replied to him: "You should read L'HUMANITE every day. That is the best way of knowing and understanding what is happening in France."

"I would also like to thank you," he continued, "for the warm words with which you greeted our congress at the 31 international evening held last Friday. Those evenings enabled you to address thousands of communists and democrats throughout the country. You were able to gauge how dear the French Communists hold this question of internationalist solidarity and to what extent it permeates all their activity and policies.

"Indeed the fact is that our national battle for the French brand of socialism which we want is inseparable from its international environment. The resolution we adopted and the report I submitted to the congress stressed that although our battle for the socialist transformation of society is primarily a reply to the practical problems facing our people and our country, our strategy is also based on the situation in the contemporary world, on the change in the balance of forces in favor of independence, peace and socialism.

"Solidarity with the revolutionary and progressive forces throughout the world, the struggle for peace and disarmament -- which imperialism's attitude now requires us to step up -- action for freedom and democracy and for a new international order are integral parts of the French communists' class struggle. They are all dimensions of the new internationalism, in keeping with our times, to which we intend to continue devoting the greatest of effort in the future. For we know that however different our conditions of struggle are in our different countries, however diverse the solutions we are proposing to our peoples, we are all engaged in the same fight and faced with the same enemy: imperialism. We want to help achieve progress in this common battle to ensure that this world, which is moving in the right direction, changes even more and even more quickly.

"Allow me to express my conviction that these days spent in France will have made it possible to further strengthen the ties which unite us and to promote our cooperation in mutual respect, independence and fraternity.

"By your presence at our congress in such large numbers you have contributed to its success and its influence. I warmly thank you for it on behalf of our party's Politburo and on behalf of the 710,000 French communists. I convey to you personally and ask you to pass on to your respective Central Committees and leaderships our wishes for full success in your struggles and the solidarity and friendship of the French communists.

"I ask you all to raise your glasses with me to international solidarity, peace and socialism."

DELEGATE ANALYZES PATH OF CHINESE SOCIALISM

WA011201 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 8 Feb 82 p 11

[Text] Alain Roux (Seine-Saint-Denis) analyzed the path of socialism in China. At the outset, he noted the importance of the victory the 1949 Chinese revolution represented, and went on to explain that the subsequent achievements by the Chinese people are considerable.

He said: "That country has succeeded in rising from the threshold of absolute poverty and is feeding a billion human beings." Comparison with India, which is not socialist, considerably favors China. He said he considers that Georges Marchais' description of the socialist countries -- "They have achieved results and even succeeded in some breakthroughs" -- applies "perfectly to China."

However, there are some shadows and setbacks. China lost a great deal of time during the "Great Leap Forward" and the "Cultural Revolution."

He cited the Chinese Communist Party's recent positions in condemning a number of past shortcomings. Today the Chinese revolution, which "had been on its head, is now again advancing on its feet." This development is due in large part "to those who, despite repression, strived for an innovative socialism and against dogmatism." Finally, he expressed hope that the "four orientations" program currently underway in China will be accompanied by a development of democracy.

Alain Roux then wished "complete success to the Party and Chinese people in building a socialism with Chinese colors."

GREMETZ WELCOMES FOREIGN DELEGATES TO CONGRESS

WA011302 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 4 Feb 82 p 11

[Text] At the end of the first day the congress greeted the fraternal delegations from five continents. Maxime Gremetz spoke as follows:

Never in the history of our party have the congress proceedings been witnessed by so many fraternal delegations.

On behalf of the party leadership, on your behalf, and on behalf of all French communists, I welcome to our 24th Congress the 112 delegations of communist parties, national and democratic movements, and socialist parties here among us today.

Welcome to you all, who come from five continents and reflect the remarkable revolutionary progress which marks our era.

Welcome to you socialist party representatives who are participating in our congress for the first time!

The impressive number of your delegations and the quality of your representatives demonstrate your strong interest in our struggle in the new situation prevailing in France. They also demonstrate the scope and vitality of the existing and developing relations between our party and people and the whole revolutionary and progressive movement worldwide.

Your presence is living and concrete evidence of the power and strengthening of this movement and of its great diversity.

A number of parties or movements present among us represent peoples who are building socialism.

Others, having led their people's struggle for liberation from domination and oppression, are today working toward this objective.

Others are leading national and social liberation struggles in their countries.

Still others are struggling within the developed capitalist countries for social progress, democracy and socialism.

So many delegates, and so many different situations, conditions, and forms of struggle on various continents!

It is this diversity that characterizes the experience of countries and parties building socialism today. Each in its own way and at its own pace.

How far this is from the drab, uniform, and often apocalyptic image which the multifarious campaigns to denigrate socialism attempt to give to these countries!

From the USSR to Vietnam, Cuba to Hungary, and Yugoslavia to China, new societies, freed from exploitation, are developing.

This is a complex and contradictory process, and does not proceed without mistakes either; we know that.

But we also know that the economic, social, cultural and democratic progress which socialism has now and henceforth made possible is a very concrete reality.

We likewise recognize the decisive role which countries building socialism are playing in the struggle for peace, disarmament, and international cooperation.

We also assess the experiments undertaken by other parties and the movements in power in countries which have shaken off the domination and oppression of the forces of the past and have engaged in the task of building a new society.

In the period since our last congress, this has been true, for example, of Nicaragua. I greet its representatives present here.

Comrade representatives of all these countries, on your return to your parties, movements, and peoples, convey to them the fraternal greeting and sincere wishes for success of the French communists!

There is diversity of circumstances also for the communist parties of capitalist countries, struggling on our continent and all others; they are likewise broadly represented at our congress.

They are in the front line of the important struggles against austerity, unemployment, and all the pernicious effects of the crisis which continues to rage in the old capitalist world.

Others are still compelled to wage a clandestine struggle, and face fierce repression.

Allow me to give a special greeting here to the Turkish Communist Party, which is confronting a bloody dictatorship, and to reaffirm our solidarity with all democrats, trade unionists, and torture victims and those facing execution!

From this rostrum, I want to give a warm greeting to all the representatives of communist parties in capitalist countries, and to tell them how much we want to develop further with them common action on the major issues of common interest.

In this revolutionary advance, the national liberation movement has also continued developing.

A number of nations have won their independence; Zimbabwe, for example.

Others, to whom this right is still refused, have made progress in their struggle and in their achievement of international recognition.

I am thus very happy to salute the presence here today of representatives of a number of national movements, including the PLO, the Polisario Front, SWAPO of Namibia, and the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front of El Salvador.

In a number of developing countries in Asia, Latin America, and Africa, social struggles are developing against poverty, illiteracy, hunger, national or international bourgeois exploitation and for dignity.

In all these countries is the growing demand for the right to economic and political sovereignty, and establishment of a new world economic order.

The solution to this problem is without a doubt one of the keys to mankind's future in the next few years.

Comrades and friends, you can assess, and will assess throughout your stay, the internationalism and the active solidarity which permeate the entire activity of the French Communists.

You will also be able to sense this dimension in the life of our party at the meetings Friday evening in the 31 French towns where you will speak.

This solidarity rests basically on this profound reality: However varied and different the conditions under which we each struggle, we have a single enemy, a common enemy: imperialism and its policy of oppression, exploitation, and crushing of peoples.

Our cause is also a common cause because we are striving for social progress, democracy, peace, national independence and socialism.

At this time, when imperialism in crisis is trying to regain military superiority and counter the surge of the revolutionary forces, we can understand how much solidarity in the struggle of these forces is necessary for further progress.

You comrades who come from the four corners of the world, be assured that each step forward and each success you achieve in your struggle constitutes important support to the struggle of the French working class and people!

On the other hand, we are aware that our highest international duty and the greatest contribution we French communists can make to the common struggle of the peoples is to carry out our struggle successfully for socialism in France.

Comrades and friends, we also share a number of important interests, for whose success our various national struggles cooperate.

Our national struggle is advancing along with our international solidarity.

This is why the French communists attach a high value to developing cooperation and joint action among all revolutionary forces in the struggle for disarmament, peace, and the new international order.

Comrades and friends, looking at your gallery and seeing so many of you, in such diversity, yet united in this great demonstration of solidarity, our congress, we can only be encouraged in our determination to contribute effectively to the establishment of a new internationalism appropriate to the world of today and commensurate with the great surge which you represent.

I thank you very warmly for being here with us. I thank you sincerely for this evidence of your interest and solidarity, and I wish you, dear comrades and friends, great success in these struggles and achievement of these objectives.

Long live the joint struggle of workers throughout the world against imperialism, and for independence, democracy, socialism, disarmament and peace!

Long live friendship and solidarity among peoples!

CLOSING SPEECH BY MARCHAIS TO CONGRESS SESSION

WA011403 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 4 Feb 82 p 14

[Closing speech at PCF congress by Georges Marchais: "The Socialism We Seek"]

[Text] Comrades, here we are at the end of our 24th Congress.

It was a congress that reflected the world of labor, in which workers, technicians, employees, engineers, peasants, teachers, and scientists exchanged and shared their experiences and their hopes.

It was a congress that reflected growing forces, and in which women and young people were present in higher proportion than in the past.

It was a congress that reflected the needs and aspirations of today's France, in which the delegates sustained and concluded a 4-month debate, one of the most lively, profound, and free in tone that we have ever known.

In brief, it was a congress that reflected the party we are: the party of women and men workers, manual labor and intellectuals, the party of the people, of the nation, the revolutionary party of the France of our time.

International Solidarity

First I want to thank again, on your behalf, the 112 delegations of communist parties, national and democratic movements, and socialist parties which paid us the honor and friendship of attending our proceedings.

When we look at the gallery containing our comrades, friends, and brothers from five continents, we can say truly that the time is past when the world map had large red, yellow, or green shaded areas showing the subjected peoples, the colonial empires. The world has changed, it is changing, and will change even more, and our action is a part of this unprecedented liberating transformation.

Dear comrades and friends, the day before yesterday in 31 French towns you were able to confirm the warmth of the French communists' internationalist feelings. I reaffirm to you our determination to develop our solidarity on a worldwide scale, and without exception, with all the forces struggling against imperialism, neocolonialism, and racism, and for peace and disarmament, justice, liberty and democracy, and socialism.

Twenty-Fourth Congress Resumes, Extends, and Amplifies the 22d and 23d

Comrades, we are living at an important juncture in the history of our party.

In 6 years -- from 1976 to date -- we have held three congresses. We perceive more clearly today that they form a whole. The 24th Congress now ending resumes, extends, and amplifies the 22d and 23d.

We have, indeed, a crucial problem to resolve: to bring ourselves up-to-date by developing a strategy appropriate to the France of our time.

In complex, harsh, and changing circumstances, and at the price of a joint striving for lucidity, reflection and questioning, we have succeeded in understanding in a more thorough, realistic way the society in which we live, the world within which it evolves, and the prospects which we can make possible.

Our adversaries would rather we did not have the courage to delve more profoundly into the causes of the situation in which we find ourselves. They would prefer that we remained captive of an unadapted approach. In that case we would not be in a position to carry out our responsibilities fully toward the workers, the people and the nation.

As the opening report revealed, the mutations in French society, the crisis affecting it today, and the possibilities and aspirations emerging in it, all call for a change in society. All this makes socialism the order of the day in France.

To this need, our party replies with full clarity: "The socialist society we want is here."

This society is justice. It means full employment, sufficient purchasing power for everyone, work involving more skill and responsibility, and equal opportunities for everyone to take care of, educate and cultivate himself.

This society is a new growth. That means the economy in the service of man, and not vice versa.

This society is liberty, which means all the liberties won over a thousand years of French history applied to benefit each man and woman, and new liberties, new rights, democracy and self-management.

This society is peace. This means an independent French policy of disarmament, security and cooperation.

This is French socialism.

In moving toward this original socialism, we want to follow an original path. It is a democratic path in struggle and meetings: resolute struggle against the forces of capital, and democratic majority meetings to achieve the transforming objectives, responsive always to the will and the potential of the popular movement.

Today we orient all our activity to this philosophy.

On 10 May the majority of French men and women expressed their desire for a change. Our attitude has been clear: just as we contributed to the victory, we have resolved to commit all our efforts to carrying out the new policy called for by the vote. This is the meaning of the agreements we made with the Socialist Party and of the participation of communist ministers in the goverment.

Since then, a number of months have passed. Positive measures have been taken. Important reforms have been approved or are in preparation. Certainly we have not solved all the problems. But one can say, I believe, that the government and the majority are in the right track. They have not done badly.

The Right Wants To Promote Division; It Will Be Disappointed

The opposing forces, on the other hand, are doing everything possible to slow down, divert, even halt the new policy. And they are making every effort to divide the majority.

Listen to these opponents of change spouting daily their litany about the disagreements and divergences between socialists and communists. As if they wanted electricity in the air! They only dream of wounds and bruises, of pain and laceration.

Well, the right should stop nourishing these illusions!

The Socialist Party and the Communist Party are different? What a great discovery! Gentlemen, have you forgotten that this is a pluralist majority? Each of the member parties intends to maintain and express its originality. What could be more natural and more fitting? This does not mean we have any less cooperation and cohesion. It was, indeed, on these bases that we made our agreements in June. What matters, what is essential, is that we work together for the common objectives the country expects to have achieved. This is exactly what socialist and communists have been doing for the past few months.

We are aware of the stakes and the responsibilities we have chosen to assume. Nothing will make us change our course. Coolly we will foil the schemes and traps. We will not fall into any trap. We will continue to play our part, with everything that implies, in creating the changes desired by French men and women.

In All Areas, Playing the Role of Builders

It is as builders that the communist ministers plan to carry out their work within the government.

It is as builders that the communist deputies and senators intend to continue making their contribution to the majority.

It is as builders that, everywhere in the country -- in factory, city, district or village, communists are helping working men and women of all circumstances in their struggle to overcome the resisting forces and participate with a spirit of initiative in sustaining, implementing and spreading the new policy.

In regard to the necessity of involvement of the workers and young people themselves, I need cite only as proof the example of the 39 hours. This was indeed a positive decision which management tried to transform into a negative measure by taking advantage of it, to threaten benefits already gained and to worsen the wage-earners' situation. The solution to a problem of this nature should come about, obviously, through the initiative of those affected.

Such is the constructive and unifying attitude in which we want to carry out, ever better, our activity at each level. I repeat: We are doing this in response to the hopes of French men and women; we are doing it out of respect for commitments.

We have only one goal: To best serve the interests of the workers and the country by helping to solve their problems. We know of only one method: Bringing together the largest number of people, on the basis of their common interests, to work for concrete objectives which are defined and achievable together.

This is a long-term action. No a priori limits must be permitted on our people's road to progress.

Party in the Government

Comrades, we are committing all our forces to this action. It will require great efforts from us.

Efforts to be present and active on all levels, in all areas, with a spirit of initiative, intelligence and imagination.

Efforts to get rid of impatience and to move forward with tenacity and perseverance on the long road before us.

Efforts to display, as our congress itself has done, a higher spirit of responsibility.

Yes, comrades, each communist -- wherever he is, in his factory, district or village cell or in the Central Committee -- must know how to speak and behave as a member of a party in the majority, a party in the government which shares the hopes of French men and women. The people are watching us at this task. They judge us and will judge us on the basis of our actions, our behavior in all circumstances.

Younger Than Ever

We have the means to succeed in these efforts.

The 24th Congress proves that our party is a great force. It demonstrates the party's vigor and vitality. It is a party of more than 700,000 men, women and young people united in their diversity, in their resolute will to advance on the road of the future.

We must increase this force even more. We must do everything so that French men and women will finally see us as we really are. It is a difficult but inspiring task.

Finally, comrades, I address myself to every member, man and woman, without exception, of our party: Let us work, all work with enthusiasm and confidence. Experience has tempered our party but it has emerged younger than ever.

Long live the 24th French Communist Party Congress!

Long live internationalist solidarity!

Long live justice and liberty! Long live French-style socialism.

In its first meeting, which has been held, the Central Committee elected the Poli and the Central Committee Secretariat.

Politburo:

Reelected:

Gustav Ansart, Mireille Bertrand, Jean Colpin, Charles Fiterman, Maxime Gremetz, Guy Hermier, Philippe Herzog, Pierre Juquin, Henri Krasucki, Andre Lajoinie, Paul Laurent, Francette Lazard, Rene Leguen, Roland Leroy, Georges Marchais, Gisele Moreau, Rene Picquet, Gaston Plissonnier, Claude Poperen, Madeleine Vincent.

Two new comrades elected:

Jean-Claude Gayssot, 37, joined the party in 1963 at Beziers, professional worker for French National Railroads, has had various responsibilities:

--After serving as secretary of his railway union, then as secretary of the CGT departmental union for Lozere and subsequently for Gard, he moved on to national trade union responsibilities.

--He has also been consecutively secretary of Saint-Flour (Cantal) cell; secretary of Marvejol (LoZere) branch; and member of Gard federal bureau in 1972.

--Our comrade was elected to the Party Central Committee in 1979.

For 5 years, he has been an official of the Central Committee economic section.

Thus, as is evident, Jean-Claude Gayssot has exercised responsibility at all levels and is certainly experienced.

Louis Viannet was the second comrade elected. He is 48, joined the party in 1953, an employee of PTT, has had assumed various trade union responsibilities for postal workers, including:

--Departmental secretary of the PTT union of Rhone, then regional secretary for Rhone-Alpes, and later secretary general of the PTT-CGT Federation;

--Member of Rhone federal committee in 1967, he was elected to the Party Central Committee in 1976.

Our comrade thus has wide experience in the labor movement.

Like all the other decisions taken at the meeting, the election of the Political Bureau members by the Central Committee members was unanimous.

The congress will have noted that our comrade Georges Seguy was not reelected to the Political Bureau. It is at his own request that he has left this party leadership organ, for personal reasons which he has already explained.

The Secretariat was elected by the Central Committee in accordance with party statutes.

Comrade Georges Marchais was reelected party secretary general.

The Central Committee elected its other secretaries:

Charles Fiterman, Maxime Gremetz, Andre Lajoinie, Paul Laurent, Gisele Moreau and Gaston Plissonnier.

As you will note, Andre Lajoinie, member of the Central Committee since 1973, Politburo member in 1976, and chairman of the Communist group in the National Assembly, joins the Central Committee Secretariat for the first time. We congratulate him on this promotion.

Central Financial Control Commission:

The Central Committee elected Armand Guillemot chairman of the Central Financial Control Commission.

The commission is one of the important party management organs. Its role is to control finances and to lead financial debates. The commission members are full participants in Central Committee activity.

Central Political Control Commission:

Further information on the Central Committee decisions:

It appointed under it the Central Political Control Commission with members Gustave Ansart, who will also be chairman, Arthur Buchmann, Aime Halbeher, Colette Coulon, Roland Favaro, Georges Lazzarino, Claude Llabres and Jean-Paul Magnon. The assignment of tasks among the party leadership organs will as usual be decided after the congress and be announced then.

Comrades, this latest information on election of the party leadership concludes the second item on the congress agenda.

In the new Central Committee, which is composed, like its predecessor of 145 members, plus 5 members of the Central Financial Control Committee, 66.1 percent are workers, production technicians, and employees. Intellectuals of various disciplines total 30.6 percent, and peasants 3.3 percent. The number of women is unchanged at 31 percent.

The composition of the Central Committee continues, as before, to give priority to the working class, with due recognition to other social categories. We should point out also that the mix of generations of communists has been maintained.

L'HUMANITE EXPLAINS PCF VIEW OF FRENCH SOCIALISM

[Rene Andrieu editorial: "For the French, by the French"]

[Text] If one were to believe our well-wishers among the press, the PCF Congress would be one of contradictions (LE FIGARO), ambiguities (LE MATIN), or even drift and inevitable decline, as LA CROIX and Europe I charitably maintain.

It might be asked, as the question of contradictions has been raised, why representatives of the media devote so much time, energy and sometimes malevolent passion to a party that is supposed to play only a minor role in the country. Unless they have a penchant for futility.

The truth is that it was enough to hear Georges Marchais' report and the attentive way the audience listened to it to understand that the PCF in no way resembles the caricature that certain elements are trying to present of it.

The truth is that the day after the electoral reverse, which was followed -- by an apparent paradox -- by the entry into government of communist ministers, our party, without any complaisance, set about seeking the reasons for this situation. It did this not in order to push the responsibility for it onto the leaders who preceded us, as our opponents insinuated, but with the desire to make up for lost time and to forge ahead with creating in our country socialism in France's colors, a democratic socialism by democratic means themselves.

This new society will first and foremost be a society of justice, people will be conscious of what we are, conscious -- even if France today is no longer the France of "Les Miserables" or of "Germinal" and not a Third World country either, even if it has become a modern industrial country where consumption has doubled in 25 years -- that it is not, however, a wonderland but a country affected by the crisis, a country where millions of workers live in modern poverty, and where half of its inhabitants never go on vacation or read books.

This dream society, as we call it, will also be a society of freedom. The cry of "long live freedom" which has echoed through our history for centuries, we have always made our own, even if for some of us it has meant sacrificing our lives.

The congress also expressed its approval forcefully when Georges Marchais denounced the campaign relating to freedoms being waged daily against the communists by certain advocates who would do better to show more modesty: "What responsibility are you trying to make us shoulder for acts we have not committeed? We, French communists, from generation to generation, wherever we have found ourselves -- in assemblies or in factories, in government or in camps -- we have never undermined freedoms. Not all the parties in France can say as much. I reject your quite unwarranted accusations."

We have all the more reason for rejecting them since socialism as we see it must be conceived in freedom and by freedom. We have pronounced ourselves unambiguously in favor of alteration and respect for universal suffrage, against a single party system, for trade union independence from every form of power, for individual and collective liberties, for cultural diversity and freedom of creation, and in favor of giving up the idea of the dictatorship of the proletariat.

Although it is true that there was a historical period when the PCF believed in the existence of a "model," it abandoned that idea a long time ago. For socialism, as our party secretary general stressed, cannot be a socialism that is prefabricated elsewhere and then painted over in France's colors, it can only be a socialism that has been conceived and built in France, for the French and by the French themselves. Socialism the French way has to be forged out of national reality, preciously preserving our historic legacy of freedoms, enriching it and giving it a new diminsion to suit our times.

This socialism will be a humanist socialism or will not be at all. But it will not be born miraculously. In our country it can only be achieved through the work of a majority grouping of the people and must be realized in a democratic way under the control of universal suffrage. But this way will be that of a fierce struggle between supporters and opponents of change. The distinctive features of this society make it possible to envisage the contours of a grouping of the people that would go much further than the political majorities that have hitherto existed. It is this grouping that we want to build through struggle and union.

SCHEDULE FIRMED UP FOR AL-QADHDHAFI VISIT

[Special DIE PRESSE report: "Al-Qadhdhafi Surprisingly to Vienna; Kreisky: 'Only Economic Talks'"]

[Text] Vienna -- Libyan revolution leader Al-Qadhdhafi will arrive tomorrow, Wednesday, for a few days' visit to Austria, as was surprisingly reported yesterday. As Chancellor Kreisky told DIE PRESSE, an invitation had been extended to Al-Qadhdhafi a long time ago, and he has now accepted it. The Austrian side will discuss "only economic topics" with the Libyan chief of state, Kreisky said, adding that "immeasurable damage would have been inflicted" on domestic business had the visit been called off.

The Libyan revolution leader's visit is based on an invitiation by Chancellor Kreisky and will focus primarily on economic questions. The visit, which was announced on short notice, will be marked by the strictest security precautions. Since Al-Qadhdhafi resigned from all official functions a few years ago, his visit is not formally, but de facto, an official visit. An eight-member delegation has been in Vienna since Sunday to prepare for the visit. According to first reports, Al-Qadhdhafi will be accompanied by the Libyan foreign and heavy industry ministers.

After his arrival, Al-Qadhdhafi will have talks with Chancellor Kreisky, Foreign Minister Pahr and "important public figures" on Wednesday and Thursday, according to a Chancellery source. These prominent figures are said also to include Nationalrat Chairman Benya. On Friday the Libyan revolution leader will visit the Voest-Alpine Company in Linz, and he will leave Austria on Saturday.

"We have informed the Libyans that President Kirchschlaeger is ill and that the program therefore will have to be shortened," Chancellor Kreisky declared yesterday in a talk with DIE PRESSE. The chancellor pointed out that Libya is one of Austria's most important trade partners in the Arab region. In 1981, Austrian exports were 2.3 billion schillings and imports -- mainly crude oil -- 3.7 billion schillings. The talks in Linz will deal with the construction of two vocational training centers in Libya, an order worth 4 billion schillings. During the official visit a meeting of the joint Austrian-Libyan Commission for Economic Cooperation is also to take place in Vienna.

At the Interior Ministry the security preparations for the Al-Qadhdhafi visit are running in high gear. "There can be no doubt," says Robert Danzinger, director general for public security, "that this man is one of the highest security risks. You can well imagine what that means for us."

Kreisky Responds to Queries

[Roland Machatschke report on Chancellor Kreisky's press conference in Vienna 9 March following cabinet meeting -- with recorded portions]

[Excerpts] Well, here in my report from the Chancellery it must first of all be [illegible] that Chancellor Kreisky has outlined how the Libyan revolution leader's visit came about. What happened was that Libyan Premier Jallud (as heard) some time ago paid an official visit to Austria -- that was the first visit by this politician to a Western country -- and he invited Chancellor Kreisky, as is customary, for a return visit. This visit has not materialized to date, however.

Later, Kreisky was again invited to visit Libya -- as he said, oddly enough while he was in Cairo; there he was asked to return to Austria via Tripoli -- but this visit did not materialize, either. And then, Kreisky continued, the Libyans informed Austria that Al-Qadhdhafi would like to visit Austria if he was invited, and that had now happened.

In reply to the question of whether the visit of the controversial Libyan revolution leader might not also be regarded as highly controversial abroad, Kreisky said the following:

[Begin recording] We were also highly controversial when we first normalized our relations with the European communist countries; we were also highly controversial when we said one cannot ignore the Arab countries -- and today that is a matter of course in Europe; we were also highly controversial when we said that the Palestinian problem is one of the central problems -- and today that is generally recognized. [end recording]

Chancellor Kreisky was also asked how he felt about the fact that Al-Qadhdhafi reacted to As-Sadat's assassination by staging a 3-day joyful celebration. The chancellor replied that one must take things as they are. And the way things stand, Chancellor Kreisky said, the United States has not completely severed its economic relations with Libya but only restricted them, and Libya is an important trade partner for Austria.

Then, asked whether there are no objections considering that Al-Qadhdhafi is regarded abroad as a sponsor of terrorists and of terrorism, Kreisky said the following:

[Begin recording] To date there has not been any proof of such charges, and I can only tell you that we have inquired very thoroughly in this respect, and that even those who made these assertions to date have not beeen able to produce a shred of evidence. We do not want to fall victim to the propaganda that is being made here.

[Question] Do you expect the United States to react negatively considering that a few weeks ago the government officially declared that a Libyan killer commando had been dispatched to kill Reagan?

[Answer] Here again no proof whatever has been produced, to us or to anyone else. I would like to say again that I am expecting certain reactions, but I don't mind very much.

[Question] But even if one does not believe everything the U.S. intelligence service dishes out to the public, there is certainly a grain of truth to these charges made by the U.S. intelligence service against Al-Qadhdhafi. Is that not a criterior which should be considered in Austrian foreign policy?

[Answer] I cannot go into such assertions and charges. You know that there are also countercharges and assertions -- we have not examined those, either.

[Question] OPEC terrorist Klein himself, after so to speak changing sides, wrote that after arriving in Libya he was treated like a guest paying a state visit there, that he was received by the foreign minister, for example, and that a state villa was placed at his disposal -- is that not proof for you that terrorism is officially condoned by the Libyan chief of state or revolution leader?

[Answer] Well, at any rate that was not enough, for example, to induce the Americans to discontinue buying Libyan oil, or to prevent them from, shall we say, installing one of their large companies there. Relations are no longer determined by such criteria. The situation must be examined in every case as it comes up. We, at any rate, were of the opinion that we should give Colonel al-Qadhdhafi the opportunity to discuss political and economic questions here with us in Austria, and I will not fail to draw his attention to the negative consequences of such activities as far as there is an opportunity for that at all. [end recording]

In addition to the political talks in Vienna with Chancellor Kreisky and Foreign Minister Pahr, Al-Qadhdhafi will have talks in Linz primarily about projects with the Voest company -- here, as Chancellor Kreisky stressed, jobs are at stake again. In addition to Linz, Al-Qadhdhafi will also visit Salzburg. He will fly home from Salzburg on Saturday.

Believes in Dialogue

AU092047 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1830 GMT 9 Mar 82

[Summary] According to the chancellor's view, the visit by international outsider Al-Qadhdhafi will have no negative effect on Austria's prestige. It is okay with Kreisky that Austria is the first Western country the Libyan revolutionary leader is visiting, regardless of what reputation he might enjoy. Kreisky stated today after the Council of Ministers session: "It does not disturb me; we have had such situations often before. I remind you that I was the first to visit the GDR, and this subsequently turned out to have been very correct. We have been the first ones to initiate normalization. As a neutral country we evidently are a relatively good partner for talks in Europe."

[Question] Does this not involve a disadvantage to Austrian foreign policy if the controversial Al-Qadhdhafi comes to Austria first?

[Answer] "We cannot arrange ourselves according to that. We also have been very controversial when we were the first to normalize our relations with the European communist states. We were also very controversial when we stated that we cannot turn our back on the Arab states, and today this is self-evident in Europe. We were very controversial when we said that the Palestinian problem is a central issue, and today everybody admits this."

[Question] On what terms are you talking with Al-Qadhdhafi, who welcomed As-Sadat's death with 3 days of state festivities?

[Answer] "You know that this is a very problematic question. That has nothing to do with it. In the talks with Al-Qadhdhafi, I can only defend my position, just as he will uphold his position. I cannot arrange Austria's relations, so to speak, solely according to those with whom we maintain close and cordial friendship and agreement. But we also must take things the way they are."

[Question] Is it not a bit depressing for you to hold talks with Al-Qadhdhafi?

[Answer] I have conducted such talks once already, in the desert. I was one of the first ones, and there were differences of opinion on very many basic issues. I believe in the importance of dialogue and this certainly will also be the case now. When Colonel al-Qadhdhafi defends certain views, and there will be an opportunity for this, views which I believe to be wrong or that do not correspond to facts in my opinion, then I shall -- as I have always done -- state my opinion about them. I think this is more correct than to leave all these things unchallenged."

[Question] Mr Chancellor, does it not disturb you at all that most Austrians are very indignant about this visit?

[Answer] "How do you know that the majority are very indignant? This is always the view of the press -- what the gentlemen fancy, that is the majority opinion of the Austrians. You do not know this at all. Naturally the Austrians sometimes may be dissatisfied with one thing or another, but we must take into consideration very many viewpoints, and one of these is very important; that is, that in such critical times as we are experiencing now we cannot renounce economic cooperation with Libya. It would certainly disturb the Austrians much more if unemployment in Upper Austria increased by a few thousand people."

Libyan Press Conference

[Edgar Sterbenz report on press conference at Libyan People's Bureau in Vienna 9 March -- recorded]

[Text] During his visit to Austria, revolution leader Al-Qadhdhafi wants to receive all Libyans living in Europe who have not yet returned home for private reasons. This announcement from (Abu Baka Abu Shama), secretary of the People's Committee, was the starting point for a session of questions and answers in an atmosphere of evidently Libyan revolutionary precision. The secretary of the People's Committee, in his function as Al-Qadhdhafi's ambassador to Austria, stated that the Libyans living in Europe could discuss their personal problems with their supreme revolutionary leader during the state visit. Al-Qadhdhafi would help them to prepare for return to the fatherland where they should help to build the new society.

Recalling assassination attempts against Libyans critical of the regime abroad, the question was asked as to how many Libyans are now living in Europe. But despite repeated requests, no answer was given. Nor was there any date mentioned for the announced meeting. It would depend on the course of the program for the visit, it was stated laconically. The question as to how the invited countrymen would learn of the invitation was not answered either.

It was hoped that on the basis of reports about this press conference they would learn about it, the People's Committee secretary said. With respect to Al-Qadhdhafi's motives for paying a visit to Austria, the secretary was communicative. The colonel appreciates Austria's attitude in international politics and Chancellor Kreisky's role in world events. It is time for the two to meet again in the hope of being able to achieve positive results in the political and economic fields for both sides. The visit is the climax of Austrian-Libyan relations.

Replies to other questions were refused with the suggestion that they should be reserved for Al-Qadhdhafi's press conference. The date envisaged for this -- Thursday evening at 1800 -- could be changed, however, as Al-Qadhdhafi's program for the visit was in general not yet fixed. The schedule worked out by the Austrian authorities reads as follows: Arrival of the special plane tomorrow afternoon at Vienna's Schwechat Airport; immediately afterwards a first conversation with Chancellor Kreisky; a visit to parliament and several meetings with the Austrian head of government on Thursday; a visit to the Voest Works in Linz on Friday; Subsequently, a continuation of the trip to Salzburg; and finally, departure by plane from Salzburg on Saturday afternoon. This schedule is only a proposal for discussion and a draft. The final program will be fixed only after Al-Qadhdhafi's arrival in Vienna.

On leaving the Libyan People's Bureau in Vienna's 17th Distict, quite a few journalists harboured doubts -- in view of the green Libyan revolutionary flag hoisted on a pole -- whether green is also the color of hope with respect to matters of Libyan revolutionary organization.

INDUSTRIAL ESPIONAGE FOR CSSR, USSR DISCOVERED

AU091417 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 9 Mar 82

[Text] The Steyr-Daimler-Puch Automotive Company has apparently suffered serious damages through a now partly uncovered case of industrial espionage. After an investigation which extended over years, state security police have arrested the brothers Erich and Karl Moschner. They are charged with having sold the plans of a newly developed precision roller bearing machine to the CSSR and the USSR. According to police in Steyr, Upper Austria, several other suspects are still being investigated, including members of the Steyr Company's management who are also believed to be involved in industrial espionage.

JORDAN ANTICIPATES VISIT BY PRESIDENT MITTERRAND

[Text] In an interview with LE MONDE correspondent Emmanuel Jarry in Amman, Jordanian Information Minister Abu 'Awdah confirmed that Mr Mitterrand "is going to come" to Amman but has fixed no date. In Jerusalem on Thursday the president of the republic said that he would pay an official visit to Jordan "in the next 3 months." On Sunday 7 March the Jordanian Foreign Ministry merely indicated that Amman will be examining what "such a visit could contribute" in the light of the visit which Mr Mitterrand has just paid to Israel before a date is fixed.

During the same interview Mr 'Awdah said that the French president's visit to Israel had three aspects: The first, a "positive" one, is the reaffirmation of the Palestinians' rights to a state and the "confirmation of the principles of the European Venice Declaration (1980), especially the right to self-determination. The latter, according to Mr 'Awdah, was the underlying meaning behind the president's words, although he did not mention it by name in Israel.

On the other hand, "We consider the statements relating to the role of Europe and France to be really negative, although they are not new," he added. Jordan has always attached great importance to a "European initiative" suggested by that same Venice Declaration. However, the information minister stressed, "Mr Mitterrand reaffirmed that it is up to the parties concerned to sit down at the negotiating table. We think that is an obstacle to any possibility of a European initiative, at least regarding France. In our view that argument is wrong, because there is an Israeli-Arab imbalance, Israel being the occupying power. Such a stance...gives Israel time to pursue the process of de facto annexation of the occupation territories.

"As for French-Israeli relations, we think that opening wider the door of cooperation between the two countries while Israel remains intransigent toward Security Council Resolution 242 and withdrawal from the occupied territories is a negative point per se."

Mr 'Awdah also deplored the fact that Mr Mitterrand has not recognized the PLO as the Palestinian people's representative and that he asked the Palestinian organization to recognize Israel without demanding reciprocal recognition.

ISRAELI, FRENCH POSITIONS IN AREA IRRECONCILABLE

[Max Clos article: "The Harsh Reality"]

[Text] Beyond protocolar pomp, political commentators' learned analyses and pleasing speeches suited to the occasion, a few minutes at the Knesset proved sufficient to destroy illusions and bring one back to harsh reality. It is an obvious fact, which has been openly proclaimed, that the Israeli and French positions in the Near East are irreconcilable.

Is it a question of a setback? No, insofar as Mr Begin and Mr Mitterrand knew perfectly well what the score is. The former knew that his guest would advise negotiations with PLO and that he would broach in one way or another the problem of a Palestinian state. No, insofar as the French president knew that such a suggestion would be totally unacceptable to Mr Begin.

Yes, it is a setback insofar as -- as it could be foreseen -- Mr Mitterrand has displeased and annoyed both the Jews and the Arabs.

Last night disappointment and anger were expressed in both camps. In that sense, it can be considered that France has lost on both counts. In fact, Mr Begin and Mr Mitterrand had nothing to say to each other from the moment when the main problem for the two adversaries -- the creation of a Palestinian state -- was mentioned. However, in view of this, you may wonder what the point of the visit was. The French president could not possibly convince, and he has not the necessary means to impose. In this impossible dialogue both interlocutors could put forward some arguments. However, the problem looks completely different depending on whether you look at it from Jerusalem or from Paris.

France finds that the Near East is in a state of permanent turmoil, that local conflicts may blow up at any moment and that this situation favors both U.S. and Soviet maneuvers whether open or underhanded.

Any analysis must lead to the following conclusion: There can be no solution until the Palestinians are not only granted a homeland but also recognized as a nation. This in turn implies granting a state. The PLO Paris representative stated last night: "It is simply a question of whether France wants justice."

This is exactly Israel's rejoinder. Mr Begin also demands justice. And he demands something more, something which is neither a political nor a philosophical issue, namely the right to live. "How can anyone expect," he cries, "that we could negotiate with an organization which, as Mr Mitterrand knows, calls for the destruction of the Jewish state?" What can be your answer to this? Documents are there. The PLO charter has never been repudiated by the Palestinians and, any way you look at it, you cannot possibly see it as anything but a call for another final solution.

Mr Mitterrand may be right and in the long or medium term new bloody conflicts may prove him right in the eyes of history. But today? What Israeli leader can be asked in earnest to approve of a policy which for Israel would simply be suicidal?

MINISTRY DENIES REPORT OF CAR ULTIMATUM

AB101135 Paris AFP in French 1109 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 10 Mar (AFP) -- The report broadcast by Radio Bangui to the effect that the CAR Government on Tuesday evening gave a 48-hour ultimatum to France to hand over Ange Patasse, the chairman of the Central African People's Liberation Movement (MPLC), is "unfounded," the French Ministry of External Relations affirmed on Wednesday.

The CAR Government has addressed no ultimatum to the French Government asking it to hand over the MLPC chairman who has been taking refuge in the French Embassy in Bangui for 5 days now.

It is learned from reliable sources in Paris that the 48-hour deadline mentioned by Radio Bangui in a commentary does not concern the "hand-over" of Mr Patasse to the CAR authorities but the French Government's reply to the demand for the extradition of the main opponent of General Kolingba's regime.

The Ministry of External Relations explained that no ultimatum was addressed to Mr Guy Penne, counsellor at the Presidency of the Republic in charge of African and Malagasy Affairs, by Gen Andre Kolingba during his discussions with the CAR head of state on Tuesday.

It is stressed that these discussions took place in a "friendly atmosphere." The Quai d'Orsay (French Ministry of External Relations) added that Mr Penne reminded General Kolingba that the French Government does not like to interfere in the internal affairs of foreign countries, but that it has the absolute principle of granting refuge to persons who feel threatened because of political reasons.

It is added that the counsellor expressed his satisfaction in seeing the CAR government emerge strengthened from the "trial" of the attempted coup of 4 March and recalled the desire of Paris to strengthen its cooperation with the CAR.

ETA/PM'S MAJORITY SECTOR CONFIRMS END OF TRUCE

PM061117 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 26 Feb 82 p 15

[Tonia Etxarri report: "Majority Sector of ETA/PM Announces Its Return to Terrorist Activity at Clandestine Press Conference"]

[Text] San Sebastian -- The majority sector of Basque Homeland and Liberty's Politicomilitary Wing [ETA/PM] yesterday confirmed in the course of a press conference held somewhere in the Basque Country its return to armed activity. This sector, following the secession of those in favor of maintaining the truce, claims to have 76 percent of the organization. An unfavorable assessment of the truce begun a year ago, the so-called "outstanding issues" not having been resolved, the ascertaining of a process of rightward shift in the country's politics and the curtailment of freedoms were, together with harsh criticism of the Basque left, its principal motives in deciding to break the "cease-fire."

In the midst of a considerable display of weaponry -- an RP6Z bazooka, an M16 assault rifle, a Dragunov sniping rifle, a Browning pistol, a Taurus revolver and Schmeisser and Beretta submachineguns -- three hooded spokesmen of the "Poli-Milis'" majority sector told the news media that the truce "has been a failure."

The implementation of the [autonomy] statute, the referendum on Lemoniz [site of nuclear power plant under construction] and Navarre's relations with the Basque autonomous community were the principal issues which ETA/PM placed on the negotiating table last year, when announcing the truce. "Not only have there been no political results during all this time, but now there are new factors: the organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process, constant threats of a coup and the 23 February [1981 -- date of attempted coup] trial."

The spokesmen of the majority sector, whose stances, according to what they acknowledged yesterday, won 76 percent of the votes at the assembly they held recently, particularly emphasized the process of a rightward shift in the country, at the same time as criticizing the lack of determination in the leftwing parties in general and the Basque left in particular.

After stating that they contemplated the possibility of breaking the truce when they noted that the negotiated solution was being used by the government "as a solution to the repentant terrorist," the spokesmen of this sector spared no criticisms of the leftwing organizations. "The political forces have been bowing to the policy of fear, and criticism to this effect should be harsh because this phenomenon has prevented the dynamic of mobilizations. There has been among the left a lack of its own alternative policy to the rightward shift, and they have surrendered to the policy of fear."

"Critical Support" for Basque Left

The brunt of the criticism by ETA/PM's majority sector fell on the Basque left. To this effect they recalled that the negotiated solution proposed at the beginning of the truce had been advocated by that party. "However, the mass action which the Basque left has promoted to make possible this negotiated solution has left us dissatisfied." It is precisely the Basque left's "lack of political action" on which the "Poli-Milis" dwelt. In their opinion, "The Basque left has concerned itself more with reflection on itself than with the negotiated solution."

After rapidly surveying the course of the armed organization and of the party, since the latter was set up in 1976, the spokesmen of the "Poli-Milis'" majority sector announced that now, with a real difference of opinion arising, they will give the Basque left their "critical support," without this implying, at least at present, independence from the party.

Following the harsh exposition of the political course of the Basque left and of the parties in general, the ETA/PM spokesmen focused their attention on the need to effect a convergence of the Basque left, which, in their opinion, should embrace broader sectors than those currently united by the Basque left. Although they defined this force as the core of this convergence, the "Poli-Milis" asserted the need to include political forces such as the Spanish Socialist Workers Party and Herri Batasuna. In relation to this patriotic [abertzale] coalition, the "Poli-Milis" stated that "they should be within the institutions, and the fact that this is not so is allowing the implementation of the statute to be less ambitious."

To this effect the "Poli-Milis" stated that "on the basis of the statute it is possible to initiate industrial reorganization and, transference by transference [of powers], to achieve antonomy aspirations which we champion."

Neogtiate Without Specific Interlocutors

ETA/PM's majority sector, which yesterday announced "the recrudescence" of its political presence, explained that it is going to operate in those fields in which there are problems which, in its opinion, are harming and worrying the working class sectors. Thus, in addition to all the matters presented as "outstanding issues," they added the organic law on the harmonization of the autonomy process and the economic crisis.

If the Basque left was initially the party to which they delegated the role of intermediary in a negotiating stage -- the Poli-Milis'" minority sector was still attributing that role to it at a press conference Monday -- the spokesmen of ETA/PM's majority sector presented as an innovation a hazy figure in speaking of intermediaries. Those in favor of the return to the armed struggle stated that the interlocutors should be "the leftwing political forces."

The spokesmen of ETA/PM's majority sector, which has decidedto resume its armed activity and which includes some historical leaders, did not specify its actions but asserted that kidnappings will form part of its regular dynamic, at the same time as criticizing the revolutionary tax [money extorted from Basque businessmen] as a means of fundraising.

BASQUES FAIL TO TAKE PARLIAMENT LOYALTY OATH

[Text] Madrid, 10 Mar (AFP) -- Members of Spain's Lower House of Congress pledged allegiance to the constitution in a special ceremony here Tuesday, but three Basque extremists refused.

At a time when there is widespread anxiety over right-wing and military respect for Spanish democracy, members of the Congress of Deputies were called on to make a oath of loyalty to the document which was approved by referendum in 1978 and which serves as post-Franco Spain's constitution.

The three Basques belonging to the Herri Batasuna Party, considered the political wing of the ETA-Military [Basque Fatherland and Liberty-Military] terrorist movement, did not show up. Separatists who want independence for their rich corner of norther Spain, they have never taken their seats in the national parliament.

Two of them, whose parliamentary immunity was lifted last month, face trial for insulting King Juan Carlos I.

If the Basques do not take the loyalty oath at one of the next three parliamentary sessions, they will be stripped of all congressional prerogatives including the right to vote on legislation.

The congressmen had a choice of two ways of pledging allegiance. Most supporters of the conservative minority government and the right-wing "Popular Alliance" opted for "swearing fidelity" to the constitution.

Socialists, communists and Catalan regional representatives preferred the formula of "promising to be faithful."

Photographers had a field day when the loyalty vow was pronounced by such widely differing deputies as Blas Pinar, head of the neo-fascist Fuerza Nueva Movement, Juan Mario Bandres, whose Euskadiko Eskerra party is considered the parliamentary wing of the Basque ETA's politico-military faction, and Fernando Sagaseta, whose Canary Islands Party favors a degree of autonomy amounting almost to independence for an archipelao administered as Spanish provinces.

The ceremony came during the continuing trial of 32 right-wing military officers accused of masterminding or taking part in an attempt to overthrow Spain's fragile democracy in a coup bid just over a year ago.

Meanwhile, the government of Centrist Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo suffered a setback in a working session of parliament, being outvoted for the first time since the premier took office on February 27 of last year. The government lost by 161 to 151, with nine abstentions, on the preamble to a draft bill defining limited autonomy for the East Coast Valencia region.

There was no question of the government falling. The disagreement was over wording -- conservatives wanted to refer to "the realm of Valencia" while leftists preferred the less formal "Valencian Country" (as in "the Basque Country").

The large Socialist Party had little quarrel with the actual autonomy provisions, but disagreed with the government on such points as definition of the Valencian flag.

The vote, which was lost due to the recent defection of 10 Social Democrats who had previously ensured the government a majority, sent the Valencia bill back to committee for rewording.

ARCHBISHOP RESPONDS TO KHARAVYI PLOT CHARGE

NC100932 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 10 Mar 82 p 3

[Excerpts] In response to a KHARAVYI report, Archbishop Khrisostomos had made the following statement:

We read last Sunday's front-page report in KHARAVYI under the banner headline, "We Reveal and Denounce," with surprise but also with much regret. As we have repeatedly stated, we do not desire to clash with anyone, either with individuals or with political groups in the country. We are fully aware of our responsibilities as prelate of the church, which is made up of all our people, independent of political ideologies or party affiliations. Consequently, the fact that we are obliged today to comment on what KHARAVYI said is not due to a desire to argue with its editors or those who direct the paper, but to protect our unsuspecting and innocent people against spurious reports and malicious traps. It is for this reason that we state clearly and directly:

1. We have no aspiration to become president or "superpresident" [yperproedhros] as KHARAVYI reports. This is stated to assuage those who are concerned.

2. No meeting was ever held in our presence in which -- as KHARAVYI reports -- we recommended three rightwing candidates for the presidency. We call on KHARAVYI to provide the names and positions of those who attended such a meeting.

3. Statements about a "directorate" and about a "holy reactionary alliance" are difficult to understand and absolutely unfounded, at least in their reference to us. Such a description of an alliance would only have an understandable meaning if some other "unholy reactionary alliance" were being hatched. This, however, is another question, and it is our peoples' right to judge it accordingly.

4. Over and above what is stated in reference to the national issue, we also want to state clearly that we systematically avoid any involvement in party developments or affairs. Our only involvement in the country's political life, in its narrow sense, was when, after the death of never-to-be-forgotten ethnarch Makarios, we acted on the nomination of Spiros Kiprianou as a joint presidential candidate.

5. We want to assure our people that if what KHARAVYI reports is not the figment of a diseased or inebriated imagination, then it is composed of pure and malevolent lies aimed at creating confusion, striking at the genuine patriotic and resistence forces and at undermining the church, which is an insurmountable obstacle to the plans by the foreigners against Cyprus Hellenism.

6. This suffices as to what has to do with a "directorate" and an "unholy reactionary alliance" with the archbishop as "superpresident."

7. We wonder, however, which are the patriotic, democratic forces to which KHARAVYI refers. Who, according to KHARAVYI, are patriots and the democrats and who are not? Are we not patriots? We and the others who fight daily to restore the fighting spirit of our people -- are we not patriots? Are those who undermine this spirit by cultivating the idea of indirect or direct acceptance of partition patriots? Are we and the others, who declare that our struggle is for the liberation of every corner of our enslaved fatherland not patriots, while those who are prepared openly to sign an agreement with the Turks after receiving some insignificant percentages of territory from what Attila snatched from us patriots?

8. Something more: KHARAVYI places us among those who want a NATO solution to our national issue. However, who wants a NATO solution? Is it those who courageously and frankly reject every proposal that directly or indirectly leads to the partition of Cyprus or those who accept discussion of such proposals?

Is it those who unquestionably rejected the Turkish proposals because they clearly demanded legalization of the original Attila line or those who saw positive points in the Turkish proposals and wanted to study them in depth and develop a dialogue on them? Is it those who rejected the U.S. plan immediately because it was partitionist and because basically it denied the right of the majority of the refugees to return or those who openly accepted it but could not say so due to its origin? Who wants a NATO solution? Is it those who opposed discussion of the Waldheim ideas or those who agreed to discuss them when we all know that these ideas were drafted with NATO intervention and are nothing more than U.S. plan in a second, revised edition for our benefit? Could it be that they were presented as Waldheim's ideas simply to keep the form and to justify their support by the leadership of AKEL -- as, at least, many maintain?

9. If, as KHARAVYI -- the organ of AKEL -- reports, the rightwing wants a NATO solution, what do the leaders of AKEL want just at a time when we all know that during the past 2 years, at least, there has been full conformity of positions between the leadership of AKEL and the Democratic Rally on the national issue? There is conformity toward the Waldheim statement on acceptance of the term "bizonal," conformity on the method of handling the Turkish proposals, conformity on the proposal to exchange Varosha for the operational and joint use of Nicosia airport and the port of Famagusta, total conformity in approval and utilization of the Waldheim ideas and on many other points.

Naturally it is the right of the AKEL leadership and of any other party or individual to want one or the other way for the solution of our national problem. They must, however, have the courage to state clearly and publicly what they want and aim at and what they are prepared to accept so that the people will not be deceived. The fact that we are now referring to the leadership and not the party membership of AKEL is because we believe it is impossible that no other forces exist within AKEL that do not view the terms "patriotism" and "patriot" under a different light.

10. In reference to our being placed by KHARAVYI among the "reactionary forces" and in reference to our alleged hatred for the democratic forces, we only have this to observe: Did the leadership of AKEL fight against the junta and the coup more than we did? Did it run the risks we and others did -- others who, because they fail to agree with AKEL on the national issue, have now ceased to be "democratic forces?" Unless of course we are unable to conceive the peculiar meaning the leadership of AKEL gives to the term "democracy."

11. In respect to those who threaten us openly or covertly, we want to assure them that they are only exposing themselves and their "democratic" deals. In the exercise of our duties, as they are dictated by our church and our national conscience, we were never in fear of anyone, either as a person or as a church.

It is truly with great regret that we are obliged to make this statement. Many times and from many directions there have been frequent uses of unacceptable and crude terms and phrases to describe our declarations on the national issue simply because these declarations of ours were not in agreement with their own. We tolerated this, although we were wounded by their political behavior and the expression of their character. We cannot, however, tolerate the effort to deceive the people, the body of the church, on the national issue.

We are happy to point out that what we have declared for such a long time is now being proved right by the national policy of Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou. For 3 years now we have been declaring that there must be a stop to the dependence of our struggle in the international arena on the results of the intercommunal dialogue.

We have stressed repeatedly that without pressure on Turkey, the intercommunal dialogue cannot have any favorable results for us and that on the contrary it causes harm to our issue because, apart from all else, it also strengthens Turkish propaganda that the Cyprus issue is simply an intercommunal difference. When we spoke of these things, we were described as chauvinists, warlike, illogical, irresponsible, mad and many other such things. Today, slowly and timidly, they have started accepting what we said, because they cannot accuse Greek Prime Minister Papandreou -- at least not openly -- of being unpatriotic or illogical. We are not asking for praise for this, nor do we accuse those who have different views. The least we ask is that we not be accused of lack of patriotism.

In any event we must all realize -- even those who want to direct public opinion as a monopoly -- that issues that have to do with the survival of a people such as ours are not issues of interest exclusively limited to the political leaders or the government; these are issues that must be of interest to the entire people, both as a whole and as individuals. To an even greater degree they are issues that more directly interest the leadership of the church.

This is why, in conclusion, we state that in no way, either with threats, slander, distortion of words and facts or with false reports could they prevent the national education of the people by the church nor the participation by the church in the conduct of the national struggle and its reaction to the direct or indirect acceptance of solutions to our national issue that destroy or ignore the basic rights of our island's Hellenism.

DENKTAS SENDS COMMONWEALTH MESSAGE ON KIPRIANOU

TA091049 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 9 Mar 82

[Text] In a message he sent to the British Commonwealth, President Rauf Denktas has said that Greek Cypriot leader Spiros Kiprianou did not have the right to speak on behalf of Cyprus.

Denktas issued the message in reply to a letter sent by Kiprianou to the Commonwealth calling for more effective support for Cyprus, which he portrayed as the victim of an invasion, and reminding the Commonwealth of its commitments toward Cyprus.

The message by Denktas adds that the Greek Cypriot administration is trying illegally to act as the only government in Cyprus, leading the solution of the Cyprus problem further into a deadlock. Recalling the visit by Greek Prime Minister Papandreou to Cyprus, the message says this visit has only strengthened this stand by the Greek Cypriot side. Noting that the archaic "megalo" idea of the Greek Cypriots, with which they were trying to solve the Cyprus issue, was only making the solution of the problem more difficult, the message says the Commonwealth, which is based on the equality of its members, should concede the fact that the Greek Cypriot community and its leaders alone cannot represent the state of Cyprus composed of two equal communities.

ULUSU RETURNS FROM IRAN-IRAQ PEACE MISSION

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that a new peace plan has been submitted to Iran and Iraq in a bid to end the war, which is threatening regional peace, as soon as possible. Ulusu, who represented Turkey at the meeting of the Islamic conference goodwill committee, which is working to put an end to the Iran-Iraq war, has returned to Ankara. In a statement at Esenboga Airport today, Ulusu said that compared with previous rounds, this time the committee's work resulted in more optimism.

Saying that it was observed that Iran and Iraq should agree on a political solution to the problem, the prime minister said that would enhance the work of the committee. Ulusu added that Turkey, which wants an end to the war between two friendly and neighborly countries, will continue to make substantial contributions to the committee.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE DEFICIT SAID OVERCOME IN 1981

[Text] Eskisehir, 9 Mar (AA) -- Finance Minister Kaya Erdem said Turkey's recurring problem of foreign exchange shortage had been overcome in 1981. Addressing a conference of the Eskisehir Chamber of Commerce and Industy, Erdem said close to 90 billion TL of export credit had been extended at favorable rates, which had become possible through the government's austerity program.

The minister admitted growing unemployment, inadequate investment and low rate of increase in production were real problems, but added it was not possible to solve everything within a short time. Turkey suffered from a shortage, not of foreign exchange, but of easy money at present, Erdem commented.

ASSEMBLY DEBATES JERUSALEM MEETING, FRG RELATIONS

TA090840 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 0820 GMT 9 Feb 82

[Text] Ankara, 9 March (AA) -- Member of the Conslultative Assembly Aydin Tug called for a reconsideration of the decision of the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly's political committee to hold its next meeting in Al-Quds (Jerusalem). Taking the floor during Monday's plenary session, Tug said a committee meeting in Al-Quds would violate resolutions adopted by the UN and the council itself, for it would imply recognition of Israeli occupation of Al-Quds.

Member Besir Hamitogullari referred to recent press reports about mounting hostility toward Turkish citizens in Federal Germany, warning it would affect 1.5 million Turks living there. Referring to press reports about a German consular officer in Istanbul voicing insults about Turkish people, Hamitogullari called for the withdrawal of those responsible and for appropriate action by the Turkish Foreign Ministry.

IRISH REPUBLIC

HAUGHEY ELECTED NEW IRISH PRIME MINISTER

LD092340 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1730 GMT 9 Mar 82

[Chris Parkin, PA staff reporter in Dublin]

[Excerpts] Mr Charles Haughey, the most controversial political figure in the Irish Republic, today regained control of the Dublin government -- eight months after losing the job to Dr Garret FitzGerald.

He was elected premier by Ireland's "hung" parliament thrown up by last month's inconclusive general election after weeks of speculation about Dr FitzGerald's chances of hanging on to power. Mr Haughey was returned to his old post with a surprisingly comfortable majority, 86 votes to 79, in a division not long after 4 PM.

But almost an hour earlier, it was clear that the Fianna Fail opposition leader was on his way back with the decision of three members of the previously non-aligned Sinn Fein, the workers party, to swing their support behind him. His success today is sure to be regarded with some misgivings in the United Kingdom, particularly in Northern Ireland. The British Government had preferred Dr FitzGerald's more conciliatory tone on Ulster.

The new premier will be making an early trans-Atlantic trip. Dr FitzGerald had been invited to Washington by President Reagan for St Patrick's day next week and Mr Haughey will now get the chance to take up that offer.

Soon after being confirmed as prime minister Mr Haughey left the Dail to receive his seal of office from Irish President Dr Patrick Hillery.

The government appointments announced by Mr Haughey tonight are:

Finance Minister	Mr Ray MacSharry
Agriculture	Mr Brian Lenihan
Trade & Commerce	Mr Des O'Malley
Foreign Affairs	Mr Gerry Collins
Labour	Mr Gene Fitzgerald
Transport	Mr John Wilson
Education	Dr Martin O'Donoghue

COLONEL AL-QADHDHAFI ARRIVES FOR 3-DAY VISIT

AU102047 [Editorial Report] Vienna Domestic Television Service in German at 1830 GMT on 10 March carries a filmed report on Libyan leader Al-Qadhdhafi's visit to Austria. The announcer states that shortly after 1530 the special Libyan plane -- a Boeing 707 -- landed at Vienna's Schwechat Airport. Al-Qadhdhafi; in uniform, one of his six sons and his only wife, as the announcer notes, appear on the gangway. Colonel al-Qadhdhafi came with a strong delegation, 120 men altogether including several ministers, the announcer says. Chancellor Kreisky and his wife Vera welcome the guest, and Foreign Minister Pahr, who the announcer says is scheduled to travel to Washington over the weekend to give an account of the visit there, Trade Minister Staribacher and Interior Minister Lanc are also present, as well as Libyan ambassador to Vienna, Abu Bakr Ahmad Shama.

Libyans living in Austria are heard and seen loudly greeting Al-Qadhdhafi's entourage, and Colonel al-Qadhdhafi greets his compatriots. Chancellor Kreisky then accompanies his guest to an automobile. Al-Qadhdhafi briefly remarks, speaking in English: "I am very glad to be here in Austria." The announcer says that 134 journalists from all parts of the world have come to Vienna especially to cover Al-Qadhdhafi's visit and that the police presence is greater than ever. Both Libyans and Austrians, in uniform and civilian clothes, are shown guarding Colonel al-Qadhdhafi.

From the airport, Al-Qadhdhafi is reported proceeding to the Imperial Hotel, and shortly afterwards the first round of talks with Chancellor Kreisky begins at his Ballhaus Platz office.

Crowds of people are seen thronging the halls of the Chancellery. At the Chancellery, Colonel al-Qadhdhafi is shown shaking hands with Kreisky, first with his right and then his left hand, and the announcer points to Al-Qadhdhafi's brilliant smile. Al-Qadhdhafi and Kreisky are then seen leaving the hall for their first talk behind closed doors.

At the Chancellery, evidently after the talks, Al-Qadhdhafi, Kreisky and an unidentified interpreter are seen facing journalists, and Kreisky says: "I think I am authorized to say this much, that we conducted a very calm, very constructive and -- I would like to add and underscore -- a very friendly talk. We have elucidated the world situation from various angles and we are aware of the dangerousness of the situation, and believe, however, that the small states have an assignment at this time, that the smaller states have the task of coming out in favor of preserving peace."

Subsequently, the announcer notes that this was Kreisky's first statement after his talks with Al-Qadhdhafi, and adds that the visit is still controversial in Austria. Thus, for example, Slazburg Provincial Governor Wilfried Haslauer, an Austrian People's Party figure, will not attend the banquet to be given for Al-Qadhdhafi at Klessheim Castle on Friday, and the People's Party Youth Organization in Graz has called for a protest march against the visit, the announcer says.

Comments on Talks

[Text] Shortly after his arrival at Vienna's Schwechat Airport, Al-Qadhdhafi was received by Dr Kreisky at the Federal Chancellery.

[Begin Kreisky recording] Ladies and Gentlemen, very long and thorough talks about many problems of world politics took place. You cannot expect me to reproduce for you the contents of this talk. But I think I am authorized to say this much, that we conducted a very calm, a very constructive and -- I would like to add and underscore -- a very friendly talk.

Certainly we cherish different views on decisive questions. There was no need to discuss them because we did that a long time ago. We were much more concerned with working out those things with respect to which we think we can find a line which we jointly uphold. [end recording]

[Begin Al-Qadhdhafi recording, in Arabic with German translation] I do not have much to say. Chancellor Kreisky has said most of it. I can only say that I am relieved as a result of this contructive talk which I conducted with Mr Chancellor Kreisky. I am also relieved that I find someone who does all he can for world peace. [end recording]

Pahr Meets Libyan Counterpart

[Antonia Rados interview with Austrian Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr in Vienna on 10 March -- recorded]

[Text] While Chancellor Kreisky and Colonel al-Qadhdafi faced the press, Austrian Foreign Minister Pahr was still in conference with his Libyan counterpart, Al-Ubaydi. The foreign minister subsequently stated about this round of talks:

[Question] Were topics such as terrorism and the relations between Libya and the United States also discussed during these talks?

[Answer] Naturally, yes; these problems were even treated in great detail, that is the relations between Libya and the United States, but naturally also the problems of terrorism and the charge that is being leveled against Libya of being an accessory to this terrorism.

[Question] Does this imply that this reproach against Libya of being an accessory to terrorism could be refuted in such a conversation?

[Answer] My counterpart emphatically refuted this charge.

[Question] Mr Minister, you will travel to Washington over the weekend in order to meet, among other things, with representatives of the State Department. Will Al-Qadhdafi's visit and the talks here also be discussed there?

[Answer] If is self-evident that an event such as Al-Qadhdafi's visit to Austria will also be mentioned during the talks which I will conduct in Washington.

[Question] But the interest in talks about this visit to Vienna originated from the United States?

[Answer] Interest has been expressed on the part of the United States, but naturally I also want to meet with representatives of the State Department on the occasion of my visit to Washington.

Kreisky Admits Differences

AU110949 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0600 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Roland Machatschke report on talks between Chancellor Kreisky and Libyan revolutionary leader Al-Qadhdhafi, and Foreign Minister Pahr and his Libyan counterpart Al-Ubaydi on 10 March in Vienna -- with recorded portions]

[Excerpts] Peace and detente were the topics of the first [2-hour] working talks held last night at the Chancellery between Chancellor Kreisky and his Libyan guest. In a subsequent brief statement, Kreisky did not conceal the fact that there have been differences of opinion with Colonel al-Qadhdhafi regarding some issues.

[Begin Kreisky recording] We have discussed the world situation from various angles, and we are aware of the danger of the situation, but we believe that in such times the small countries have the task of advocating the preservation of peace. Certainly we hold different views on some decisive questions, but there was no need to discuss them because we already did so a long time ago. We were much more concerned with working out things in which we think we can find a line that we jointly uphold. [end recording]

Al-Qadhdhafi gave a reply along similar lines -- he lauded Kreisky as a politician who was doing everything for world peace and wanted to save the world from a catastrophe. For Al-Qadhdhafi, striving for world peace is the common starting point of his talks with Kreisky. Classifying his country among the group of neutrals, he declared that neutral countries such as Libya and Austria could play a role in detente and world peace.

Thus a rather moderate Colonel al-Qadhdhafi presented himself last night in Vienna, without the verbal muscle-flexing for which he is known. Half an hour longer than the Kreisky-Al-Qadhdhafi talk was the talk between the two foreign ministers, in which obviously no questions were excluded, as Foreign Minister Pahr declared after the talks.

[Begin Pahr recording] We actually talked about all essential problems. We discussed the policy pursued by Libya, Libya's relations with the various groups of states, and we naturally also talked about the Middle East problem as well as the East-West question and the North-South problem.

[Question] Were such delicate topics touched on as, for example, Libya's relations with the United States, or Libya's attitude toward terrorism?

[Answer] Yes, we talked very extensively about both topics. We discussed in great detail Libya's relations with the United States, and we also talked about the charge that Libya supports terrorism.

[Question] Mr Minister, do you — after this talk -- have the impression that Libya will try to get out of its kind of isolation with in the international community of nations, that this visit to Austria perhaps also serves this purpose?

[Answer] I am even convinced of this. Libya obviously does take an interest in underscoring that it is a genuinely nonaligned country, an interest in underscoring that it does not want to be classed with any bloc, and an interest in intensifying its relations with the West. [end recording]

The interest of foreign governments in Al-Qadhdhafi's visit to Vienna seems to be just as keen as that of foreign journalists. In the course of a long-planned visit to Washington in connection with the Kampuchea Conference, of which he is chairman, Foreign Minister Pahr will meet Reagan's Security Adviser Clark this coming weekend, and will also have talks at the State Department.

[Begin Pahr recording] This weekend I am going to be in Washington, and there I will meet with State Department representatives, and it goes without saying that on this occasion I will also speak about the visit that has taken place here in Vienna.

[Question] Did the U.S. State Department express an interest in such a talk with you?

[Answer] The State Department did express an interest in talking with me. [end recording]

Press Comments

AU101334 [Editorial Report] All Vienna papers in German on 10 March give prominence to reports on the forthcoming visit to Austria of Libya's revolution leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi.

Most papers -- including DIE PRESSE on page 1 -- highlight a statement by People's Party Chairman Alois Mock that it is "incompatible with the concept of neutrality that the 'international quarantine' imposed on Libya has been broken" and that "Austria is thus interfering in international conflict."

In a 100-word front-page commentary, KURIER says Colonel al-Qadhdhafi is certainly not "the most dangerous man in the world" as he is depicted by the Reagan administration which is "thinking in Hollywood terms." However, he certainly is an international trouble-maker from whom civilized countries have disassociated themselves. "And now Austria, partly for economic reasons, acts as if Al-Qadhdhafi were quite a normal partner. No, it is not Austria that is acting that way, but Kreisky. For, in this matter the chancellor stands all alone -- probably more alone than ever before."

In a brief commentary on page 1, DIE PRESSE depicts the visit as another singlehanded action by Austria: "The neutral republic at the periphery of the free world is making the Libyan socially presentable. Chancellor Kreisky has indicated that the domestic economy would have suffered what he described as immeasurable damage had Al-Qadhdhafi been asked not to come to Austria. It remains to be seen whether, beyond commercial considerations, the visit will not result in damage to Austria's image."

In a 600-word commentary by Heinz Nussbaumer, "Why Kreisky Invited Al-Qadhdhafi," carried by KURIER on page 3, the author says that in the final phase of his era Chancellor Bruno Kreisky has lost any regard for domestic and international public opinion and for what is considered "political morality" in the West. And that he feels responsible only to his own conscience, thus adopting a position which is shared only by a tiny fraction of his own followers. "Kreisky sees the Middle East as increasingly becoming a world-threatening playground of the superpowers, where particularly Reagan's America could drive many Arab leaders into the arms of the Soviets. And Kreisky fears that a psychically unstable man such as Al-Qadhdhafi -- following the example of his idol Nasir or of Fidel Castro -- might eventually become totally dependent on Moscow through complete Western isolation, a development that could entail devastating consequences not only for Europe, owing to Libya's oil surplus, sparce population and strategic position.

"There are quite a few indications that Al-Qadhdafi himself has sent out quiet calls for help to West European governments to help him out of his difficult position -- difficult in foreign politics and allegedly also in his own country, where a pro-Soviet clique is rejoicing over any new war of words between Al-Qadhdhafi and the United States.

"Thus the chancellor is obviously convinced that, by inviting Al-Qadhdhafi, he is quietly rendering a good service to many -- thankless, but necessary. But, at the beginning of his 13th year in office, he obviously regards it as superfluous or pointless to give any credible explanation for his foreign political escapade.

"Instead, he is putting off a perplexed public with marginal arguments. This realization is possibly graver than the actual visit to Austria of the Libyan Al-Qadhdhafi because within the framework of its regular visiting diplomacy, official Austria has been compelled to shake hands with greater crooks and murderers than the Libyan desert warrior Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi," Nussbaumer writes in conclusion.

In a portrait of Al-Qadhdhafi, ARBEITER-ZEITUNG on page 3 says he is probably "no more" 'terroristic' than other states in this region, and not more dictatorial than other Arab states which also do not have a multiparty system." But his "eccentric attitude" and his "anachronistic attempts" to establish "Arab unity" with various Arab countries have made him a particularly suitable projection figure for politicians such as Reagan, a "Third World bogey man."

Under the headline "The 'Most Dangerous' Man Coming To Visit," the Communist VOLKSSTIMME on page 4 analyzes what it calls "U.S. fairy tales about Libya and Al-Qadhdhafi," dreamed up by Reagan's "enterprising publicity managers" to divert attention from the domestic plight in the United States and to "give Reagan the image of a hero persecuted by evil men." What Reagan actually cannot forgive Al-Qadhdhafi for is the fact that the power of monopolies has been broken in his country and that Libya is pursuing a -- sometimes rather arbitrary but certainly clear-cut -- antiimperialist policy, VOLKSSTIMME says.

Linz Visit Canceled

AU111126 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Austria -- Libyan revolution leader Al-Qadhdhafi has called off his visit to Linz and Salzburg scheduled for tomorrow and the day after tomorrow. Instead, the Libyan heavy industry minister will go to Linz for talks with representatives of the Voest-Alpine Corporation. Al-Qadhdhafi said he had called off the scheduled Linz and Salzburg visits because he wants to remain in Vienna. Tomorrow he will visit Vienna's Islamic Center. No further items on his program are known thus far. This morning the Libyan revolution leader visited Parliament and on this occasion had a talk with Nationalrat Chairman Benya. The next item on his program was a visit to the Vienna City Hall where he entered his name in the golden book of the city. At noon Al-Qadhdhafi will be the guest of Chancellor Kreisky at a luncheon. Later in the afternoon, he will meet with Chancellor Kreisky for a second talk.

LIBYANS LINK INDUSTRIAL IMPORTS WITH OIL EXPORTS

AU111245 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1157 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Studio announcer telephone talk with reporter Herbert Hutar on talks of the Austrian-Libyan Joint Commission at the Vienna Trade Ministry]

[Summary] [Question] What was the outcome of today's talks at the Trade Ministry?

[Answer] "Well, the outcome was somewhat unexpected considering that the talks are being held with a rich oil country -- namely, the following: If Austria wants to obtain additional orders, orders for industrial products, from the oil country Libya, then we must buy more oil from the Libyans than we have done in the past." The reason is that Libya earned a great deal less from its oil sales in 1981 than it did in 1980 and Libya's financial situation is generally regarded as strained. It seems that the Libyans now no longer want to buy industrial plants for hard currency but only in exchange for additional oil deliveries.

[Question] Are there any indications as to how Austria will react?

[Answer] "Trade Minister Staribacher has announced that he will immediately contact Ludwig Bauer, director general of the Austrian Oil Administration, regarding the conclusion of such agreements." In 1982, Austria will import half a million tons of Libyan oil, a quantity that has been regarded as almost too high in view of the oil glut and the high price of Libyan oil.

[Question] In other words, we have accepted the demands of the Libyans?

[Answer] "As far as could be gathered from the words of Minister Staribacher, to a certain extent surely, yes."

GENSCHER STRESSES IMPORTANCE OF U.S. RELATIONS

LD101600 Hamburg DPA in German 1455 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Bonn, 10 Mar (DPA) -- Today the Federal Cabinet dealt with the results of the talks by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in the United States. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker said that during the cabinet meeting Genscher stressed the importance of German-American relations for the Western alliance. In connection with the hope expressed by Genscher that President Reagan will visit Berlin during his stay in Bonn for the NATO summit, Becker said that any visit to Berlin by an American President has the Federal Government's "great approval."

At the cabinet meeting, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt stressed as "particularly important" a poll held in the United States and six West European countries by the Gallup Public Opinion Research Institute which showed that Germany topped the list of countries with regard to the desire for friendly relations and alliance/cooperation with the United States.

Paper Views U.S. Visit

DW101023 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 10 Mar 82 p 4

[Article signed A.: "Difficult Consultations With a World Power"]

[Text] The idea Foreign Minister Genscher submitted to all those he spoke with during his Washington visit is not quite new but still worth considering: The so-called process of consultations between the governments of the Atlantic alliance must be improved. A major part of the annoyance and irritation which has built up in recent months on both sides of the Atlantic is attributable simply to a lacking knowledge of facts or to misunderstandings.

In this respect there are convincing examples above all in German-American relations. The argument, for instance, which is still being advanced in the Federal Republic, that through nuclear counterarmament the United States wants to confine a possible military conflict with the Soviet Union to Europe is sheer nonsense. Equally unfounded are the figures you can hear in the U.S. Congress about the German participation in the construction of the gas pipeline from Siberia or the volume of German trade with the East. The lack of information on both sides is considerable. However, it is doubtful whether this state of affairs can be corrected by more consultations among the NATO governments. The comparison made by Genscher with the informal mechanism of political cooperation among the 10 EC governments is problematic. After all, the community does have a certain political executive mechanism that NATO does not. In addition, the tensions between the EC states cannot be compared to the natural contrasting interests between Europe and the United States.

We will have to wait and see, therefore, how Washington reacts to Genscher's proposal. Up until now America has not actually allowed itself to be included in any institutionalized political process of consultations with its European allies. As a world power the United States has solid reasons for this and they will not disappear over night.

'Crisis in Alliance'

DW101047 Duesseldorf HANDELSBLATT in German 10 Mar 82 p 2

[Correspondent J. Eckhardt dispatch: "Collected Schedules"]

[Text] Washington -- A great deal of traveling is being done these days across the Atlantic and the Pacific.

Americans are going to Japan. Japanese representatives are among the permanent guests in Brussels; and Europeans, Japanese, and Americans are meeting in Florida. Following the Federal economics minister, the foreign minister has now had talks in Washington. He will be able to continue his discussions in Bonn next Monday when a U.S. Government delegation led by Under Secretary James Buckley passes through on its European tour.

The unrestrained travel zeal of the politicians serves a higher cause. There is a crisis in the alliance of the Western economic powers. Through their contradictory budget and monetary policies, the Americans are ruining their own as well as the rest of the national economies. The Japanese cause bad blood by their aggressive export policy, and the Europeans -- particularly the Germans -- upset the White House by an Ostpolitik that is too soft.

The problems are serious and there is a long list of them. If tete-a-tetes would help make the accumulated mountain smaller, politicians would have to travel even more. In truth, however, international travel diplomacy is hardly concerned with substantial and absolutely necessary discussions. Interpretations rather than clear viewpoints are presented, such as that by Genscher's entourage about the "intensification of the trans-Atlantic concertedness." The motto is: Confer, see and be seen. Politicians occasionally talk to reporters, and Genscher's efforts to court the U.S. press are impressive. Less is done about the substance of the political talks. How else can it be explained that during a nearly 1-hour conference between Genscher and U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger, the topics of credits to Poland and the pipeline deal were discussed only marginally and in general phrases? As we know from the press, Weinberger, a protagonist of the rightwing in the Reagan administration, is a harsh opponent of this gas deal. He also wants to declare the Poles bankrupt, which would halt the flow of Western credits to the East. Weinberger's position is clear and it is evident where he stands regarding the power struggle within the U.S. Government. In this struggle he hopes to prevail over pro-European Secretary of State Haig and to exert influence on Reagan's policy via the National Security Council.

In personal talks with foreign politicians, Weinberger is polite, courteous and without a personal position. Why? In such a case his position would be that of the government. However, since the government does not have any position concerning the gas pipeline issue but merely draws a balance between squabblers Haig and Weinberger, the secretary of defense exercises reserve as a good soldier lest he anticipate his President. Once those directly concerned have departed, what inevitably follows is a "press breakfast" at which it is not the press, but political opponents who are breakfasted.

Lukewarm Reception

[Herbert Kremp commentary: "The Leadership Task"]

[Text] Genscher's behavior in the United States warrants more attention than the actual reason for the visit. The foreign minister was received without any enthusiasm and stood there like a figure by [the sculptor] Barlach in bad weather facing a public which has begun to mistrust Bonn. He used the situation, however, to represent himself as a guarantor of German policy toward the West who will certainly survive the disintegration of this government.

So the visit was a demonstration. The Americans were supposed to notice whom they could hold on to. Genscher plays two roles: He is the foreign minister of the current government and the "shadow foreign minister" of the alternative. This kind of involvement spells commitment. Genscher is free of the old Ostpolitik smell which sticks to the clothes of the coalition partner. He can credibly say that he has never fallen for illusions and that he has always given priority to German-American relations in every moment of his official visit.

The statement that "common positions" ought to be pointed out in the future and there should be more meetings for this purpose than before shows, together with the complaint about the American public's unclear image of Germany, the state of the crisis. Relations with the United States have been neglected and strained through pompous lecturing, and the government parties damage them intentionally almost daily. The other side reacts correspondingly.

In view of this situation, the question is justified as to whether the introduction of new conference cycles can eliminate the damage which has already occurred. Prior to his visit Genscher pointed out in personal talks that the "fight for opinions" must now be taken up in Germany. That cannot be contradicted. The Federal Government as a whole does not defend the Western alliance sufficiently enough, while sections of the government parties are fighting it. Reestablishing the ideal consensus is the most urgent leadership task.

U.S. Softens on Pipeline

DW101223 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 10 Mar 82 p 3

[Article signed MOE: "Genscher's Success"]

[Text] Bonn -- If the first news about the Federal foreign minister's 48-hour-race across the U.S. capital city are correct, the effort has been worthwhile not only for Hans-Dietrich Genscher, but also for the energy-dependent West Europeans.

Being the last man in a European team relay which Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff had started across the United States recently, Genscher now apparently has brought with him a narrow but sufficient success: The gas-pipe deal with the Soviet Union can be implemented. In Bonn and Paris, but also in Austria, Italy, Belgium and The Netherlands and certainly also in Switzerland, it will be noted with satisfaction that the U.S. administration under Ronald Reagan apparently is capable of listening to reason.

According to information by U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig the United States will not give up its objections to this large barter deal with the Soviet Union, but it will put up with the fact that the West Europeans will observe signed treaties, even though Moscow is playing a dubious role in Poland.

As for Haig, he has accepted that regarding this project "vital affairs of the future East-West relationship" are at stake which should not be included in the current discussion about Poland's future. Being a professional military man, Haig naturally does not fail to see the strategic problems connected with the gas pipeline from Siberia to West Europe. But he also knows equally well that the gas will not start flowing before 1986, that the United States does not have to offer any real alternative and that after 4 years the world will be entirely different anyway.

It is not yet quite clear whether the toleration of the pipeline construction also guarantees the supply of U.S. technology by granting the necessary licences, but it is unlikely that by his refusal Reagan will spoil his entree to the Bonn NATO summit.

BUNDESTAG DEPUTY SUGGESTS ADDRESS BY REAGAN

LD101804 Hamburg DPA in German 1743 GMT 10 Feb 82

[Text] Bonn, 10 Mar (DPA) -- FDP Bundestag Deputy Juergen Moellemann proposed in the relevant Bundestag committees on Wednesday that the Bundestag should come together for a special meeting during the NATO conference on 10 June in Bonn to hear a speech from U.S. President Ronald Reagan. Moellemann said that the proposal is now being discussed in the parliamentary groups. He further spoke in support of a declaration by all parties in favour of NATO and the abandonment of its declaration by the CDU/CSU.

MITTERRAND: NO RAPID RESULTS FROM ISRAELI VISIT

[Jacques Amalric dispatch: "French President: I Would Be Very Stupid or Very Naive To Expect Rapid Results"]

[Excerpt] Tel Aviv -- Before leaving Israel Mr Mitterrand spoke late Friday morning [5 March] with the journalists who had accompanied him and assessed his visit. That assessment did not differ fundamentally from the one he had made the previous day in the press conference which he gave with [Israeli Prime Minister] Begin. But the president of the republic perhaps placed more emphasis on the fundamental contradiction of the Israeli-Arab conflict and revealed some degree of disappointment.

"There cannot be satisfaction or dissatisfaction at the end of this trip," he stated in particular. "I simply reaffirmed my country's position. The only new fact, but it is significant, is that I said the same thing in the Knesset as I said in Algiers and in Saudi Arabia. That is a political action. Believe me, it is rather a delicate matter to discuss the Palestinians in the Knesset. But it is an equally delicate matter when I am in Algiers and am discussing the Israelis."

The president, who said he was "sure of having been heeded by the Israeli people," added: "No people can think that I adapted what I said to the circumstances. I expressed France's position. It will take a long time to find out whether that had an influence. I would be very stupid or very naive to expect rapid results, and that is not the case. The only attainable objective," he also said, "is to make France's position known everywhere. That has been attained."

Reaffirming that he did not want to be either a mediator on an arbiter, Mr Mitterrand admitted that he has seen in the Fahd Plan, defeated at the Fes Arab Conference, "a proferred hand which it would have been better to accept." But, he said, we can only wait for discussion to be opened among the protagonists if they want discussions. "Nobody can do it for them." Trying to define the historical dimensions of the conflict, he added: "We are not facing contradictory positions but are in a contradictory situation. History has passed this way. Then things were crystallized, the molten river set into hard metal. My hope is that the Jews can continue to make this land, which they have treated admirably, flourish. A new diaspora would be a disaster."

In addition Mr Mitterrand gave a number of details on the content of his discussions with Mr Begin: The prime minister did not suggest that the withdrawal from Sinai might be questioned and did not show particular anxiety about Egypt's evolution following that withdrawal; however, he showed particular concern for the fate of the Jews in the USSR and Syria. Contrary to what the head of state thought, Mr Begin did not place excessive emphasis on French-Iraqi nuclear cooperation. May that have been because the Israelis are interested in developing cooperation with France in the civilian sphere? But that is a subject on which both sides are still very reticent at present.

PLO 'Disappointed'

[Text] PLO representative in Paris Ibrahim Sus has made the following statement to us: "We had hoped that President Mitterrand would speak to the Israelis the language of reality and truth."

"We hoped that he would remind them that the Palestinian people exist, that they have their legitimate national rights which can no longer be disregarded and that their rights involve, first and foremost, the setting up of a sovereign state on their national territory, that the PLO does not represent solely the fighting wing but the entire Palestinian people and that it is struggling to realize the whole of their aspirations: Every Palestinian, wherever he is, has the right to return to his fatherland.

"We had hoped that the president would recall the sufferings of the Palestinian people -- the hostages of Israeli military occupation, uprooted and living in exile since 1948.

"We had believed that the language President Mitterrand would use would follow entirely the statements made by French leaders since 10 May, since France must not speak a double language, and that French diplomacy does not wish to tell the Arabs what they wish to hear and yet speak differently to the Israelis.

"It is a disappointment."

LE MONDE Views Visit

[Editorial: "From 'Never' to 'Yes, But....'"]

[Text] Being based on a long-term investment, Mr Mitterrand's visit to Israel could not satisfy everyone at the same time; on the contrary, it stood a much better chance of causing dissatisfaction. In any case, Mr Begin's virulent remarks have shown that, despite all Mr Mitterrand's skillful circumlocutions, the references to the PLO and to a Palestinian state are still too repellent to Israel to cause no antagonism.

As he was the first to admit, Mr Mitterrand could no longer evade the Arabs' criticisms and sometimes their obloquy. Their reactions, however, reveal more nuances than are immediately apparent. The charges of "fence-sitting" and "empty words" cover a variety of reactions ranging from "never" to "yes, but...." which nevertheless do not dismiss France's "pro-Arab" policy as dead and buried.

Some of these reactions reveal some rhetorical skill: The PLO rails against the fact that Mr Mitterrand failed to pay tribute to the "Palestinian martyrs," but must surely suspect that the Knesset was not the best forum in which to do so and that the president of the republic did not visit Israel in order to slam doors.

Similarly, it is in rather bad taste to offer the lure of "favorable contracts, the wealth and oil of the Arab world," as some of the Gulf press has done, and to threaten France with economic sanctions. This appeal to "mercantilism," for which Mr Mitterrand reproached his predecessor, is even less likely to be heeded since, as the FINANCIAL TIMES pointed out recently, France's relations with the principal Arab countries have stood up very well to the reservations and opposition prompted by this visit: Cooperation does not seem to have been jeopardized with Egypt, which people tend rather too much to forget, with Iraq, with Saudi Arabia or with Algeria.

It might be different with some other Gulf countries, but even so, the curses heard from the press should not be confused with the much more cautious, and sometimes entirely silent, attitude of several governments. Indeed, if the two points on which Mr Mitterrand has moved toward the Israeli theses conflict with the traditional Arab outlook, they reflect some sensible observations which the Arab governments themselves would do well to bear in mind. The first -- the approval of Camp David -- is in no way shocking, since Egypt will recover all its territories lost in 1967 and since several Arab states, or indeed community of the states as a whole, are preparing to give Mr Mubarak a better reception.

And though the PLO balks at the idea of having to recognize Israel's existence, its leaders are well aware that they will have to make this gesture when negotiation time comes. Do not some of them admit -- albeit only in private -- that their organization's famous charter, preaching Israel's elimination, is "obsolete"?

Furthermore, though the prospect of a visit to Paris by Mr 'Arafat is now dismissed by both sides as "inopportune," Mr Mitterrand was at pains to let it be known that he will visit Jordan "within the next 3 months." The visit to Jerusalem should be only a step in a Middle East policy in which the Arab issue will now have to be "revived."

PCF BEIJING VISIT DEEMED SUCCESSFUL BY GREMETZ

[Text] After a 15-year-long quarrel, relations between the French and Chinese Communist Parties have almost normalized. The French Communist Party delegation landed at Roissy Airport this morning after a 10-day visit to China. Maxime Gremetz, the Communist Party official in charge of international relations, stated that he was satisfied with his stay in Beijing and particularly with the 13 hours of talks he had with Chinese leaders. In short, there is a thaw in relations, as Mr Gremetz explained:

[Begin recording] What sticks in my mind about these 13 hours of talks — and I stress that we talked for 13 hours — is that we discussed all issues. There were no taboo subjects: We discussed all issues including those which cause the most problems between us. In our discussions we took the time and trouble to listen to one another. But I stress the basic fact that it is this concept of relations, on which we are in agreement with the Chinese Communist Party, which allows us to consider that we have our differences but that apart from these differences and taking them into account we can reestablish relations and can cooperate with one another. [end recording]

So, there is progress toward reestablishing official relations between the French and Chinese Communist Parties. Moreover, another sure sign, according to Maxime Gremetz, is the invitation to Georges Marchais to visit Beijing, an invitation which the French Communist Party has already accepted.

SPOKESMAN AFFIRMS PATASSE TO RECEIVE ASYLUM

NC101344 Paris AFP in English 1335 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 10 Mar (AFP) -- France will respect the right of asylum over Centrafrican opposition leader Ange Patasse, in refuge at the French Embassy in Bangui, presidential Chief of Staff Pierre Beregovoy said today. The head of President Francois Mitterrand's office was speaking after a meeting today of the French cabinet.

Replying to a question, Mr Beregovoy said France had "the best of relations" with its former colony and that Mr Mitterrand had "good relations" with its head of state, General Andre Kolingba.

Earlier today, the French Foreign Ministry denied a report by Centrafrican radio that the authorities yesterday gave France 48 hours to hand over Mr Patasse, who took refuge in the embassy on Saturday. A spokesman said the General Kolingba's military regime had made no such ultimatum.

POLICE UNCOVER TERRORIST PLAN TO ATTACK U.S. BASE

AU100859 Rome ANSA in English 0808 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Text] Pisa, 10 Mar (ANSA) -- Italian police have uncovered terrorist plans to attack the U.S. military base at Camp Darby, just a few miles from Pisa. The Red Brigades urban guerrilla organization planned to assault the camp with light arms and land-to-land missiles after it (?wound) up the Dozier affair.

The brigades had kidnapped American General James Lee Dozier, deputy commander of NATO land forces in southern Europe, from his Verona apartment on December 13, 1981. The general was freed by police on January 28 in a lightning raid on the Padua apartment where he was being held. It was this successful rescue attempt that led to the immediate capture of 5 brigadists guarding him and the later arrests of numerous members of the extreme leftwing organization.

It was the confession of one of Dozier's guards, Giovanni Ciucci, which tipped police off to the plans to attack Camp Darby. On the basis of information received from Ciucci, police found a "BR" base in the town of Tirrenia which lies just a few miles from the American Army base, and arrested a score of persons implicated in the planned assault.

Capturé Red Brigades Official

AU101945 Rome ANSA in English 1935 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Text] Naples, 10 Mar (ANSA) -- Another blow was delivered to Italian terrorism with the arrest last night of Mauro Acanfora, the head of the Neapolitan section of the Red Brigades urban guerrilla organization. In announcing the arrest today, police said that Acanfora was netted during a vast antiterrorism sweep in Naples and that he has already begun to "sing."

The BR's Naples section is headed by Acanfora, a professor who is a close friend of the organization's ideologue, Giovanni Senzani (in jail), by Antonio Chiocchi and by Vittorio Bolognesi, and is believed responsible for the kidnapping last year of a Christian Democrat city official named Ciro Cirili who was later released upon payment of a ransom said to have been around $1,150,000. The same column is said to be responsible for the attack last month on the army barracks of Santa Maria Capua Vetere (a few kilometers outside of Naples) and the seizure of a large amount of arms.

Shortly after Acanfora's arrest, police discovered a terrorist hideout on the outskirts of Naples and recovered a part of the stolen weapons. Police were also said to have arrested two more terrorists today on the basis of revelations made by Acanfora.

Meanwhile, a Naples military tribunal found guilty of negligence 16 soldiers guarding the barracks at the time the terrorists made an attack on it and carried off light and heavy arms, including mortars and bazookas. Three other soldiers were acquitted of responsibility in that they were not on guard duty at the time. The court sentenced the 16 to prison terms of from ten months to two years and six months but all were given suspended sentences and will be released some time today.

NOVOYE VREMYA CONTINUES MOSCOW ATTACK ON PCI

PM101447 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 6 Mar 82 p 17

[Text] The latest issue of NOVOYE VREMYA appeared on the Moscow newsstands yesterday with a new polemical article directed against the PCI's stances (partly prereleased by TASS a few days ago, when L'UNITA issued an initial reply) -- an article constructed with the distorted method of reproducing excerpts and opinions from articles and statements by several communist parties.

But the main aim of this NOVOYE VREMYA article seems to be to emphasize the opinions expressed a few days ago by Beijing's RENMIN RIBAO in a commentary on the PCI-CPSU polemics. The Soviet weekly talks in terms of a sharing of stances between Italian and Chinese communists and stresses that "the very fact of such coincidence with the positions of RENMIN RIBAO, which openly sides with the imperialist forces against the USSR and international detente, should prompt the Italian communists to reflect."

It seems clear that this propagandist statement by NOVOYE VREMYA is consistent with the simplistic way in which Moscow often portrays China's political stances and with the method whereby anyone who thinks differently from the CPSU is a U.S. ally. Clearly, in view of this method it seems superfluous to point out that the Soviet media have not published a single line of the PCI's stances and they therefore cannot appreciate the lucidity on which the PCI's relations with the CCP -- as with any other party -- are based. In any case, it cannot be said that it is the custom of CPSU newspapers to elucidate interparty relations. Otherwise they would already probably have begun to reflect on the causes of the split and the conflict between the USSR and China -- a much more demanding task than labeling as the enemy's allies all those who think differently from the CPSU.

SINAI PEACEKEEPING FORCE SHIP LEAVES FOR MIDEAST

AU100909 Rome ANSA in English 0815 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Text] La Spezia, 10 Mar (ANSA) -- The first of three Italian Navy minesweepers to take part in the multinational peacekeeping force in the Sinai leaves this port today headed for the Middle East. The "Palma" has a crew of 25 men and before leaving the arsenal today will sail past all of the other ships docked at the base here. The departure ceremony will be watched by the commander of the Upper Tyrrhenian Sea, Admiral Vittorio Gioncada.

Opposition to Sinai Force

[Excerpt] Rome, 11 Mar (ANSA) -- A leading member of the Communist Party opposition in Rome and a government party M.P., Socialist Falco Accame, the former commander in chief of NATO naval forces in the Mediterranean, questioned the wisdom of Italy's participation in the multilateral peacekeeping force in the Sinai in separate statements on Wednesday.

The first of three Italian Navy minesweepers assigned to Sinai duty steamed out of the La Spezia harbor on Wednesday bound for Sharm ash-Shaykh where it will be joined by the other vessels for a mission oficially described as, "aiding in assuring free navigation through the Tiran Strait in agreement with the provisions of the peace treaty between Egypt and Israel."

Gian Carlo Pajetta, the head of the Italian Communist Party's international relations bureau, said that, "What has happened is serious because the Italian armed forces are committed in one of the areas most dangerous for world peace in an operation which meets with Arab concern and hostility." "From the constitutional point of view," the party spokesman added, "the decision seems to be illegal because it (?was) made without anyone knowing the basis for agreements on obligations not provided for in any document approved in parliament."

The former NATO naval commander, in his statement, called for speedy debate in the lower house defense committee on the duties the three Italian minesweepers will be expected to perform. The Socialist M.P. said that this debate should take place "to avoid creating false expectations. The extremely slow cruising speed of the minesweepers makes them unsuitable for patrol and even less so for pursuing other vessels if this should become necessary," Accame said, speaking from experience.

POPE JOHN PAUL PRAYS FOR PROTECTION OF POLAND

LD101622 Vatican City in English to Central and West Europe 1445 GMT 10 Mar 82

John Paul II then said: The church must also be first of all with those who are in need, those who are suffering, as many of my fellow countrymen are suffering because of the state of war and the situation created alongside this state. I am happy, he added, that the Polish bishops have found in this situation the light for themselves and for the nation in the teaching of the council. With the bishops, I express the conviction and I unfold it to you with all my heart, O Mother of My Country. This conviction is that by physical force alone, even the greatest, one cannot honestly resolve and in a lasting manner the problems of civil life, and also that it is indispensable, particularly in the present historic moment, that social understanding be based on truth, justice, freedom and love.

Our Lady of Jasna Gora, you know better than anyone else how many millions of Polish hearts desire this truth, justice, freedom and love. Accept the cry from these hearts and the words of the pastors which today I present to you with humility and trust. The forces of good must obtain victory in the country which for centuries has recognized you as its mother and queen.

CALVO-SOTELO REVIEWS FIRST YEAR IN OFFICE

PM081629 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 28 Feb 82 pp 5-6

[Unattributed report on 27 February interview granted to Spanish television by Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo: "There Will Be No Early Election"]

[Text] Madrid -- Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo was interviewed this evening before the cameras of Spanish television by Rosa Maria Mateo and Pedro Altares on the occasion of the first anniversary since he was approved by the Spanish Parliament as head of government. In summary, the prime minister's answers to the questions put to him were as follows:

Summary of a year: Some 12 difficult months have elapsed, I agree. They were not 12 lengthy months. Rarely have I had the impression of living as fast as this last year. If I had to sum up my impression in one work, it would be dedication, devotion. You are prime minister every day, every week, every month of the year. Politics requires everything from us, fills up everything and demands everything. Overwhelmed by responsbility? I have felt responsibility, even physically, more as a stimulus than as a burden, and I believe that I am not tired. I have succeeded in organizing my work quite well. This is the most succinct impression I can give of a year's stay in the Moncloa Palace.

February 23, Failed Coup, Should Not Be Repeated

February 23: I believe that such events cannot be repeated. I believe that there is no danger of a repetition. I also believe that we have lived the last 12 months -- and your question makes me believe that we are still living -- with an excessive, perhaps even obsessive, concern about 23 February. We recall 23 February as the date of a coup. We should recall it as the date of a failure, because 23 February was a failed coup.

I believe that during that night and the next every Spaniard learned to love the system we are giving ourselves more and to accept democracy more. The fact that we Spanish people now live in peace and in disagreement, without anybody having to live in prison or abroad because of his political ideas, is a very new development in our history. And all Spanish people know, or the vast majority of Spanish people know, that a coup would mean a turning back, a loss of all these values, a familiar loss. Nobobdy is prepared for that loss.

Strong Democratic System

Spanish democracy: Freedom, like all the problems of this world, is always a risk situation. I do not believe that Spanish democracy is a fragile democracy. I return to what I was saying earlier: On 23 February Spain demonstrated to the Spanish people, headed by the king, that our democratic system is a strong system, capable of withstanding a blow like that. I also believe that it does not rest with the government alone to ensure the consolidation of democracy. This is a task for everybody -- for the parties, the government, of course, the opposition, the trade unions, the economic and social forces and for citizens, even taken individually.

We all have a duty and some responsibility in the stage of making democracy. The government has its duty and I believe that it has performed it. I believe that over the last 12 months we have governed in normality, without curtailing freedoms and without resorting to emergency measures. I believe that we have restored to the Spanish people confidence in their institutions, in those institutions which we are giving ourselves. So I would not speak of a fragile democracy but of a democracy strengthened since the events of February last year.

Challenges for government: I am certain that nobody has given the government anything over this last year. We have had to cope with a series of simultaneous challenges: the challenge, of course, of the economic crisis; the challenge of setting up the autonomies; the challenge of the anxiety stemming from 23 February; the challenge of a new international policy, of Western and Atlantic policy. We have undoubtedly done this with difficulty, and we have done it with dialogues of open discussion in parliament with the opposition groups.

Coalition Government

I have always wished to impart responsibility to our actions, and it seems to me feasible and responsible to organize a coalition government following a general election. But it seems neither feasible nor responsible to organize one in the middle of the legislative term. Moreover, a coalition with the right would not have given us a year ago or 6 months ago the majority we lacked in the chamber. A coalition with the left would have been misunderstood by our voters. And insofar as it brought together the two largest parties in the chamber, with an enormous majority for them in both chambers (in the Congress and in the Senate), to that same extent the coalition could have meant a certain distortion of the dialectic characteristic of every democracy.

That is why I said a year ago -- and I repeated it when the offer was repeated -- that a coalition government did not seem to me advisable.

Even if the Union of the Democratic Center [UCD] had an absolute majority in the two chambers, the important laws would have to be laws consulted and even agreed on with the opposition, as the constitution itself was. The parliamentary arithmetic has caused the building of the new state to be effected among everybody and not by a group which secured a hegemonic position or a majority position. There are always laws -- now and for some time, until we complete the building of the new state -- requiring the support of the ruling party and of the opposition party.

No Early Election

Election: I believe that there will be no early election. In fact I believe that in the first years of a parliamentary system we should not have such frequent elections, that we should not hold elections every 2 years, not to mention municipal and regional elections.

I believe that if the constitution states that deputies are elected for a 4-year term, we must try to properly carry out our mandate to the fullest, and I believe that it will be possible to do so because the UCD dissidents have promised us their vote and I am counting on it: I have no reason to have any doubts about that vote. Naturally, if the situation changes, as I have said on occasions recently, and if some people's haste or other people's disagreement or hindrance systematically placed us in serious danger, I would have to change my mind. But for the time being I intend to complete the legislative term.

Rightward Swing: The UCD's rightward swing did not become a topic of conversation 3 or 4 months ago, when I was elected chairman; it was being discussed long before that. I believe that people have been talking about a rightward swing in the UCD ever since it was formed. It is an old story, which has never been proved.

During this period both the press and we politicians have been learning about freedom and democracy.

Both the press and we politicians have made the mistakes or blunders of the apprentice or the novice. This process is now over. We have now learned that democracy is a subject that is never learned completely. We have probably not yet completed this apprenticeship, but I must say that over the past year the press has earned my approval. In principle I have no substantial criticism to make against the press as a whole. I might have some specific criticisms to make of certain individual articles or publications, but I have no substantial criticisms.

Economic Situation and Employment

With regard to energy, which is one of the key problems of the Spanish economy and of any Western country's economy, we have an energy plan that we are faithfully implementing. It is now to be revised and it will be submitted to the Cortes to be debated once more, but the present plan approved by the Cortes is being implemented faithfully and has produced measurable results. We have reduced our dependence on oil to 60 percent [presumably of total energy requirements]. In 1979 it was about 70 percent. We are now less dependent on other countries: We have increased our coal consumption, especially in national coal. This accounts for about 20, 22-23 percent; a couple of years ago the figure was about 15 percent. We have increased our nuclear energy output and also our output of energy from natural gas.

With regard to employment, we have made an effort and have achieved the result of rallying to this effort trade unions, employers and the government itself, and the outcome of these painstaking negotiations has been what is called the National Agreement on Employment, which contains a number of measures designed to combat unemployment.

Opposition in Power

I do not know what kind of economic policy the opposition would pursue if it were in power. I hope it does not come to power. But from what I have heard and read I am not very sure that they themselves know what they would do. The economic crisis leaves little room for ideologies. The economic crisis marks out a narrow, difficult and long path, which is the one that we are pursuing.

I do not believe that it can be said that the crisis should be tackled with a rightwing or a leftwing policy. In this respect those who say that there is only one real path to pursue and that this path is the one that we are pursuing are right.

NATO

The modernization which our armed forces are undergoing can continue more efficiently within the Atlantic alliance framework. This is the first point. Another point which I consider equally important is this: When we are in the alliance, Spanish army chiefs and officers will have many opportunities for dialogue and coexistence with officers of other Western armies and countries. I believe that this dialogue, conducted by agreement on a joint basis or within the vast number of NATO working committees on strategic and military matters, will improve our armed forces' knowledge of the defense problems facing the Western world and certainly also its knowledge of the present role of an army within a Western democracy. I believe that these elements are advantageous to us.

I do not believe that Spaniards are tired of democracy. There is a danger of them blaming some of our problems on democracy, because they have coincided. For instance, we achieved democracy in the midst of an economic crisis. The crisis, unemployment and democracy all coincided, but to deduce from this coincidence a cause and effect relationship is a mistake. Quite the contrary, I believe that only when we established democracy in Spain did it become possible to combat the crisis. The crisis appeared in 1973, but only in 1977, when the Spanish people had real representatives and when workers and employers had their representatives, was it possible to start a systematic and serious struggle against the crisis by means of the Moncloa Pacts.

I therefore believe that the Spanish people must regard democracy not as the cause of the problems that we are suffering but as a precondition for solving them. And I hope that at the next general election this is how the Spanish people will see it and that more of them will vote.

I would say to the Spanish people that they must not lose confidence in their institutions, that we are on the right path and that, as the King said very recently, we made no mistake in choosing the system that we did. Freedom has its problems, undoubtedly, but the problems of a nascent freedom can almost always -- I would not say always -- be resolved with more freedom. I ask the Spanish people to have as much faith as I have and proclaim in freedom.

PRIME MINISTER DENIES PARLIAMENT TO BE DISSOLVED

LD102202 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Excerpt] We now go over to the Congress of Deputies for a report on important statements by the prime minister who has flatly denied the possible dissolution of the two chambers. Here is Pedro Fernandez Cespedes:

[Begin recording] In the corridors of the Congress Building the rumor of possible dissolution of the two chambers had to be one of the consequences of the vote which the UCD lost yesterday and which led to the Valencia autonomy statute being returned to the Constitutional Committee. In these very corridors, though not in front of the microphone, the prime minister described what happened yesterday as an important event in itself but one which there was no reason to extrapolate upon. Calvo-Sotelo sees it as an isolated incident. The prime minister considers that Fernandez Ordonez did not keep his word and at the same time he regrets this.

This evening rumor centered on whether the meeting between Calvo-Sotelo and three cabinet ministers at the Moncloa Palace might have dealt with the dissolution of parliament and the consequent announcement of general elections. We say "centered on" because the rumor has been denied by one of those who attended the meeting -- Pio Cabanillas Gallas, minister of justice.

[Cabanillas Gallas] I believe that I am able to reply that neither at this meeting nor at any time as far as I know has the subject of dissolving parliament been discussed at all. [end recording]

NORWAY

OPPOSITION LEADER REAFFIRMS NATO COMMITMENT

PM031411 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 27 Feb 82 p 2

[Norwegian Labor Party Chairman Gro Harlem Brundtland "Perspective" article: "No Disagreements To Exacerbate"]

[Text] I gladly accept an invitation from AFTENPOSTEN to present some reflections surrounding the debate of the United States, Norway and NATO which has filled newspaper columns in the last few weeks. Let me start by expressing my whole-hearted support for the conclusion of AFTENPOSTEN's editorial yesterday: "It is within the NATO framework that we have the best foundation for making continued efforts for peace -- with freedom."

The fact that this is a widespread view in political circles in Norway also means that we have broad national agreement on central questions in crucial areas of our own security. Throughout the postwar period the Labor Party has been the main architect of our security policy. This is a tradition and a responsibility we intend to continue -- and the party's programs show this clearly and unambiguously.

Norway's strategic position -- and our history and cultural heritage -- tie us closely to Atlantic cooperation. It is a particularly important task for Norway to make ties in Europe and between Europe and the United States, based on mutual admission of dependence and trust. This requires a desire for contact, consultation and the necessary criticism between equal partners.

Norway's active interest in close and frank contacts with the EEC and Europe seems to be winning greater sympathy. The present leaders in the Foreign Ministry are following up the initiatives taken by Labor Party governments.

The question of Norway's continued membership of NATO is not included on any serious agenda, at least not inside the Labor Party. After the almost violent overreactions we have witnessed in the last few weeks, it is important that we make this clear. Parallel with the Storting Foreign Affairs Committee's U.S. visit a debate broke out in Norway surrounding the United States, Norway and the alliance. Some strong words and expressions were used. Part of the contents and some of the phrases used in a statement adopted by the smallest possible majority by Nordland Labor Party formed the point of departure for the debate. Many people reacted to the conclusions which were drawn. But we must be allowed to question the wisdom of some of the unbalanced and exaggerated comments with which the resolution was met. They made it seem as if the Labor Party National Executive or the party's Storting group had suddenly started making new noises on the subject of security policy.

For example, I find it difficult to see that the need for the country's prime minister to throw himself into the debate was particularly urgent. At any rate, it did not help to keep the affair in its right proportions. Later developments have also confirmed this. It goes without saying that the attitude and policy line of the Labor Party in central sections of Norwegian security policy cannot be questioned on a foundation like the present one.

For his part the defense minister was swift to declare that "The government will definitely not follow this call from a local Labor Party." The U.S. ambassador also made a contribution to the debate: "We cannot allow the Labor Party's local organization in northern Norway to dictate to us new guidelines for U.S.-Norwegian cooperation." These were wide-ranging conclusions and strong reactions.

I must admit that I find the foreign minister's reaction better suited to the situation. He said that he did not want to make any comment, and said instead that "the responsibility is solely that of Nordland Labor Party."

As Labor Party chairman, I expressed some views about the statement which had already been adopted.

1. The resolution should be taken as an expression of concern over and reaction to developments in Turkey and El Salvador -- things already expressed by the Labor Party.

2. I was not sure that the idea of involving allied exercises in Norway was the right way of reacting. This is still my view. It is unreasonable to interpret my clear reservations about involving allied exercises as some sort of "halfway" support for positions hostile to NATO. Hordaland Labor Party later rejected a similar proposal by a large majority (30 votes out of 200 in favor of the motion). I took the view that there was no reason to draw too hasty conclusions and blow the affair up out of proportion. But there were those who had completely different motives.

It is difficult to avoid being left with the impression that the Conservative Party is having trouble shaking off its long-lasting critical opposition role. At the same time the last few days show that an active debate is -- fortunately -- also going on within the Conservative Party and nuances in its position are emerging. For example, in connection with U.S. policy in El Salvador, it could happen that this will contribute to greater concern and dampen their desire to seek to score political points.

I also noted with interest that in a speech recently the prime minister expressed himself in a much more considered manner -- and found reason to include the statement that "We have a right and a duty to speak our mind when we disagree with our allies' policies."

At present there are several important fields within transatlantic cooperation where conflicts of interest have arisen between the United States on the one hand and West Europe on the other. In the economic field there is considerable European dissatisfaction with the budget and the policy course planned by the Reagan administration. The European view is that these have led to high interest rates, high levels of unemployment and decreased opportunities for new growth. In some respects there are major disagreements on attitudes to Third World countries including those in Central and Latin America and in Africa. There are also differing views on some aspects of relations with the Soviet Union.

Disagreements and conflicts of interest between the United States and West Europe are not a new phenomenon in the postwar period. We should be capable of discussing such questions with frankness and mutual respect.

There is no real foundation for questioning the Labor Party's main line of defense and security policy. Prominent members of the government could also have taken this as their point of departure and refrained from strong words and expressions, such as "hostile to NATO," used of the Labor Party leadership. This is a little too reminiscent of the Conservatives' most vociferous period in opposition -- when they chose to create the impression of great divisions in the Labor Party surrounding fundamental sections of our security policy. I think that this was an unfortunate working method chosen by the Conservative Party at that time. I take the view that it is equally unfortunate that the prime minister and the Conservative Party as a government party see it as part of their mission to exploit everything which could offer an opportunity to preserve the picture of divisions or disagreement on the major outlines of foreign and security policy. Norwegian Governments have always had a tradition of doing exactly the opposite.

KHARAVYI RUNS REJOINDER TO ARCHBISHOP'S STATEMENT

[Editorial: "Confirmation of the Archbishop's Involvement"]

[Text] The statement by Archbishop Khrisostomos attempts a "formal" denial of the reliable reports of KHARAVYI last Sunday on the archbishop's sideline involvement in establishment of a preelection partnership and nomination of a joint presidential candidate. The archbishop's own statement, however, is basic confirmation of his involvement in political affairs. It could even be described as his first open "reelection" statement against the democratic and patriotic forces that follow the Makarios line.

The archbishop says he was deeply saddened by what KHARAVYI wrote about his hatred for the "patriotic democratic forces." Yet his statement confirms this unjustified and relentless hatred in the accusations, slanders and abuse it contains, which we consider unsuited to and unusual for a religious leader.

The archbishop ought to know that KHARAVYI did not "fall victim to false reports," and it is for this reason that he does not withdraw what he wrote. The archbishop knows our paper is not in the habit of publishing either "figments of a diseased imagination" or "malevolent lies," nor does it create "confusion" or strike against the "genuine patriotic and resistance forces." It simply informs and warns the people in time.

By raising the question of "who are patriots" and "who are not" as well as of "who wants a NATO solution," the archbishop attempts to distort and besmirch the line of the leftwing on the Cyprus issue. Does the archbishop forget that the left was and remains the most firm and conscientious supporter of the joint line of the Ministerial-National [Council] originally laid down under the leadership of the never-to-be-forgotten Makarios? AKEL never deviated from this wise and conscientious line based on the UN resolutions and which aspires to a just solution through the United Nations and based on its resolutions.

Therefore, if the archbishop today wants to accuse AKEL because it follows the Makarios line and because it accepts the intercommunal talks, he must at the same time also accuse all the patriotic, democratic forces that have supported the joint Ministerial-National line over the past 5 years. The archbishop knows well that there is no separate "AKEL-leftwing" line on the Cyprus issue. We supported the Makarios line even after his death, as did many other patriots and democrats. The archbishop, however, together with some other "pro-Makarios" elements, started floundering after 1978 and in this way they created a deep rift within the domestic patriotic front, to the obvious joy of the extreme rightwing and the imperialist circles.

Unhesitating in his enmity toward and polemics against the AKEL-leftwing line, the archbishop is the first and only one to maintain that "at least during the last 2 years there has been full conformity of positions between the leadership of AKEL and the Democratic Rally on the national issue." To "prove" this, he refers to "conformity" in dealing with the "Turkish proposals" on "the exchange of Varosha for the operation and joint use of Nicosia airport and the port of Famagusta" and on acceptance of the Waldheim ideas."

We never expected such an attempt to identify the anti-imperialist national liberation line of AKEL and the other patriotic forces of our people which follow a joint line on these issues (the Ministerial-National line) with the purely proimperialist, pro-NATO line of the Democratic Rally. There is only one truth however: During these last years AKEL has had absolutely no meeting with the Democratic Rally.

Archbishop Khrisostomos, however, did have such meetings, to achieve the political isolation of the leftwing. The archbishop's offensive against the left started immediately on the day after his election, in a concelaed way and on the sidelines. Ever since that time KHARAVYI had reports about a certain meeting at Khrisostomos' home at Statos during which he forecast the destruction of AKEL. Recently there has been an increase in contacts between the archbishop and the rightwing forces, including the Democratic Rally.

The archbishop's statement also speaks of the undermining of the church that started "immediately after the death of Makarios and which...is subsidized by foreign funds." We have no idea which local or foreign elements he has in mind. We all, however, know the the story of the three metropolitan bishops who revolted against Makarios within the Holy Synod with the blessings of NATO Secretary General Luns on the eve of the coup and in parallel with the assassination attempts against Makarios. However, it is not only from the outside that the church and its authority can be struck. It can also be struck by the actions of its religious leaders, and such blows are even more dangerous.

It is well known to everyone that KHARAVYI and the leftwing never wanted to strike against the church. When they call on Archbishop Khrisostomos not to get involved in party politics or in politics generally, they do so only as a result of a genuine and primal interest. We believe the church can play a serious and constructive role, particularly under the current difficult conditions, in such vital sectors as patriotic unity, peace, protection of youths and the family, and humanitarian issues, but always removed from party politics, which irreparably undermines the authority of the church. Unfortunately, the archibishop's statement, full of party-political hatred, does not leave many hopes for this.

ARCHBISHOP SENDS SUPPORT MESSAGE TO PAPANDREOU

NC101151 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1000 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Text] In a message to Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, Archibishop Khrisostomos emphasized that his recent visit to Cyprus has been inscribed in our national history as an act of unique significance for Hellenism. The visit, the message added, inspired Cyprus Hellenism with confidence in the future. Our people, His Beatitude said, once again think and feel a part of universal Hellenism, with which they are aligned not only for the restoration of their own just rights but also for the defense of all the rights of the entire nation, wherever these are threatened. All Greeks, he added, Cypriots, mainland Greeks and emigrants, are inspired by the unifying force of the common struggles of the nation.

In conclusion, the archbishop congratulated Papandreou on his correct and national policy and expressed gratitude for his decisive contribution to the liberation struggle of Cyprus Hellenism.

KLIRIDHIS TO RUN IN PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

NC100958 Nicosia ADHESMEVTI in Greek 10 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] Democratic Rally Chairman Kliridhis stated to ADHESMEVTI yesterday that the party's decision for its chairman to run in the presidential elections is final. Mr Kliridhis stressed that in no way will the party support a third option. Denying rumors, Mr Kliridhis described them as utterly unfounded. What has been said about supporting a common "supraparty candidate" is lacking in seriousness. "The party is determined to work for true change and Cyprus' salvation. Only a strong and capable center-right government will be able to succeed in this great national task. As the largest party of the center-right forces, we will be represented in the presidential elections in order to fulfill this mission."

LISSARIDHIS REJECTS KIPRIANOU ELECTION UNITY BID

NC101202 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 10 Mar 82 pp 1, 8

[Excerpts] EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis has rejected President Kiprianou's new proposal for cooperation among Democratic Party, EDEK and AKEL in the next presidential elections. In reply to O AGON correspondent's question, Mr Lissaridhis confirmed the meeting with President Kiprianou and the rejection of his new cooperation agreement proposal. However, he avoided giving details of the discussions.

To a question about his party's position regarding cooperation with other parties, the EDEK chairman said: "Our position is clear. The people must know what they are choosing, why they are choosing it and what guarantees they have for implementation of the program presented to them. The main guarantee is each one's experience. Cooperation based on heterogeneity damages popular unity, which must be based on the premise that the Cyprus issue is one of occupation and is to be repositioned as such, while, at the same time, a just internationalization of the issue is projected."

ANOTHER INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS SESSION HELD 10 MAR

[Excerpts] Another meeting within the intercommunal talks framework was held at the Ledra Palace Hotel this afternoon. A UN communique says the talks continued on the basis of the agenda agreed upon, and at today's meeting the discussion on points of coincidence continued and concluded. The next meeting will be held Wednesday.

In a statement prior to the meeting, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi, said the points of coincidence cover only matters of the problem's constitutional aspect and not the territorial aspect. Answering a question of whether the UN secretary general's document has been accepted by both sides on what concerns the points of coincidence, Mr Gobbi said there is a general basis of agreement on these points. Mr Gobbi further said he will attend the meeting the UN secretary general will hold in Rome with President Kiprianou in April. He also said that prior to the meeting he will go to UN headquarters for consultations.

In a statement before the meeting, the representative of the Greek Cypriot side, Ioannidhis, said there is agreement only on a number of points on which there is coincidence of views. Asked if the points of coincidence cover all the points mentioned in the UN secretary gneeral's evaluation document, Mr Ioannidhis said they did not reach agreement on all points. However, he said, there have been some other points of coincidence. Concerning human rights, Mr Ioannidhis said they reached agreement on a number or articles of the 1960 constitution. About the three basic freedoms. He said that so far there has not been any agreement. He added: The Turkish Cypriot side does not accept the three basic freedoms, even in principle. Mr Ioannidhis went on: Human rights and basic freedoms constitute an aggregate of principles which must be recognized together as a whole.

In his statement on the Turkish Cypriot position on the question of the three basic freedoms, Turkish Cypriot interolocutor Onan said the Turkish Cypriot side had earlier submitted proposals on this question and that it will again submit proposals and try to reduce the gap between the two sides. Answering a question on whether these proposals will be the same, Mr Onan said they might be the same but, he said, what is important is the way these proposals are submitted and analyzed. Mr Onan added: Now the proposals will be analyzed thoroughly. In conclusion, Mr Onan said that after the discussion of the points of coincidence is concluded, discussion on basic freedoms will begin.

NATO AMBASSADORS BRIEFED ON TURKISH VIOLATIONS

NC102028 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Text] Deputy Foreign Minister Papoulias summoned the ambassadors of NATO countries in Athens at noon today and briefed them on the violations of Greek airspace and on the violation of air traffic regulations in the Aegean recently by Turkish military aircraft. Mr Papoulias pointed out to the ambassadors the terrible danger and consequences entailed by these actions by Turkey. Strong representations in the same spirit were made (?immediately) both by the Greek Government to the Turkish ambassador in Athens and by the Greek ambassador in Ankara to the Turkish authorities.

DAILY ON GOVERNMENT STATEMENT ON U.S. BASES

NC101005 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 9 Mar 82 p 10

[Text] The government spokesman stated last night: "The government has no comment on what positions it will take during the negotiations on the bases." The day before yesterday the spokesman denied a rightwing newspaper's report that the government would submit proposals on the bases to the United States by 15 March. However, it clearly avoided denying other progovernment newspaper reports that the Greek position will be presented to the United States by the end of May. The issue of the bases probably will be discussed during the Reagan-Papandreou meeting within the framework of the NATO summit at the beginning of June. It is probable that the Greek position will also be explained at Papandreou's meetings with Secretary of State Haig and Defense Secretary Weinberger at the spring NATO meeting in Brussels on 6-7 May.

However, the government spokesman clearly avoided denying the progovernment newspaper report that the basic principles of the Greek proposals are the following: The longest possible time limit will be set for the operation of the bases, after which they must be removed. "The administration of the bases will remain the responsibility of the United States because it owns the bases, but the Greek side must have full information about their operation to avoid harm to national interests." The government will be able to stop their partial or complete operation, and the bases are not to be used against countries with which Greece maintains good relations.

Particularly significant is the point that openly recognizes that the bases will be under the administration of the United States. However, it is evident that use of the bases against socialist and Arab countries cannot be avoided, something that naturally would harm our country's interests seriously.

ATHENS INSISTS ON UN-BASED SOLUTION FOR CYPRUS

NC102239 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Text] A government spokesman in Athens stated that the Greek Government views with satisfaction and considers as positive steps all efforts for internationalization of the Cyprus problem. He stressed, however, that Athens insists on a solution of the problem through UN procedures. The spokesman made this statement when asked to comment on a statement by U.S. Democratic Congressman Rosenthal, who said Greek Prime Minister Papandreou is trying to make the world conscious of the true nature of the Cyprus tragedy. The U.S. congressman also said the Greek Government is seeking an international forum, with the participation of countries such as the United States, Britain, West Germany, France and others, in order to discuss with Greece and Turkey various ways for solving at least certain differences in connection with Cyprus.

TURKISH SEA SHELF AGREEMENT CAUSES SURPRISE

NC110914 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 11 Mar 82 p 7

[Text] An explosive political situation with as yet indeterminate repercussions was created by a Turkish revelation that a secret agreement on the Aegean continental shelf was signed in 1976 by the Greek and Turkish Governments. The official Turkish bulletin NEWS SPOT, which is distributed by Turkish embassies throughout the world, carries threatening, but also revealing, statements by Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen, who for the first time revealed that a secret agreement was signed in Bern in 1976. According to political observers in Athens, this explains the fact that since that time the Greek Government turned its exclusive attention toward oil prospecting in the Ionian Sea instead of the Aegean, while the Turkish Government withdrew the marine research vessel Hora without making any comment.

Speculation on the matter existed for some time, but this became a certainty about a month ago when the Turks hinted at the existence of an agreement dealing with the Aegean. Speculation became even stronger about a week ago when the Turks referred officially to the existence of such an agreement. Greek Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos requested that the Turkish ambassador inform the present Greek Government of the text of this unknown agreement.

Specifically, the latest issue of the Turkish bulletin states: "Apart from its preparations to extend its territorial waters to 12 miles in the Aegean, despite existing agreements, Greece now also is violating the 1976 Bern agreement, thus resorting to yet another unilateral action. The Bern agreement specified that Greece ought to stop its oil prospecting on the Aegean continental shelf." The bulletin also carried the following comment by Turkmen: "Possible concessions by us on our rights and interests in the Aegean are out of the question. The violation of the Bern agreement by one side act in the same manner."

This last portion of Turkmen's statement lets it be understood that the Turks would possibly send the Hora into the Aegean in the future if, as they allege, Greece questions the existence of the Bern agreement. According to news agency reports, the head of the two delegations, Ioannis Tzounis and Suat Bilge, on 11 November in Bern, signed the minutes of a meeting after negotiations and talks on the delineation of the Aegean continental shelf between the Karamanlis and Demirel governments. Under Article 6 of these minutes, the Turkish and Greek Governments undertook to "abstain from any initiative and action related to the continental shelf of the Aegean which could possibly interfere with the negotiations."

KKE COMMITTEE STATEMENT CRITICIZES 1982 BUDGET

NC092031 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 9 Mar 82

[Text] A KKE Central Committee statement on the budget notes that the heavy inheritance from the rightwing in the economic sector is well known; it is primarily an inheritance of immunity, favorable privileges and plundering by the plutocracy. With the new budget submitted by the government, the superprofits and privileges of foreign and domestic monopolies remain untouched. Despite the increased taxation on immovable property and some alleviations, the people are shouldering new taxation. The irritating thing is that the rightwing is also reacting hypocritically against this. The rightwing is the only one that has no right to exercise demogagy over the people's interests; it has always served the plutocracy blindly at the expense of the working people. With the new budget and with its entire economic policy, the government is not following the people's mandate.

ECEVIT REPORTED CALLED IN FOR QUESTIONING

NC110922 Paris AFP in English 0902 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Text] Ankara, 11 Mar (AFP) — Former Turkish Prime Minister and Peoples Republican Party Chairman Bulent Ecevit was today called in for questioning by the martial law command, a source close to the party said. Mr Ecevit was not told why he was to appear, the source said. Two investigations of the former prime minister are currently in process.

The first investigation, resumed early this week against the social democrat-style party and its former chairman, is into charges that the social democrat movement colluded with clandestine leftist groups. The second investigation began after Mr Ecevit made political statements to the press when he left prison on February 1. He had just served a three-month sentence for violating a decree which banned political discussions.

Denied Travel Permission

[Text] Ankara, 10 Mar (DPA) — The Turkish military government has refused Bulent Ecevit, former prime minister and chairman of the Republican People's Party [RPP], permission to travel abroad. Ecevit told DPA on Wednesday in Ankara that the martial law commander of Ankara had given the reason for the refusal as the continuing investigations against the leading members of the RPP. In the view of the military, they are under suspicion of having worked with Marxist and revolutionary groups. Ecevit had asked for permission to travel abroad in order to accept an invitation in the United States. Last year he was refused permission to travel abroad when he wanted to accept an invitation from Willy Brandt, chairman of the Socialist International and SPD chairman.

COLUMNIST AFFIRMS CYPRUS' IMPORTANCE TO COUNTRY

NC100807 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 7 Mar 82 p 3

["Pressure Cooker" column by Necati Zincirkiran: "What Cyprus Is and What It Is Not"]

[Text] The United States has finally let the cat out of the bag: "We oppose Cyprus being discussed at an international forum." These words were uttered by the U.S. ambassador in Ankara.

As a matter of fact, a few weeks ago a responsible U.S. official disclosed that his government favored settlement of the Cyprus dispute through the intercommunal talks. The United States and Turkey are in complete accord in this respect. It is extremely difficult to guess what dimensions it will assume and what the consequences will be if the Cyprus question is taken to an international forum. Ever since Turkey get involved sincerely in the Cyprus issue, this has been the view it has defended. But this does not necessarily mean that Turkey is so weak it will not be able to defend its case if one day the Cyprus question is tackled at an international level. This is not the source of our anxiety.

Cyprus is a fairly large island 46 miles south of Turkey. The importance of this island to the defense of Anatolia can never be doubted. This was the case 1,000 years ago, and this is the case now. It will not be different tomorrow. The same can be said about the defense of the Middle East. The fact that during the Ottoman Empire's years of decline Cyprus was given temporarily to Britain in 1871 for defending Turkey against the Russian threat is in itself sufficient proof of the island's importance for our defense. In addition, the pages of history record the difficulties encountered and the number of expeditions undertaken by the Ottomans to capture the island.

Weapons develop and change, but geopolitical and strategic importance does not. Why is it that despite its economic distresses, Britain continues to preserve its bases on the island? It is difficult to explain this to some of our Western European friends. It is truly difficult to understand why some of our allies in NATO wish to have the Cyprus question discussed at an international level. How unfortunate it is that we happen to be in the same alliance with them.

As long as Turkey stands upright, the Cyprus dispute will be resolved as we want it to be. What we really want is the only form of settlement that ensures the happy existence of both communities on the island. This can be the subject of bargaining. But it is impossible to accept what is going on in the minds of the Greek Cypriots and Papandreou. This is how friend and foe alike should understand this.

CUMHURIYET QUERIES TURKMEN ON FOREIGN SITUATION

NC111010 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 8 Mar 82 pp 1, 11

[Interview with Foreign Minister Turkmen by correspondent Sedat Ergin in Ankara -- date not given]

[Text] Question: Papandreou has begun to sneak into the Arab World to some extent.... Can you comment on this?

Answer: What can Papandreou do in the Arab World? We would be only too glad to know that he supports the just cause of the Arabs. The more he extends his support to them, the more gratified we are. We have no objection to that. He will never be able to develop relations with the Arabs to the detriment of Turkey's relations with them, because Greece's relations with the Arabs lack the roots that exist between Turkey and the Arabs.

Question: But it is observed that he has enhanced his prestige in the Middle East. Following his participation in the denunciation of Israel in the United Nations, the Arab League set him a message of congratulations....

Answer: It may have done so for tactical gains. We dwell on strategic gains.

Question: Let's leave Papandreou aside. Where does Turkish foreign policy stand today?

Answer: Turkish foreign policy is taking its normal course.

Question: Philosophical connections....

Answer: I have never believed philosphical approaches in foreign policy are of any particular importance. We have to be realistic and pragmatic in foreign policy. From a philosophical point of view, the real basis of our policy conforms to our internal aspirations. This is a policy that advocates peace, democracy and freedom thoughout the world. It is the reflection of the policy we pursue at home. But in addition to this we have to be realistic and pragmatic. I think this is the policy we are implementing.

Question: In its general line, the foreign policy we have been implementing since the 12 September intervention has been fairly stable. This has manifested itself positively in our Middle East policy, the reduction of the relations with Israel to the level of a second secretary and the economic consequences. Relations with the Eastern bloc have preserved their stability without any change. However, recently there have appeared certain fluctuations in these policies. This has been observed in the attitude of Moscow. It is said that following the vote on Israel in the United Nations, there has been some cooling in relations with the Arab World. Relations with Europe are also gradually becoming more problematical. In other words, certain fluctuations have been observed in the general line of Turkey's foreign policy. What is your own assessment?

Answer: It is normal that certain difficulties will crop up from time to time in implementation of foreign policy. Every country may experience such difficulties. Undoubtedly Turkey is no exception. The most important thing is not to lose sight of the general direction and not to be influenced by daily events. We must not be influenced by daily events to the extent of acting sentimentally and allowing the real political direction to get off the rails. I agree with you: Our policy is an extremely stable policy. We have close cooperation with the United States within NATO and with the NATO countries within the NATO and EEC frameworks. We are cooperating extensively with the Arab World and maintaining stable relations with the Soviet Union and other socialist countries. I don't think there is any deviation from this policy. Naturally certain events may happen. Certain unexpected developments may occur. We may from time to time observe the effects of these developments on our policy. But the important thing is to be able to pursue a steady policy for a long time. I believe we shall be able to do this. I do not see any aspect in all the matters you have mentioned which could affect the course of our policy.

It was with sorrow that we used our vote in the United Nations. All our Arab friends know this. We were very sorry about it. But because of certain sensitive equilibriums in our foreign policy we could not act otherwise. Our evaluation was in this direction. However, no one can argue that there is any change in the main direction of our foreign policy toward the Arabs. Our Arab friends have not come up with such an argument either.

With regard to our relations with the Europeans, it is true we are currently going through certain difficulties in our relations with certain European countries. If you look at these relations from a long-term point of view, neither Europe nor we have any alternative than to further our mutual cooperation and solidarity. We have no problem with the United States.

Let us turn to relations with the Soviet Union and the socialist countries: Our honorable head of state's visit to Bulgaria provides the finest example of these relations with these countries. All our relations are continuing in a normal way. As you know, our head of state will also visit Romania. The Soviet Union always tells us that it attributes great importance to stable relations with us. We tell them the same thing. In the meantime, certain articles have appeared in the Soviet press. In reality these are in contrast with what the Soviet Union has been communicating to us officially. Nevertheless we do not believe we have reached a stage that requires us to reassess our relations with the Soviet Union.

Question: Are you pessimistic about the continually deteriorating relations with Europe?

Answer: I see no reason why I should be pessimistic. There are many points of distress in our relations with Europe, and most of these are due to the internal policies of those countries. We are being subjected to increasing blame from time to time, but we know that responsible government leaders in Europe have positive evaluations regarding developments in Turkey. They see things in Turkey in their true perspective.

Question: There are certain interpretations that Turkey is breaking away from Europe and getting closer to the United States....

Answer: Turkey will never pursue a policy with only one course. Let me say this: We have a historic experience in this respect. We possess a basic foreign policy concept we have inherited from Ataturk. Turkey has never been, nor will it be, so naive as to pursue a policy based on a single course. As a matter of fact, Turkey's geographic and strategic position is not suitable for such a policy. On the contrary, Turkey's position is quite favorable for a multilateral and multioption policy. Naturally a multilateral policy is sometimes accompanied by certain difficulties. You have to see that the policy you follow in one direction is not in contrast with the other. Here lies the difficulty of Turkish foreign policy. We shall always encounter such difficulties. Skill in diplomacy lies in overcoming these difficulties.

Question: How do you see Turkish-U.S. relations?

Answer: I believe that after many ups and downs Turkish-U.S. relations have entered a period of maturity and productivity.

Question: How does Turkey view the special session the United Nations will hold on disarmament in June?

Answer: Certain targets were established at the special session in 1978. Naturally disarmament is a many-sided affair, such as prevention of proliferation of nuclear weapons, suspension of nuclear tests and the question of chemical weapons. But what is really expected is speeding up the disarmament talks. The UN General Assembly cannot help being influenced by international opinion.

Question: Will Turkey apply for membership in the Disarmament Committee?

Answer: It is believed that the membership of the Disarmament Committee will be expanded. If this is accepted, we will express our interest in joining as a member.

PAKISTANI PRESIDENT PAYS CONDOLENCE VISIT 11 MAR

TA110820 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0800 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Text] Pakistani President Ziaul Haq, who arrived in Ankara yesterday for a visit of condolences, departed Turkey today. The Pakistani president was seen off at Esenboga Airport by head of state Kenan Evren with a ceremony. National Security Council members and Air Force Commander Tahsin Sahinkaya, Naval Commander Nejat Tumer, Gendarme Commander Sedat Celasun and Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen and other officials were present at the ceremony.

In a statement after the visiting president departed, head of state Evren said that deep links of friendship exist between Turkey and Pakistan. Evren said the condolence visit paid by the Pakistani president in a bid to share in his personal grief on behalf of the Pakistani people [at Mrs Evren's death] represented one of the most concrete examples of these relations. The visit, Evren said, helped alleviate his sorrow. The head of state expressed his conviction that relations between the two countries would further progress in the future.

OZAL ANNOUNCES NEW TRADE AGREEMENTS WITH IRAN

TA101724 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Text] Deputy Prime Minister and State Minister Turgut Ozal has said that agreements have been reached with Iran that will result in Turkish exports worth $600 million in 1982 and that further transactions might bring this figure to $1 billion. Ozal made this statement at Ankara's Esenboga Airport on his return from a 5-day visit to Iran.

He added that another agreement reached with Iran would allow Turkey to import as much as 4 million tons of crude oil yearly. He said talks and agreements with Iranian officials covered the fields of trade, industry, transportation and banking. As a result, trade volume between the two countries will increase, the minister said.

Ozal noted that final agreements were reached on the export to Iran of 250,000 tons of wheat, 300,000 tons of barley, 300,000 tons of sugar, 25,000 tons of beef, 12,000 tractors assembled in Turkey as well as other foodstuffs and industrial products.

The deputy prime minister said agreements in principle were reached on the import of natural gas from Iran as well as transportation through Turkey of Iranian natural gas for the needs of Europe. Ozal said a team of experts would leave for Iran soon to examine the technical aspects of the construction of a new oil pipeline as well as a pipeline for gas.

Pointing out that technical work would also be conducted on the subject of electric power exchange between the two countries and communications, Ozal said a joint committee was established to provide continuity for economic relations between Turkey and Iran. He added that the committee was expected to meet first in Turkey in 1982.

KREISKY COMMENTS AFTER TALKS WITH AL-QADHDHAFI

AU112007 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1830 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Unattributed report on statement by Austrian Chancellor Kreisky after second round of talks with Libyan leader Al-Qadhdhafi in Vienna today -- recorded]

[Excerpt] Libya's international isolation and how it can be broken -- this was also a topic at today's talks. Subsequently, Kreisky said the following in this respect:

[Begin Kreisky recording] We in Austria should not reject such efforts but rather should promote them because, after all, Libya is an important country -- even though a small one -- in Africa, and because it is always better to arrive at peaceful solutions and cooperation than to exacerbate the contrasts. [end recording]

Colonel al-Qadhdhafi is an extremely controversial personality on the scene of international politics. He is suspected, among other things, of standing behind international terrorism. Did the conversation also touch on these problems?

[Begin Kreisky recording] Look, if the contemporaries -- and this I am probably going to say in my speech today -- if the contemporaries of the French revolution or of Cromwell, the views of the contemporaries of the French revolution and Cromwell [Kreisky repeats himself] were also different than the verdict of history on the personalities who made that revolution, despite all that happened at that time, the French revolution ushered in a new era in history. I am not all that certain that the things Al-Qadhdhafi is doing or what is happening in Libya will not also exert a certain influence on the African countries, and then his portrait in history will be an altogether different one than it appears to people today. The methods which are being used in these conflicts are naturally for us sometimes very strange and even repulsive, but nevertheless I believe that -- by the ways in which we are making policies vis-a-vis the Arab peoples -- we are contributing more to the elimination of terror than statements, regardless of how polemic or tough they might be. [end recording]

Raps U.S. Policy

AU111819 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1700 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Text] It is being assumed that the United States, in connection with Al-Qadhdhafi's visit to Austria, declared precisely yesterday a complete oil and trade boycott against Libya, and also announced in this context that the United States will check the course of its allies and friends vis-a-vis Libya against its own course and will react to this. Chancellor Kreisky also reacted to this, according to tomorrow's KRONEN ZEITUNG. He is reported stating: Well, one just cannot make a policy among friends, given such methods against us. If people over there in Washington today really believe that the Europeans are disloyal, cowardly characters, this is wrong. The new people over there are talking themselves into a state of excitement which is dangerous for all of us. Policy is being made there by people who just have no experience. According to KRONEN ZEITUNG, Kreisky allegedly stated: I am considering a trip to Washington this spring to help clarify the evident misunderstandings. A prerequisite for this, however, is that an old presidential invitation to me is reactivated from Washington, because I will not consider a "going to Canossa." That much Chancellor Kreisky said about U.S. reactions to Libya's Colonel al-Qadhdhafi.

AL-Qadhdhafi's Activities

AU112050 [Editorial Report] Vienna Domestic Television Service in German at 1830 on 11 March carries a filmed report on the activities of Libyan leader Al-Qadhdhafi in Vienna today. The Libyan leader is shown arriving at the Austrian Parliament building, after a 20-minute delay, and being welcomed there by Nationalrat President Naton Benya and escorted into an adjacent room for talks with the representatives of the three Austrian parties represented in Parliament. Participating in the talks with the Libyan delegation are, in addition to the two Nationalrat presidents, Benya and Minkowitsch, the party floor leaders: Fisher for the Socialist Party, Peter for the Freedom Party, and Graf who was deputized for floor leader Mock, for the People's Party. The talks lasted some 20 minutes.

Al-Qadhdhafi is reported stating that he had cancelled the visit to the Voest Corporation in Linz, but gave no reasons for his decision. His delegation would shoot a film about its visit to Voest, which would subsequently be shown on Libyan television he said.

The Palestinian problem was reportedly the central topic of the talks. The parties endorsed a peaceful solution within the framework of negotiations and the United Nations. Al-Qadhdhafi invited the parliamentarians to visit Palestinian camps in order to arrive at a judgment of their own.

Subsequently, short talks took place with Austrian trade union representatives in President Benya's office. Al-Qadhdhafi explained his green book on this occasion; that is, the program of the Libyan revolution, as well as his ideas of the Islamic state. After a visit of about 1 hour, Al-Qadhdhafi is shown being seen off by President Benya and continuing his tour to Town Hall, where Mayor Sratz is shown introducing the members of Vienna's government to the Libyan leader, and Al-Qadhdhafi entering his name in the golden book of the City of Vienna.

The last item on Al-Qadhdhafi's schedule this morning was a visit to the Socialist Party headquarters on Loebelstrasse, where he is shown being welcomed by Party Chairman Chancellor Kreisky. Party Deputy Chairman Blecha, Central Secretary Marsch and Vice Chancellor Sinowatz also participated in the ensuing talks, which centered on sociopolitical and economic-political problems.

Subsequently the official luncheon for the Libyan guest was served at Vienna's Pallavicini Palace. Chancellor Kreisky, as the host, together with Al-Qadhdhafi, are shown greeting representatives of banks and the economy, with Voest Corporation Director General Apfalter at the head. Both sides are shown giving toasts, stressing interest in orderly relations.

Press Conference

AU112207 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 2050 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Hans Benedict report on Libyan leader Al-Qadhdhafi's press conference given at Vienna's Imperial Hotel today]

[Text] Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's first international press conference in the West contained three main statements: First, Al-Qadhdhafi regards the relationship with Chancellor Kreisky as a possible access road to the Middle East policy of leading West European states. Second, Al-Qadhdhafi offers development of Libyan-Austrian economic relations. Third, Al-Qadhdhafi wants to come through the conflict with the United States holding his own, attacks President Reagan and concurrently makes an offer for detente.

Al-Qadhdhafi stated that Libya and Western Europe are exposed to the identical threat of a third world war. He had been reassured of this by Chancellor Kreisky, he stated. Kreisky is striving to achieve international cooperation in order to prevent another war, and Al-Qadhdhafi said, verbatim: Chancellor Kreisky and I have the same goals: We are striving to find understanding for these goals in both Western Europe and the Third World.

Both are linked by a common destiny because another war would involve both of them directly. Neither Libya nor the West European countries are willing to suffer a war which would be a U.S. war. Al-Qadhdhafi stated that Kreisky is one of the most prestigious statesman in the Arab world, Kreisky has always taken a clear-cut position. This gives him the authority to bring the Arab world and Western Europe closer to one another. Concerning his expected personal relations with Western Europe, Al-Qadhdhafi said that Chancellor Kreisky will convey to the West Europeans a truthful picture of Libya under my leadership. He has known me for 7 years. We have developed a relationship which has not needed any mediation by third parties. Kreisky knows me, he knows that I am not a terrorist. He knows that Libya helps the Third World. Kreisky also knows that there could exist close relations between us Libyans and the industrialized West European countries, first and foremost with the FRG, Al-Qadhdhafi said.

Al-Qadhdhafi presented the conflict with the United States as a consequence of what he termed the American policy of aggression. Al-Qadhdhafi stated that President Reagan is completely ignorant of Middle East problems and uninformed, and that he depends, as Al-Qadhdhafi put it, on international Zionism. Reagan is pursuing a policy of permanent interference in the national affairs of Western Europe and of the Arab world. Proof of this, Al-Qadhdhafi stated, is this letter of Reagan's to West European governments with the request that they not invite Colonel al-Qadhdhafi for state visits. Al-Qadhdhafi pointed out that the letter carried Reagan's signature. Despite this conflict, Al-Qadhdhafi said, he offered to normalize relations with the United States, and said verbatim: "I still believe that the road between us is open. We have no interest in carrying on the conflict. As far as we are concerned, we could even negotiate tomorrow about normal economic, political and cultural relations. After all, we must realize that President Reagan is still a newcomer and inexperienced in Middle East politics." Al-Qadhdhafi stated (?skeptically) that he hope that his policy in 1983 will be better than in the past and this year.

Al-Qadhdhafi stated that the United States possesses no evidence of Libya's support for international terrorism. This is, as Al-Qadhdhafi put it, a propaganda lie of the Zionists. The trade embargo imposed by the United States on Libya would remain ineffective, Al-Qadhdhafi stated. Libya is not poor; Libya will survive this embargo. We will not give up. The Americans will not achieve anything by it but a senseless continuation of the conflict. I think the Americans will accomplish the contrary of what they want. I think the more pressure they exert on us the more they will encourage other countries, in this way, to strengthen their relations with Libya.

To a journalist's question of whether Al-Qadhdhafi seriously believes that the United States is planning a war against Libya, the head of state said: I would not be surprised if President Reagan is pursuing such ideas. But it is certain even now what he would achieve by it: The world would charge him with having pushed us to the verge of another world war.

Libya Opening Toward Europe

AU120950 Vienna Domestic Service in German 0600 GMT 12 Mar 82

[Edgar Sterbens interview with Chancellor Kreisky in Vienna on 11 March following his talks with Libyan leader Al-Qadhdhafi -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr Chancellor, is there something like an outstanding result of your political talks with the Libyan revolution leader?

[Answer] What counts for me -- apart from what concerns Austria -- is the fact that I have the impression that Libya under Al-Qadhdhafi's leadership is making an attempt to achieve an opening toward Europe, and that this visit in one way or another is the beginning of that. And we in Austria should not reject such endeavors but encourage them because after all Libya is an important, though small, country in Africa and it is always better to come to a peaceful solution and cooperation than to exacerbate differences.

[Question] Has the phenomenon of Al-Qadhdhafi as puller of the strings of international terrorism been discussed with him in clear-cut terms?

[Answer] I cannot see concrete proof of this so-called phenomenon anywhere. All I know is that one has always talked about it, but I have never been able to ascertain that these assertions are correct. Quite the contrary, there has even been a certain measure of reasonable cooperation to check such developments.

[Question] Do you believe that the Al-Qadhdhafi visit to Vienna might lead to a further straining of Austrian-Israeli relations?

[Answer] Oh, well, it might lead to a straining of relations for a certain period of time, but after a while the effect will gradually wear off. I am not taking that very seriously. At any rate this visit is arousing strong interest in European capitals.

[Question] Mr Chancellor, Austrian business has staked great expectations on the Al-Qadhdhafi visit. Now one hears that there will be only barter transactions with Libya -- in other words, Austrian projects, Austrian goods will be bought only if we in turn buy high-priced oil from the Libyans. Are you disappointed?

[Answer] But that is not at all true. Of course, Libya says it wants to sell us more oil because there is more oil available at present. First of all, one does not know how this will develop in the next few months, and as to high-priced oil, that term is not justified at all. Oil prices will again be fixed by OPEC, and we will see what is going to happen in that respect. But let me tell you again: This must not be seen in such a harsh light. The Libyans are paying cash for a large part of their purchases, and that is very important to us. Of course, if possible, we may also be able to increase our oil imports, but that will depend on how things develop.

[Question] Does that mean that, in your opinion, one can also be satisfied with the economic results of this visit?

[Answer] I believe once everything has been concluded one can be highly satisfied because we will again very substantially increase our economic exchange with Libya.

[Question] Have you been given a more detailed explanation as to why Al-Qadhdhafi canceled his visit to the Voest in Linz?

[Answer] Well, it is a Friday, a great, [Kreisky stammers] the, holiday, the Muslim holiday -- and Colonel al-Qadhdhafi would like to go to the mosque. It should have been thought of before that a Friday is not suited for such a visit, you see? And since we have a mosque, he will go there to attend a religious service.

No Evidence of Terrorism

AU1113 48 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 11 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] Vienna (APA) -- Interior Minister Erwin Lanc declared that the alleged connections between Libya or revolution leader Col Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi and terrorist activities have been carefully followed and examined. In contrast to the FRG, which deported Libyans who committed terrorist attacks, there has been no evidence in Austria of any Libyan activities in connection with terrorism in Austria itself or in other European countries, nor even any indications that would make such activities seem likely, Lanc said.

Al-Qadhdhafi Fears Crisis

AU121313 Vienna KRONEN-ZEITUNG in German 12 Mar 82 pp 2-3

[Kurt Seinitz report on interview with Chancellor Kreisky in Vienna on 11 March]

[Excerpt] Kreisky unveils part of the secret of what is behind Al-Qadhdhafi's turbulent lightning visit to Vienna: "The colonel urgently wanted to inform me that the situation in his country might exacerbate to a highly dangerous world crisis within the next few days. Al-Qadhdhafi fears concretely a U.S. military operation against Libya as the consistent continuation of the current sharp Reagan policy. Thus, if something like the American-Libyan military incident of last summer should occur again, Al-Qadhdhafi intends to defend himself with all the substantial military means at his disposal. One can imagine what would then happen in the Mediterranian. However, Al-Qadhdhafi is not a warmonger, he is taking the strongest interest in preserving peace in this region."

Does Al-Qadhdhafi perhaps want to signal this readiness for peace to the Americans via Vienna? Is he seeking mediating contacts via Austria, as will be provided by Foreign Minister Pahr when he makes his trip to inform Washington next weekend?

Kreisky: A man like Al-Qadhdhafi would never ask for that, but he knows that what he is telling us here in Vienna will be passed on to Washington."

Al-Qadhdhafi is today more quiet and deliberate than he was 7 years ago when he first met him, Kreisky says, summing up his impression of the Libyan revolutionary leader. He adds that nothing has changed, however, regarding the absolute incompatibility of the positions of Israel and Libya, the only silver lining being that Al-Qadhdhafi would accept an agreement between the Palestinians and Israel.

Meets With Arabs in Vienna

AU121317 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 12 Mar 82 p 3

[Report on Libyan leader Al-Qadhdhafi activities in Vienna on 11 March]

[Excerpt] Al-Qadhdhafi visited the Austrian Socialist Party [SPOE] headquarters in Vienna on Loewelstrasse where he was greeted by Party Chairman Chancellor Kreisky. In a talk, in which the Deputy SPOE Chairman Blecha, Mayor Gratz, Deputy Governor Gruenzweig, Education Minister Sinowatz and Central Secretary Marsch participated, sociopolitical and economic questions were discussed.

In these talks Colonel al-Qadhdhafi declared that he had already met in Vienna with Arabs living in Austria. These Arabs, according to Al-Qadhdhafi, are very happy with their life in Austria. We are very grateful to Austria that these Arabs have the opportunity of working here enjoying equal rights, the revolutionary leader said.

BRIEFS

HUNGARIAN VISITOR -- At the invitation of Transport Minister Karl Lausecker, his Hungarian counterpart, Transportation and Postal Affairs Minister Arpad Pullai, paid an official visit to Vienna this week. In their talks the two ministers noted that cooperation between the Transport Ministries and the railroads and postal administrations of the two countries has developed very successfully. This cooperation will be further intensified in the near future in the field of new telephone systems. The two ministers exchanged the ratification instruments of the Austrian-Hungarian agreement on railroad transit traffic through the Sopron region, and signed implementing regulations. DW, PRESS OFFICE CONSOLIDATION CONSIDERED

DW111609 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 12 Mar 82 p 29

[Wolfgang Hoffmann article: "Reaching Out for a Transmitter"]

[Text] Will the short-wave transmitter "Deutsche Welle" (DW) be turned into a propaganda instrument? If Klaus Schuetz, intendant of Deutsche Welle in Cologne, is not careful, the nonprofit radio service under public law will run the risk of being coldly reduced to a propaganda transmitter for Bonn. The method being used to try to bridle the transmitter is well thought out. At first glance the arguments are even logical: The transmitter is supposed to undertake rationalization measures and thus save money.

The arguments are supplied by the Federal Comptroller's Office. In an experts opinion its president, Karl Wittrock, arrived at the conclusion that Deutsche Welle and the Federal Press and Information Office "to a considerable extent are doing duplicate work." That is to be stopped now.

There is not even one word of mention of the fact that the Press Office works as the propaganda and information authority of the incumbent Federal Government and is subordinate to the chancellor's office, whereas Deutsche Welle by law is a radio transmitter independent from the government. Its mission: "disseminating a comprehensive picture of the political, cultural and economic life in the Federal Republic" to foreign countries. The nonprofit radio service is financed from state funds, to be sure, yet the law specifically stipulates that it is "not subject to state supervision." Thus there cannot be any duplicate work, unless it is at Deutsche Welle itself.

The Comptroller's Office, meanwhile, insists on its position. The subjects of the investigations into "duplicate work" and of the planned rationalization measures are the monitoring services of Deutsche Welle and the Federal Press Office. These monitoring services gather information from foreign transmitters, newspapers and agencies, and evaluate it. This is indispensable work for a radio service transmitting to the outside world. After all, the editorial desk needs to know what the world to which it broadcasts is like.

DW monitors foreign transmitters via a surveying station located in nearby Bockhacken. This station must be maintained for radio surveying purposes anyway. From there the DW monitors receive broadcasts of transmitters at their doorstep, including those of the East bloc. Since it is impossible technically to hear transmitters from all over the world at one receiving site, DW cooperates with the monitoring services of the British radio BBC and the American FBIS (Foreign Broadcast Information Service). The services exchange their material and complement each other. Without this basis of information the Cologne transmitter would have a hard time organizing 93 programs in 33 languages.

Interested parties outside Deutsche Welle -- for example, Bundestag deputies -- also profit from the information material of the monitoring service. They particularly appreciate the seven DW information reports published daily when they are planning trips abroad. The reports reflect what the local news transmitters are telling their listeners, be it in Moscow, Shanghai or Kampala.

The press office also operates a monitoring service of its own, but this monitoring service is primarily interested in foreign reaction to German policies. The monitoring service of the Press Office hardly cares whether Radio Moscow reports a bread shortage to the people; for the DW editors, however, this knowledge in particular is part of their daily needs. At worst, the alleged "duplicate work" consists of the fact that the DW monitors and those of the Press Office simultaneously tune in on the same transmitters.

The two services are not comparable qualitatively. The proof: When Chancellor Helmut Schmidt visited Erich Honecker in the GDR, the listeners of the Press Office went to sleep early. They also promptly missed the radio speech by General Jaruzelski in which he imposed martial law on Poland. The Press Office has to thank the alert DW monitors for having been able to listen to a broadcast of Jaruzelski speaking in his own voice.

This is why DW editors suspect that the Bonn people merely plan to use the popular cost argument to eliminate bothersome competition -- competition, moreover, which often knows more than the government. The surveys of the Comptroller's Office therefore were just what the Press Office had been waiting for: "According to the survey, the parallel operation in the present form does not seem to be justifiable either for the satisfaction of the need for information or for economic reasons."

The Federal Press Office liked the reference to economic viewpoints which are to be taken into consideration. After all, the Press Office has just built a new reception station for about DM20 million. No funds have been saved there. If Deutsche Welle could be supplied from there, it would be simpler to justify the high costs of the Press Office's new reception station, if critical questions were to arise.

The late Intendant Conrad Ahlers obviously was well informed regarding the radio law. The journalist Ahlers was therefore little concerned by the expertise of the comptrollers. As long as he was heading the station, Deutsche Welle was safe with regard to Bonn's action. The Press Office seems to have more luck with his successor Klaus Schuetz. After several actions by Bonn, the Cologne radio station made its first compromise. A test over several months is intended to reveal whether rationalization measures for the alleged duplication work will be possible at all. The Press Office's monitoring service is supposed to be used to supply one branch of Deutsche Welle in the same way Deutsche Welle has been accustomed to using its own facilities. That could be the beginning of the end of the station's independence.

Lothar Schwartz, chief of Deutsche Welle's Public Relations Department and former SPD Executive Board spokesman, said that the station would certainly not risk its good worldwide reputation as an independent radio station. Schwartz: "For me the crucial point is how credibly I can answer the question whether this is a government propaganda station or not." Regarding the question about a propaganda station, Schwartz might possibly not be able to answer it calmly with a clear conscience in a few months. And the question of whether a merger of the service would save costs and also not be answered as clearly as the Press Office maintains. At the moment, however, not a penny is being saved. On the contrary, even the test is costing additional money. However, the affair will become really expensive if the Federal Press Office really becomes the information source for Deutsche Welle.

In such a case the station must count on losing inestimably valuable material it is now receiving in exchange from the BBC and FBIS. Deutsche Welle's monitoring service -- some 70 people -- is so far the clear winner of the information exchange because the BBC monitoring service alone has 650 employees. If the Cologne station would have to buy the material from its colleagues in future, it would cost many times the amount which could be saved through rationalization measures.

And no doubts exist that the friendly monitoring services would terminate their current cooperation with Deutsche Welle and gladly do without information material which has first gone through the fingers of the German Government. Lothar Schwartz: "Our partners will say thanks but no thanks."

BUNDESTAG APPROVES SPAIN'S ENTRY INTO NATO

LD111136 Hamburg DPA in German 1021 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 11 Mar (DPA) -- The Bundestag today unanimously approved Spain's intended entry into NATO.

Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher welcomed the prompt handling of this matter by the parliament and urged that democratic Spain's entry into the EEC should also be smoothed. To applause from all parliamentary parties, Genscher said that "Spain must know that it is welcome everywhere in the community of democracy, in NATO as well as in the EEC."

In this connection Genscher appealed to Bundestag deputies to work energetically in talks with representatives of other EEC countries to overcome reservations still present about Spain's entry. In any case, these are not a matter of principle but are based on economic considerations.

SPD, FDP FAVOR REAGAN ADDRESS TO BUNDESTAG

LD111114 Hamburg DPA in German 0938 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 11 Mar (DPA) -- The Chairman of the SPD Parliamentary Party, Herbert Wehner, is in favor of inviting U.S. President Ronald Reagan to address the Bundestag during his visit to Bonn for the NATO summit on 9-10 June. Parliamentary Party Spokesman Knut Terjung conveyed Wehner's suggestion to the Bundestag Presidium in Bonn today.

The spokesman said the SPD Parliamentary Party is convinced that the other parliamentary groups will also approve a special session of the Bundestag "for this important occasion." FDP Bundestag Deputy Juergen Moellemann proposed yesterday that the Bundestag hold a special session during the NATO summit to hear a speech by President Reagan.

Reagan's visit takes place in a week when there are no sessions of Parliament.

'Embarrassing Zeal'

DW120945 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 12 Mar 82 p 4

[Commentary signed DR.: "Embarrassing Bonn Zeal"]

[Text] An old saying proves true again in connection with preparations for President Reagan's visit: The Germans always fall from one extreme into the other. Politicians have been complaining for months about discord between Bonn and Washington which they had sometimes caused themselves. Now, the same politicians outdo themselves with demonstrations of kindness for the United States. The request of the foreign minister to hold the NATO meeting in Bonn has not been carefully examined with a view to the risks involved. Before the American President had officially agreed to visit Berlin, the parties began to compete in suggesting further demonstrations of German-American friendship.

The environmentalists and the communists were the first to say they wanted to demonstrate against Reagan's visit. The Federal chancellor was so afraid that prominent Social Democrats would participate that he demanded punishment in such a case. The CDU said it would stage a counterdemonstration which would force the SPD to hold its own demonstration. But that was not all; the Parliament felt ignored, demanding that the President speak to the deputies. Since the Bundestag as a whole does not exist, every faction claims to have had this idea.

Whether there will be a special Bundestag meeting with Reagan is to be settled between the party, the faction chairman and the Bundestag president. What kind of a body is it that has become active before in connection with party financing problems and which is obviously supposed to replace the Presidium as well as the Council of Elders? You can dispute the sense or senselessness of all suggestions, but the zeal with which they are being made is embarrassing. It is high time to properly channel the discussion in the interest of German-American relations.

GREMETZ REVIEWS DELEGATION'S CHINA VISIT

LD111216 Paris Domestic Service in French 0640 GMT 11 Mar 82

["France-Inter's Guests" program, comprising interview with Maxime Gremetz, member of the PCF Politburo -- live]

[Excerpts] [Question] Good morning, Maxime Gremetz. You are a member of the PCF Politburo in charge of international relations, and you have just come back from China. The Chinese leaders invited you, and have also invited Georges Marchais to Beijing. This is a reconciliation after long years of quarreling. What in your opinion is of most interest to the Chinese: that the PCF is the Western communist party which has the best relations with Moscow, or the fact that French Communists are participating in government in a Western country?

[Answer] Well, I would say that from the 13 hours of important conversations we had with the main leaders of the CCP including deputy chairman, Li Xiannian, it is quite evident there is a willingness among the Chinese leaders, the Chinese Communist leaders, to progress towards reestablishment of relations with the communist parties. We had long discussions on one important issue -- the concept which today must govern relations between communist parties. And on this point I must say that we noted a full identify of views; that is, all of us have different positions, differences on important issues which we talked about very frankly. We agreed at the end of these talks that these differences, this diversity between communist parties today must not prevent the establishment and reestablishment, as far as we are concerned, of relations and cooperation between us.

[Question] Diversity. Perhaps, it is diversity that brings richness, but this is a time at which the CPSU, for example, and the Spanish or Italian Communist Parties are affirming more and more their differences. Are the Chinese concerned about this type of phenomenon? Do they hope to play a part, or to take advantage of these differences?

[Answer] I do not think that things are like that. I felt that the leaders of the CCP first took into account that the PCF is an important party which plays an important role in France and in Europe.

[Question] Are you on a median line, is that it?

[Answer] No, absolutely not. It is not a question of median lines, right or left. They think we play an even more important role in that we are also a party in government; above all their main question to us was: Do you accept that we should have differences and that we can collaborate? I would say to them: We do not harbor grudges. It was the Chinese leaders who broke it off 23 years ago. We have always invited them to our congresses, and, as you know, at the 24th congress there was a representative for the first time. The Chinese ambassador in France was there. It was a first step. We sent this delegation, and now there is an invitation for Georges Marchais to lead a PCF delegation to China. I think it is an excellent thing and that all workers will be glad, because China is a great country with a 1 billion population. I noted that they have the will to resolve very important problems. It is a very distant country, as you know, with a population of 1 billion unimaginable problems, and the will to find original solutions to meet its needs and to develop the country. They want to modernize the country and they want China to play an international role in accordance with its size. We found ourselves in agreement on an important question. They say "You want French-type socialism," that they paid great attention to our 24th congress and that they want a Chinese-type socialism. They have different problems to resolve: They are looking for appropriate solutions. We for our part are doing the same thing. That is a good thing.

[Question] Is this also the solution to what is happening in Poland, for example, where there are difficulties -- each finally having his own communism?

[Answer] That is not the issue. Yes, there is an original search, and each country will build a socialist society. This appears evident to me.

I will simply add that we also dealt with international issues and we noted important differences which we debated very frankly. This is my conclusion: I would say it is very important that we agreed that on these issues we will continue to debate and the affirmation of our positions (?for each of us) will remain, that is quite evident.

PLO'S QADDUMI, CHEYSSON DISCUSS MITTERRAND TRIP

NC111429 Paris AFP in English 1415 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 11 Mar (AFP) — Faruq Qaddumi, the visiting Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) political affairs chief, and French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson today discussed French President Francois Mitterrand's visit last week to Israel, French sources said. After the 45-minute meeting, Mr Qaddumi expressed disappointment that France stressed the existence and security of Israel, rather than the "legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, victims of aggression."

Mr Qaddumi said the discussion was "frank," which is usually a diplomatic term to signify disagreement. The French side called it "cordial." Mr Qaddumi, [words indistinct] said a visit to France by PLO leader Yasir 'Arafat would be "inopportune under [words indistinct] circumstances." The matter was not discussed during his meeting with Mr Cheysson, he added.

The PLO has criticized Mr Mitterrand's speech before the Israeli parliament last Thursday as not recognizing explicitly the organization's claimed leadership of all Palestinians, as dissociating West Bank and Gaza Strip Palestinians from those in exile, and as not mentioning Palestinian suffering. The meeting was third between the two officials since the Socialists took power in France last May.

DEFENSE MINISTRY RELEASES ARMS EXPORT FIGURES

[Text] Paris, 11 Mar (AFP) — France's arms exports in 1981 earned 33,800 million francs (about 5,600 million dollars) of which 71.6 per cent was paid by countries in the Middle East and North Africa, Defence Minister Charles Hernu told the National Assembly's Defense Commission here today.

North America and countries in Western Europe bought 9.5 per cent of the total, and Latin American countries 7.4 per cent. Black Africa took 5.3 per cent of the total exports, and the Far East five per cent. Eastern European countries bought arms worth 400 million francs (about 66 million dollars) or 1.2 per cent of the total, but the minister did not give details of what equipment was involved.

The minister said that France's arms export policy was marked firstly by respect for deals already made so as to ensure the government's credibility, and then by a progressive change in direction towards helping selected countries to develop their own defensive system so that they could move away from alignment on either of the two superpowers, Defence Ministry sources said.

The minister also said that French arms sales were not conditional on political considerations, and he stressed that a commission chaired by Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy controlled all sales and transfer of technology. The minister noted that sales abroad are decisive in enabling French forces to be equipped at an acceptable cost.

Informed observers, noting that the Socialist administration took office early in the summer of last year, said the sales figure for 1981 was slightly lower than in 1980 although no official figures were published for that year.

KKE DELEGATION RETURNS FROM SYRIA, LEBANON

NC101605 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 10 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] The KKE delegation under Secretary General Comrade Kharilaos Florakis returned to Athens last night from its official visit to Syria and Lebanon. The previous evening the delegation attended a working dinner given in its honor by PLO Executive Committee Chairman Yasir 'Arafat. Comrade Florakis had an interesting conversation with Yasir 'Arafat lasting many hours. The meeting discussed the complicated and dangerous situation that has been created in the eastern Mediterranean, the Middle East and the Gulf area as a result of the imperialist presence and activities.

Prior to its departure, the delegation met with a delegation of the Lebanese Communist Party. Comrade Florakis had a conversation with Lebanese Communist Party Secretary General George Hawi. The two delegations drafted a joint communique which will be released shortly.

Answering a question by a newsman on arrival in Athens, the KKE secretary general stressed: "I find it very difficult to give a precise description of the atmosphere prevailing in this region. Its main characteristics are the determination and the firm will of the Palestinian people to achieve their national vindication; the unity and close cooperation of all -- without exception -- the democratic and progressive forces, parties and national liberation organizations of Palestine, Lebanon and Syria to confront the plots of American imperialism and Zionism. We had contacts and discussions with all these parties and organizations. They displayed special interest in the political situation of our country and asked for Greece's active support for their struggle. The primary and main question by all, by both the leaders and the press, was: What is Greece going to do? Will it remove the U.S. bases?"

NC112228 Paris AFP in English 2216 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Text] Athens, 11 Mar (AFP) -- Two Iranian nationals seeking political asylum were refused entry to Greece at the Athens International Airport today, an informed source close to the police reported.

The source said that the Iranians, who said they opposed the current Tehran regime, had arrived from Milan and flew back to Italy after being refused entry to Greece.

Police refused to confirm or deny the report. The identity of the Iranians was not disclosed.

EVREN DEEMS YUGOSLAV RELATIONS 'VERY GOOD'

LD111256 Belgrade TANJUG in English 1106 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Text] Ankara, 11 Mar (TANJUG) -- Turkish head of state and president of the National Security Council, General Kenan Evren has assessed Yugoslav-Turkish relations as very good. In the opinion of General Evren, there are no political problems between the two countries. Turkey attaches special importance to the development and strengthening of relations with Yugoslavia on the basis of mutual respect and friendship, Evren added.

In an interview to a group of Yugoslav journalists who visited Turkey as guests of the Turkish Government, General Evren said that in certain domains Turkey and Yugoslavia share the same views. Both countries attach special importance to the strengthening of peace and cooperation in the world, just as they do where the Balkans and Europe are concerned.

There are real possibilities for the development of cooperation among Balkan countries, both bilateral and multilateral, General Evren said.

Turkey fosters hope that its problems with Greece will be settled by means of negotiations, through solutions which take into consideration the "balance in the rights and interests of both sides," the Turkish head of state said. A peaceful solution to the Cyprus problem, he said, can be reached only through negotiations between representatives of the Turkish and Greek communities on the island. "We support the creation of a bi-communal, bi-regional, independent and non-aligned republic through intercommunal negotiations and with the support by the United Nations," he specified.

As regards Turkey's foreign policy, the head of state said that a powerful and stable Turkey, as a NATO member and a country maintaining firm relations with both blocs, will continue to be a factor of secutiry and stability in this region.

U.S. MISSILE TESTS IN ALBERTA CONSIDERED

LD102210 Montreal International Service in English 1900 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Text] A spokesman for the Canadian Armed Forces says the Federal Government is considering allowing the United States to test its controversial Cruise missile in Canada. According to (Dave Kendal), testing may be carried out at the (Primrose) Air Weapons Range near Cold Lake in north eastern Alberta. Mr (Kendal) says that if the testing is approved it will be carried out only with unarmed missiles and not with missiles carrying nuclear weapons. External affairs officials in Ottawa confirm that negotiations are taking place on an agreement to test a number of American weapons, including the cruise missile, on Canadian territory, but they say no agreement is yet in sight.

SOVIETS AGREE TO LOWER CRUDE OIL PRICES

LD102102 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 2000 GMT 10 Mar 82

[Text] Retail prices of oil products will go down in the near future. The cut in the prices is as large as the increases in the retail prices at the turn of the year. The reductions are made possible by a considerable reduction in the price of Soviet crude oil. Agreement was reached in Moscow today on the new price for Soviet oil between Neste [state oil company] and the Soviet Soyuznefteeksport. Neste will, as socn as possible, put forward proposals for a reduction in the retail prices, and the National Board of Trade and Consumer Interests and the Council of State will then decide on the size of the reductions. On average, the reductions will probably settle at 4 penni per liter or per kilo in the various product groups. Neste will probably aim to reduce the price for high-octane gasoline by approximately 10 penni per liter.

UNITED KINGDOM

OPPOSITION 'FURIOUS' OVER INVITATION TO REAGAN

LD111732 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1540 GMT 11 Mar 82

[By Chris Moncrieff, PA chief political correspondent]

[Text] Mr Michael Foot, the opposition leader, bluntly told the prime minister this afternoon of his party's total opposition to the idea that President Reagan should address both houses of Parliament in Westminister Hall in June.

He made his party's opposition clear at a 20-minute meeting at 10 Downing Street with Mrs Thatcher and Lord Carrington, the foreign secretary.

Mr Foot was accompanied by his deputy, Mr Denis Healey, the shadow foreign secretary. The whole affair has now blown up into a grave embarrassment for Mrs Thatcher and her administration.

The opposition is furious that the government's invitation to the President to address both houses was made without consulting any other party in the House of Commons.

But the last thing the prime minister wanted to do is to offend the President over what, outside Britain, must appear to be an internal row which smacks of pettiness.

Mrs Thatcher's embarrassment started when a White House official inadvertently blurted out to a reporter that the invitation had been made to the President.

Mr Foot told the prime minister he and his colleagues regarded it as the British Government's fault that the present embarrassment had arisen.

He said that if she had contacted them in the first place the opposition would have expressed its objection and the whole episode might then have been avoided.

Mr Foot said that if the government was prepared to arrange for the meeting to be held elsewhere, like the Royal Gallery in the House of Lords, then the opposition would have less objection to it.

But he warned her that if she insisted on going ahead, there would be "a great deal of anger" not only in the House of Commons but outside as well. This means Mrs Thatcher may have to face the prospect of a massive boycott by the official opposition if the meeting is held in Westminster Hall.

The prime minister is reluctant to give any impression to the Americans that she is prepared to "downgrade" this event, but a boycott by the opposition could be even more embarrassing to her.

At today's meeting, Mrs Thatcher gave no indication of her reaction to the requests by Mr Foot.

FRANCE'S MAUROY URGES MORE COOPERATION

PM150835 Paris LE MONDE in French 7-8 Mar 82 p 4

[Dominique Dhombres and Philippe Lemaitre dispatch on French Premier Pierre Mauroy's 5 March press conference in Brussels: "We Are Suffering From a Lack of Europe"]

[Text] Brussels -- "We propose imparting a new boost to Europe. This is the message that I have come to deliver to the EEC." This was the "voluntarist" and "plain-spoken" tone with which Mr Mauroy, speaking at a joint press conference with European Commission President Thorn, on 5 March in Brussels, described the purpose of his visit to EEC headquarters -- a "normal" gesture of "good will," remarking that it would be the "first" of several.

Accompanied by European Affairs Minister Chandernagor, Mr Mauroy reasserted the major guidelines of France's stance on Europe first to France's two commissioners, Messrs Ortoli and Pisani, with whom he had luncheon; then to all the members of the commission at a working meeting a little later; and last, to Mr Thorn, at a private meeting. The formula, already used several times by the minister, was the following: "We are suffering not from too much but from too little Europe." In his opinion, "What European building needs now is faith, dynamism and political will."

Circles close to the premier did not conceal the fact that Mr Mauroy came to preach the good word in Brussels, though he still hoped to avoid appearing to lecture, which is always annoying. The premier intended to convey the message of the French left, which has been in power since 10 May, to the maze of Europe's administrative corridors, while respecting the legitimate sensitivities of the incumbent officials but without thereby diluting the message too much. He stressed that his visit "followed on from and reinforced the French memorandum on recovery." In this momorandum, sent in October to EEC partners and to the commission, Paris suggested joint actions in the social, industrial and monetary fields and urged a joint external economic policy.

The premier chose to emphasize the need to take new joint initiatives against unemployment: "The EEC must guarantee 16-18-year-olds a job or training, because great attention must be paid to these young people, who have no interest in Europe ... perhaps because Europe does not concern itself with them." He urged the commission to submit proposals, and he included an element of criticism in his message: "The commission must not hesitate to propose political advances. It must not satisfy itself with being the haughty defender of the treaty."

No Protectionist Policy

The premier expressed the hope that this desire for progress and not to restrict the EEC's activity to the examination of contentious matters will inspire all member-states, particularly Britain. After recalling France's position in the dispute on Britain's contribution to the EEC budget -- a compensation which must be no higher than the ones already agreed in 1980 and then in 1981, which must be limited to a few years and which must decrease -- he emphasized in particular the need to prevent this problem causing deadlock: "We must not stop moving ahead in Europe. There is no better solution to the difficulties encountered than a real capacity for production and progress in the direction of the future."

In reply to two questions Mr Mauroy vigorously reasserted his government's determination not to jeopardize the EEC's internal free trade. With regard to the "recovery of the internal market" -- a slogan, he pointed out, which was invented during the election campaign and which can provide an inaccurate picture of the action undertaken -- Mr Mauroy gave assurances that "It is quite impossible to speak in terms of a protectionist policy," adding that "What we want -- together with everyone else -- is a voluntarist industrial policy."

With regard to the "wine war," Mr Mauroy did not have the time to study in detail the European Court of Justice's decision against France. "The government," he announced, "will observe the court's findings, but it must not cause people to forget that a reform of regulations governing the wine market is needed to balance supply and demand and to encourage a quality product." France and the commission have issued some very similar proposals in this direction (obligatory cheap distillation of the start of the season in the event of harvests exceeding requirements). Mr Mauroy requested that they be examined.

CHEYSSON AGAINST FORMALIZATION OF NORWAY TIES

[Text] "I am against a formalization of Norway's relationship with the foreign policy cooperation of the 10 EEC countries," French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson said at a press conference in Oslo yesterday evening. "I do not want to classify the countries outside the EEC by their relationship to the community. The various countries have different interests in this respect," said Cheysson, who is paying a 30-hour visit to Norway. He expressed his great interest in political contacts with all West European nations outside the EEC.

Norway has direct informal contacts with the foreign policy cooperation of the 10 EEC nations. Contact is maintained through regular meetings with whichever country is chairman nation of the EEC Council of Ministers. During his visit to Brussels early in the year Norwegian Foreign Minister Svenn Stray reached agreement with the EEC Council of Ministers' present chairman, Belgian Foreign Minister Leo Tindemans, on more frequent contacts on foreign policy cooperation than had been the case in the year since Norway's contacts with this cooperation were established.

Cheysson said that Norway could continue its foreign policy cooperation contacts with the EEC, but he attached great importance to the fact that the bilateral contacts between Norway and individual EEC nations on political questions should be preserved. The French external relations minister's statements clearly indicate that Norway should probably not have exaggerated expectations for the development of Norway's relationship with The Ten's foreign policy cooperation.

"The Madrid talks should continue as long as they are useful," the French external affairs minister said, commenting on the decision that the meeting be adjourned until November, and will then be entering its third year. The fact that the East European countries were unable to silence the others demonstrates the importance of the Helsinki Agreement and of continuing the conference, he said. Foreign Minister Stray said that Norway was hoping for a positive end to the Madrid talks, but pointed out that an adjournment now would be useful.

Cheysson arrived in Oslo Monday afternoon and proceeded directly to political talks with his Norwegian counterpart on international questions. Later talks were expected to cover bilateral issues between the two countries. For his part Cheysson stressed that ministerial contacts in four separate areas in the coming months would cover questions concerning oil and gas, industrial cooperation, scientific cooperation and possible joint projects, and cultural cooperation.

"France wishes to go much further in its relations with Norway as far as increasing its gas imports are concerned," Cheysson said. Today he will travel to Stavanger, where he will inspect the Statfjord C Platform presently under construction.

This morning he will have an audience with King Olav. The external relations minister will also have talks with Prime Minister Kaare Willoch and with Labor Party Chairman Gro Harlem Brundtland. Cheysson is the first French minister to visit Norway since the Socialists came to power in France.

LIBYAN COLONEL AL-QADHDHAFI'S VISIT CONTINUES

Luncheon Banquet Speeches

LD121546 Tripoli JANA in English 1450 GMT 12 Mar 82

[Text] Vienna, 12 Mar (JANA) -- Austrian Chancellor Dr Bruno Kreisky held a luncheon yesterday in honour of Colonel al-Qadhdhafi, leader of Al Fateh revolution. Colonel al-Qadhdhafi and Dr Kreisky exchanged speeches during the banquet where the leader said the following:

"I thank you, dear friend Chancellor Kreisky, for your words which reflected cordiality and understanding and rightly described our friendly relations.

"Since you visited our country, relations between our two countries have developed greatly and I hope my visit to Austria, the friendly country, will further contribute to our relations. I would like to express my and all the Libyans' satisfaction towards the progress of the relations between both countries. We only wish that such relations prevail among all peoples.

"We have to work together for the success of this policy which will replace the policy of blockade, provocation, threat and aggression, but, regrettably, this is the nature of imperialists and racists. They resign themselves to be a bitter enemy of peoples longing for peace and cooperation. We have no reservations whatsoever with Austria. I am very grateful for the hospitality and the friendly atmosphere we received during our stay in Austria. And I felt we have real friends in this country at both the official and popular levels. There is no doubt this meeting will further boost this spirit.

"I highly appreciate your stand towards the Arab cause and the issue of world peace, cooperation and detente, generally. This is a positive policy that might solve the problem endangering world peace and cooperation, and as a result of this policy, Austria has maintained the neutrality and the respect of the world.

"I wish you good health and success in pursuing this constructive policy. I applaud the Arab-Austrian friendship and look forward to seeing you again in our country in good health."

In his speech at the banquet, Dr Kreisky said: "I was happy to read in a commentary by the Austrian Association of Industry today that the relations between Austria and the Jamahiriyah do not reap benefit simply for heavy industry but also affect Austria's small and private economic sectors.

"Perhaps it is not known by everybody that the economic relations between our two countries are strong and we take the opportunity of this visit to strengthen them further. I wish to add here that our ties will not be restricted to the economic sector in the future as we wish to strengthen our cooperation in the political spheres as well.

"My friendship with Colonel al-Qadhdhafi, which dates back to seven years, has been a boon in strengthening the relations between our two countries. This meeting is of great pleasure to me and I hope our relations will prosper in the future."

Libyan Minister Visits Voest

AU121833 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1700 GMT 12 Mar 82

[Werner Hofer report on 12 March visit by 'Umar Mustafa al-Muntasir, Libyan Secretary of Heavy Industries, to the Voest Corporation in Linz -- with recorded portions]

[Text] After the economic talks at the Linz plant of the Voest Alpine Corporation which lasted about 1 hour, there was no more doubt on the Austrian side.

It is possible to wind up even more business with the Libyans than previously believed, but the road there leads only via oil. Thus, Trade Minister Staribacher stated after the talks with the Libyans:

[Begin recording] Naturally the Libyans attach importance -- since their only export commodity is oil -- to the fact that we purchase more oil now if we are to place further contracts with the Libyans in excess of the deals worth 16 billion schillings which the Voest Alpine Corporation has already signed. I discussed this yesterday with Director General Apfalter as well as with Director General Bauer of the Austrian Oil Corporation, and I believe that we shall find joint avenues there. [end recording]

One of these avenues would be if the Voest Alpine Corporation -- through its intertrading trade company -- sells Libyan oil worldwide. Voest Director General Herbert Apfalter stated in this context:

[Begin recording] We have occupied ourselves with this subject for some time already because we saw how world economic developments in the oil sector would evolve and we possess very specific starting points here for selling considerable quantities of oil not in Austria but in third countries. [end recording]

As far as the price problem is concerned, Apfalter stated:

[Begin recording] This is clear in advance. We would not fix our eyes on such a deal in such a form unless it had been ensured that world market prices were adopted as a basis in both the oil sector and in Austrian exports to Libya. [end recording]

And a series of new deals are being envisaged for the near future, Apfalter stated in this context:

[Begin recording] Beyond all this we have particularly today found very interesting starting points, especially in the oil field installation sector. We believe that in the future we shall also get a chance in Libya with our new products which we are manufacturing in Kindberg. [end recording]

Sum total of the talks conducted here with the Libyan minister: The expectations have been fulfilled on the whole even though no contracts were signed.

Al-Qadhdhafi Speech at Dinner

LD121958 Tripoli JANA in English 1908 GMT 12 Mar 82

[Text] Vienna, 12 Mar (JANA) -- The Austrian chancellor, Dr Bruno Kreisky, held a dinner banquet yesterday in honour of Colonel al-Qadhdhafi and the delegation accompanying him at which the two leaders exchanged speeches. Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's speech started in the following way:

"My [words indistinct] Chancellor Kreisky, dear friends from the Austrian Officials, I wish to express my appreciation once again for the generosity and hospitality with which I have been met in your beautiful and friendly country. I also wish to express satisfaction for the fruitful talks held between us during [words indistinct] for your political and historical explanatory note.

"I should mention that Dr Kreisky is mainly to be thanked for the development of friendly relations between our two countries which started with his visit to Libya years ago. No doubt, my current visit to Austria will boost our relations further still. I would like the relations between our two countries to be a model for other European countries to emulate. It is not by accident that my first visit to a European country should be to Austria. This is because I believe Austria may be a link to an understanding with Western Europe, especially if we take my confidence in my friend the chancellor into account.

There is also the fact that Austria is respected for its neutrality and Chancellor Kreisky himself is a respected figure in international circles and someone whom I have found capable of understanding and defending truth. He has, moreover, known me personally for several years before any of his colleagues, for, there is the problem of those who do not understand us, but not in Austria. Here, I have found someone who understands us and has [words indistinct] of history."

Colonel al-Qadhdhafi referred to the French Revolution which changed the world and how at the time the revolution and the overthrow of the monarchy were considered to be crimes and blasphemy. The monarchies of all Europe united against revolutionary France at the time, he noted. However, he added, these same countries have all become republics today and now consider the French Revolution to be the beginning of the new era and a landpost in the success of [words indistinct] Europe.

It has been, moreover, considered an event which has consolidated the rights of man and is recorded in history as a significant mark in the progress of civilization. Colonel al-Qadhdhafi continued: "This is the reason why it is possible to consider the Libyan revolution a cornerstone in a new era, the era of the jamahir (masses), and the beginning of the jamahiriyah states (states of the masses). It is considered to be a progressive step. This is what we believe and history will yet convince those not persuaded, as was the case with the French Revolution.

"We have found in Austria someone who comprehends the political and historical developments of the world. The Libyan revolution is considered to be one of these developments. This will be subsequently realised by those who are hostile to it."

Colonel al-Qadhdhafi described Libya's relations after the revolution as fruitful. He said: "Our Austrian friends can vouch for this as well as Western economic corporations. I think this applies to Western politicians as well but not to the U.S. I believe the U.S. authorities to be suffering from megalomania exactly in the same way as Hitler had been. However, I only hope this madness will not lead to the same catastrophe as that caused by Hitler.

"Analysts agree with me that the U.S. policy is characterised by terrorism. I find it unfortunate that a great country should pursue this disgraceful policy in this age. I condemn terrorism absolutely because my country is the victim of U.S. terrorism especially as terrorist movements are limited to Europe, especially Italy, Germany and Spain."

The leader said that although he did not support the method of these organisations, yet from the viewpoint of psychology and sociology, be believed that the reason for the rise of these terrorist organisations in the Western societies is justified. "I do not believe that the remedy is the way being tackled but it is the abolition of the psychological and social factors which brought these extremist organisations to life and, thus creating this sort of violence in the civilized societies."

He elaborated: "It is very infortunate that confusion is intentionally made between the legitimate struggle of peoples and terrorism. I consider the Palestinian struggle far from being terrorism because the Palestinians have been driven out of their homes by force and they have the right to resort to arms so as they return their usurped homes. This is a summary of the Palestinian cause. Nevertheless, I am very concerned about the world peace as a result of the Middle East conflict and the foolhardy policy of the new U.S. administration."

Colonel al-Qadhdhafi pointed out that the remaining years of the U.S. current administration are very serious on world peace since it favourably talks about the theatrical [as received] nuclear war which only means the destruction of Europe." "I personally support the new peace movement in Europe which opposes the deployment of the medium range nuclear missiles in Europe. As it seems, the U.S. hell is gradually transferred to Europe in the form of military bases, nuclear missiles and warships. It will be a great historic tragedy if the whole European civilisation is destroyed as the product of U.S. policy."

The leader added: "We should exert every effort to prevent this catastrophe. I regret that the prevailing language of a superpower like the United States is that of blockade, threats, provocation and aggression. This policy is very dangerous and we have to cooperate to counter it. We might have our differences on the world's issues, but this does not prevent us from cooperating so as to achieve joint benefits.

Colonel al-Qadhdhafi pointed out that the differences on certain international issues do not mean to stop cooperation. He said: "I appreciate the relations between our countries as an example to others to follow. I attach high hopes on Kreisky's efforts to share with me in consolidating the Arab-European relations and consequently the world peace. Because peace will be enhanced with normal relations among Europe, Africa and the Arabs, I believe this is quite possible and my country is prepared to cooperate in this respect."

The leader said that the U.S. economic blockade will deny revenues to many European countries which will affect their economies. There are economic establishments in Europe which have a size of trade with Libya which reaches billions and should these establishments take U.S. view and refuse the Libyan oil or reduce purchase, then these establishments and their countries will suffer economically.

Colonel al-Qadhdhafi concluded: "We made this clear in Austria, and I am returning to my country with nice memorable impressions of this visit, your people and government. I am quite convinced of the possibility of sound relations based on peace."

The Austrian chancellor, Dr Bruno Kreisky made a speech at the beginning of the banquet in which he praised the strong ties between the Jamahiriyah and Austria in various fields. He stressed that Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's visit to Austria is very important and will have great implications on the future of the relations between both peoples. It will also have long and short term effect on the quantitative development in general and cooperation among peoples.

He stressed the right of the peoples in self-determination and said: "We realize that the rights of the Palestinian people should be recognised."

Dr Kreisky pointed out that there were significant developments in history such as the French Revolution. These developments, he said, were criticised by those living in this era and tried to show them as negative. This is a serious trend, he went on, because one cannot ignore the significance and importance of that revolution in the people's history.

12 March Activities

AU122037 [Editorial Report] Vienna Domestic Television Service in German at 1830 GMT on 12 March carries a filmed report on the 12 March activities of Libyan leader Al-Qadhdhafi in Vienna. According to the announcer, the most important event today was another unplanned talk between Al-Qadhdhafi and Chancellor Kreisky. The talks, which opened just over an hour before the newscast, were at the Imperial Hotel where the Libyan state guest is staying. The announcer says that according to reports, problems in economic cooperation will be the primary subject of the discussions, the third between Kreisky and Al-Qadhdhafi. In particular, the Libyan wish for increased deliveries of Libyan oil to Austria is expected to come up.

Before the talks with the chancellor, Al-Qadhdhafi is said to have left the hotel on foot on an unscheduled stroll, proceeding to the inner city Graben area where he ran into some 200 demonstrators protesting against the death sentence for five Egyptians convicted of assassinating President as-Sadat. In addition, a Kurdish group reportedly paid a visit to Al-Qadhdhafi in his hotel this afternoon. Al-Qadhdhafi allegedly stated on this occasion that he endorsed not only the autonomy of Kurdistan, but also its independence and that he will always defend the rights of the Kurds. In addition, Al-Qadhdhafi reportedly underscored that the Kurds in Turkey, Iran, Iraq and Syria should cooperate. According to the announcer, all this is from a statement of the Kurds, since there is no information about this from Al-Qadhdhafi himself.

Today at noon Al-Qadhdhafi paid a visit to the Islamic Religious Center on the northern bank of the Danube in the immediate vicinity of UN City. The report then shows film footage of Al-Qadhdhafi arriving at the center and participating in the prayers. According to the announcer, Libyan Television was the only news service permitted to film inside the religious center. Shortly after 1300 the gates of the center opened and Al-Qadhdhafi and his entourage returned to the Imperial Hotel.

In other events, the announcer reports that Al-Qadhdhafi's wife went shopping this morning with her son. In conclusion, the announcer notes that Al-Qadhdhafi gave an exclusive interview to Austrian Television journalist Antonia Rados at 2330 11 March.

Third Round of Talks Ends

AU122142 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 2050 GMT 12 Mar 82

[Text] Chancellor Kreisky unexpectedly had another meeting tonight with Libyan revolution leader Al-Qadhdhafi, the third round in their talks. The more than 1-hour conversation took place at the Imperial Hotel. According to reports, problems of economic cooperation were primarily discussed. Most likely the Libyan wish to deliver more oil to Austria came up. The Libyan negotiators want to make this a prerequisite for large-scale purchases of Austrian products. Neither Al-Qadhdhafi nor Kreisky made any statement after the talks.

Al-Qadhdhafi TV Interview

AU122230 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 2140 GMT 12 Mar 82

["Exclusive interview" by Austrian TV correspondent Antonia Rados with Libyan leader Al-Qadhdhafi in Vienna 11 March -- recorded, in English with German subtitles]

[Summary] [Al-Qadhdhafi] "Good evening. I have the honor to introduce myself to my Austrian friends and through them to other people in Western Europe, and even, if I can, to Americans. This visit gives me a good chance to speak directly to you and to know me as I know you the first time now in the streets when you welcomed me warmly. Therefore, I thank you very much indeed for this warm reception that I got everywhere in Austria, particularly in this capital, Vienna.

"You know me through other inimical media, in fact, Zionist media and American media, and reactionay ones also. Of course they defame my picture, the picture of my revolution, of my country, and now it is a good chance for me and for you also to clarify this picture and to know us directly, to know the facts.

"They told you I am a terrorist, my country is playing a destructive role in international policy. I tell you now it is not true, absolutely. I am leading a popular revolution to implement socialism and to realize freedom and democracy for the masses. But of course this revolution is against reaction and against imperialism, and against racism. Therefore all these -isms, racism, imperialism and reaction, are working together against me and against my revolution, against my country, also. I love peace. I, I [Al-Qadhdhafi repeats himself] wish peace for all peoples in the world and I hope one day comes when we can get rid of terrorism and imperialism and racism in the world.

"They told you also I support the terrorist groups in Western Europe, like Red Brigades and so on, which is not true, completely. I am against these actions. Although I know there are physical reasons that created these, these [Al-Qadhdhafi hesitates] groups, but I am against terror and their actions absolutely, and no one has to support terrorism.

"We have good relations with these countries within which there are these terrorist groups. We have good relations with Italy, Germany, Spain, and they never complain against us that we support these terrorist groups. You hear it from America and from Israel and many many other propaganda defaming the victor [as heard] of my country, of me. I am very grateful to my friend Kreisky who invited me and gives me this chance to talk to you directly and to know me.

"They said also we -- I told you -- we support terrorism because we support the Palestinians. It is true we support Palestinians because they have a just cause."

[Question] Colonel, what is for you personally the difference between a liberation front and terrorism against Western democracy?

[Answer] "I see the struggle of peoples for independence, for freedom which is just causes and we have to support, but terrorism which is not a just cause, a cause of people to restore its independence, to restore its dignity. Groups (?react) violently against the society. It is terrorism that we must not support."

[Question] A couple of years ago a former German terrorist named Joachim Klein wrote a book that he had been treated as a statesman while visiting Libya. Is that true?

[Answer] No, it is not true. It is not true, completely.

[Question] But there has never been a denial by the Libyan authorities.

[Answer] "No. No, we have nothing to do with such people, completely."

[Question] The Reagan administration has repeatedly accused you of supporting terrorism and imposed an embargo on Libyan oil a few days ago. Do you think this may lead to a military conflict?

[Answer] "I have emphasized many times that the policy of this new American administration is a childish policy and we express our concern for the peace, because of this childish policy that is carried out by this administration. Yes, they may invade my country and they may invade other countries. We cannot expect the behavior of this American Administration, because it is an unreasonable one. [as heard] In that case, my country will be a victim of this American aggression and we have to defend our country and to demand support from others to help us."

[Question] What do you mean by others?

[Answer] "Other peoples that, that are against aggression, against imperialism and thus..."

[Question] Do you mean the Soviet Union?

[Answer] "We hope that it will not be the need to demand, to demand help from them. But in the necessity, we will not hesitate to demand help from them, against America."

[Question] You are now here in Vienna visiting Chancellor Kreisky and had a very warm reception. Some people say that it means that Libya is trying to establish contacts with Western countries. Do you see it in this way?

[Answer] Yes, I see it like that, and I hope it will be a beginning there of cooperation and mutual understanding between us and Western Europe through Austria and through our friend Kreisky personally.

[Question] Colonel, you have been a very controversial personality. Some people say you are a strong nationalist, others say you are a revolutionary. What would you say?

[Answer] Our Austrian friends can know me through my, through my work, and they can know who is me, but anyhow I am a revolutionary: I am against imperialism, against racism, against reactionary regimes, and I struggle for freedom and for happiness for all human beings, and against war, against this manner to solve international problems by force, by war, by boycotting and so on.

"I call for international understanding. I believe in negotiations and [word indistinct] discussion between the parties who are in conflict, in case of a conflict."

[Question] You always stress the importance of Islam. What is the importance of religion in your policies?

[Answer] "It is another thing that in life, in political life, I stand for freedom regardless of religion what is it [as heard], for freedom and happiness and equality of all peoples. But I believe religion is an important thing in my life. And I respect all religions, Christianity, Judaism and Islam. I believe in all these religions and in all the prophets of these religions. It is in the Koran that we have to believe in Jesus, Moses and Muhammad. They are equal in the Koran. As a Muslim, I cannot be a Muslim if I do not believe in Jesus and Moses, Muhammad, Judaism, Christianity and Islam."

[Question] Apart from the Koran, your Green Book is very important in your country. Could you explain it to the Austrians?

[Answer] The Green Book is a guide, a guidance, of this new era of masses that I spoke about. It is a method for peoples to get rid of all these prejudices, economic social and political prejudices now on the individual and on the peoples. It is a book of three parts. Part one brings the final solution of the democracy, by establishing the people's authority. As I said, when all the masses (?rejects) the power, if the power conflicts in this society politically.

And the second part is bringing the final solution for social problems. They have to read it to know this theory.

"The third part for social problems is a (?new theory) after Marxism and after capitalism. I think it is the solution of the future. This Green Book will clarify the way of the freedom and happiness and new socialism in the world. I invite my friends in Austria and other places in the world to read this Green Book and its examinations which is coming after it, to know this third world theory."

[Question] The Green Book talks much about happiness and peace, but we live in a world full of conflict. Some people say that the next world war may be started in the Middle East. What do you think?

[Answer] I mention this crisis presently now in this interview. I tell you that this crisis may cause a third world war. And we have to fight this disaster by solving the Palestinian problem, by giving the Palestinians their land, their homes and recognize them, to establish their national state on their land.

[Question] In case of a conflict, do you personally think the Arab world would be ready to use a nuclear bomb?

[Answer] They are not. But the other side is ready to use it. I mean the Israelis. They are making now nuclear bombs in (Timona), they said.

[Question] There have been reports that the Pakistanis are building a nuclear bomb with Libyan money. It is true?

[Answer] No, it is not true at all. I heard about this propaganda. One of the bad propagandas to defame us.

We are against manufacturing nuclear weapons and we call for destroying these available nuclear weapons now which are in the hands of these nuclear countries. And it is a historical crime, a historical crime to manufacture these nuclear weapons. We have to use nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, and to stop this crime of manufacturing nuclear weapons everywhere in the world. We are against this solution.

[Question] Asking a personal question: Is there a politician or a leader who is an ideal to you?

[Answer] There is not a particular one, but many personalities in the history may have affected me, affected me from the East and the West, from Arabs and from other countries.

[Question] Could you name some?

[Answer] Of course, you mean An-Nasir because he was very close to us and a leader of the Arab nation.

[Question] What about Mao Zedong?

[Answer] Yes, he is a great man and he did much better. But he failed finally unfortunately. Abraham Lincoln, George Washington. Before Mao Zedong, there was Sun Yat Sen, who created a republic in 1912 in China, the Republic of China, the first Republic of China. I studied his history and I studied the history of Abraham Lincoln, George Washington, Cromwell, An-Nasir, Mao Zedong and many others.

[Question] Is there any live politician you admire?

[Answer] No, there very rarely was Tito, but lost him. [as heard] But I have friends of them but not like this that I mentioned.

[Question] Do you have the impression that Mubarak is following a more pro-Arab policy?

[Answer] I think so. I think more pro-Arab.

[Question] Does your recent opening of borders mean that you wish to resume contacts with Mr Mubarak?

[Answer] Not direct contact, but we tried to give facilities for Egyptians who are working in Libya, workers and teachers and so, and we opened the borders between us.

[Question] The last question, what does policy [as heard] mean to you and do you like it?

[Answer] No, I dislike policy. I am revolutionary and I have no authority at all, administratively or...

[Question] You are the most known Libyan citizen in all the world.

[Answer] Yes I give the authority to the people. Now the authority in Libya is in the hands of people's conferences and people's committees. But I am leading the revolution to incite the masses to carry out, to carry on the authority, and the mechanism of policy I dislike. I also dislike the military but I was obliged to be an officer to make the revolution against the foreign military bases and against the reactionary regimes, the monarchy, and to give, to restore the wealth of my country for to be exploit for the benefits of my country that are happening now to through the revolution [as heard].

[Question] Thank you.

[Answer] Thank you for giving me this chance.

Departs From Schwechat

Kreisky Press Conference

AU131400 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1114 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Ronald Machatschke coverage of Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's press conference at Schwechat Airport 13 March following departure of Libyan leader Al-Qadhdhafi -- live]

[Text] [Kreisky] First of all, I would like to say that the expectations I staked on this visit have been fulfilled to the highest degree. I think, gentlemen, you should know that the economic relations between Libya and Austria were the prerequisite for this visit -- namely, particularly good relations. That was the prerequisite. What happened was not that we made it our aim to establish such relations here, but we made allowance for a development which, interestingly, looks like this -- which is often overlooked -- that ultimately we have imported 3.7 million schillings worth of goods from Libya. Of course mostly oil, but not only oil, while we have always supplied to Libya just 2.3 billion schillings worth of goods [presumably annually]. Thus, it is nothing new that they supply oil to us and we pay for it, and that we apply all kinds of products to them and they pay for that. Nothing will change in this respect in the future, either.

Now it is the Libyans' wish -- just as we naturally wish it for ourselves -- that we buy more from them and they, in turn, are ready to buy more from us. Let me warn you against believing that -- because oil prices are fluctuating -- oil is not a special commodity. That will be the case in a few months time again. The price of gold is also fluctuating, as you know, and yet no one dares say on account of that that gold is worthless.

At the same time, or simultaneously, we have had very valuable economic talks, and there can be no doubt whatever that Austria will also participate very substantially in the future in Libya's economic development. Just keep in mind that the Voest order -- worth 13 billion schillings alone, an order which was placed long ago -- means jobs for 3,000 people at the Voest Corporation for 5 years. Moreover, the Voest is acting as main contractor in this gigantic project to some extent, and naturally also benefits from that.

It should not be overlooked, either, that we have very large cattle exports to Libya, and the way in which the Austrian People's Party [OEVP], in particular, has acted in this connection is astonishing and does not serve the interests of Austrian farmers. Remember that in 1979 we exported 32,000 head of cattle to Libya, worth 250 million schillings, and that last year we also exported 24,000 head of cattle worth 200 million schillings -- I beg your pardon, in 1981, 22,000 head of cattle worth 250 million schillings. In other words, if we did not have Libya, we would hardly know what to do with our cattle deliveries. Then we would depend solely on the Italian market, and you know what happens to us there every now and then.

Moreover, we have had tremendous coniferous lumber exports to Libya -- here, I must say that not all firms always fulfilled the contract stipulations, and they had to realize that the Libyans also know something about these matters. In other words, we have a wide range of exports, and even the Austrian Manufacturers Association, which normally in its press releases is quite critical of the government, has seen fit to speak of the special aspects of the Libyan market for the small and medium-sized enterprise and to say that they have been very successful. There -- [I am saying this] because the impression has been created as if all that were only for the nationalized and big industry.

Thus, Libya is an economic partner which, it is true, has certain difficulties at present. I do not want to deny that. Libya's budget is based on the sale of a certain number of barrels of oil, and if this sale of the desired or earmarked quantity does not take place, certain items in the budget must be canceled. That has led to difficulties with Saudi Arabia -- but this, too, will pass, for, it is my impression from these talks that it is Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's wish to also return to better relations with Saudi Arabia, just as with Malta and others.

Thus, our talks have covered a very wide range, and I am firmly convinced -- and I may say this without being indiscreet -- that Al-Qadhdhafi and Libya have expressed by this visit to Austria the wish to enter into a new type of relations with Europe, with the European democracies. Whether this will succeed, and how quickly it will succeed, is something no one can tell. For my part, I believe that it would be reasonable if some basis for talks with all states were found, and that does not seem to be so hopeless. So much for that.

I am aware of the fact that this visit -- I openly said so in my toast -- has evoked divided opinions, but for about 30 years I have been used to the fact that at first I have been again and again subjected to very violent polemics, and later on all this has looked quite different. As far as I am concerned, I will stick to this policy even after Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's departure -- just so there are no errors in that respect.

[Question] Mr Chancellor, could you please comment on the foreign political turbulences which were caused by this visit in the United States?

[Answer] I don't think there are foreign political turbulences -- all I have heard is that an interest has been taken in this visit, that the Austrian ambassador has been spoken to. And we will certainly be spoken to as a self-assured democratic state. Indeed I have not concealed how closely we fell linked particularly with the United States; especially in my talks with Al-Qadhdhafi I have said that, although we are a neutral state, there would be no need for us to stress that close relationship. But we are doing so because we feel most deeply obligated [verpflichtet] to the U.S. democracy.

[Question] Thus, you do not regard this as a criticism of Austria's policy....
[Kreisky interrupts]

[Answer] Oh yes....

[Question] ...that the ambassador has been summoned?

[Answer] It may well be that this was a mild form of criticism, but ladies and gentlemen, we all must be used to that -- we must be able to stand criticism, and the gentlemen in Washington must be able to stand criticism.

Summary of Press Conference

AU131430 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1158 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Roland Machatschke report reviewing Chancellor Kreisky's press conference at Schwechat Airport on 13 March]

[Text] While Chancellor Kreisky is giving interviews in the rear part of the room, here is a short summary of this improvised press conference, which Kreisky has given in German and in English for foreign journalists. One question he was asked was whether he had any message for President Reagan after his talks with Al-Qadhdhafi. That would be an overstatement, Kreisky said, but if his American friends were interested in more details about the visit, he was prepared not to conceal anything.

Kreisky added that he was not a postman, but that he was ready to discuss with the Americans all so-called secret details. Al-Qadhdhafi knows of our close relations with the United States, Kreisky said literally, adding that we have no secrets from leading politicians in the United States.

Then the question was asked whether it was in good taste on the part of Al-Qadhdhafi to make such unfriendly remarks in Vienna, of all places. Kreisky replied that he did not like those kinds of insults, either, but one should read what the U.S media were writing and had written about Al-Qadhdhafi. To the question whether Chancellor Kreisky will act so to speak as an intermediary for Al-Qadhdhafi with other European countries, he said that he did not want to be an unasked mediator, but that he was convinced that his colleagues, prompted by the natural curiosity of politicians, would occasionally ask him how the visit had gone. He added that he would not keep anything secret from friendly governments. It will be just as it was after his earlier visits to the GDR and to European communist countries, he said. All those who are interested will be informed; there should be no cause for distrust to develop. They would know all about it even if they had been skeptical initially.

An important question: Were arms deliveries to Libya discussed? Kreisky said: Not by him; he did not discuss such things, but there had been talks. He did not know whether there would be any results, but the Austrian Government would approve such deals if the requirements of neutrality and of valid laws were met, if Libya were not in a state of war, and he added that the part of the world where Libya is situated was playing a decisive part in preserving peace: It was grotesque that on the one hand Al-Qadhdhafi was treated with distrust and was abused, while on the other hand Israel was preparing a military blow against poor -- as he said literally -- Lebanon, and nothing was said about this. Kreisky added that this was an attitude which was not understood in Libya.

Asked whether Israel's right to existence was discussed between him and Al-Qadhdhafi, Kreisky said yes, but there was only one single point on which they agreed, namely, that both sides spoke of the legitimate rights of the Palestinians which should be respected, but there was no agreement as to how this should be achieved. But, should an understanding be reached between the PLO and the Israeli Government, then it would not be torpedoed by Libya, Kreisky said.

This ends our brief summary of Chancellor Kreisky's press conference.

EASTERN SPOKESMAN CALLS FOR ACTION AT MBFR

AU121822 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 12 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] The reduction of armed forces can only lead to detente if it is ensured by controls. This was stated by the Luxembourg chief delegate at the Vienna troop reduction talks at the 299th session of the Vienna conference on Thursday. An Eastern spokesman declared that the time had now come for the Vienna conference to act. He called for a Western reply to the draft treaty proposal [submitted by the East]. It seems, however, that NATO headquarters wants to reduce the troop reduction conference to a "discussion forum without authority for making decisions," the spokesman declared.

PAPER ANNOUNCES SCHMIDT WILL RUN AGAIN IN 1984

LD121914 Hamburg DPA in German 1859 GMT 12 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Essen, 12 Mar (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt (SPD) is apparently resolved to run for chancellor once more in 1984. According to a report in the WESTDEUTSCHE ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG, published in Essen, Schmidt told about 40 SPD Bundestag deputies of his party's leftwing in Bonn on Thursday evening that he is wondering whether it is right to announce already that he intends to stand again 1984.

Schmidt addressed the North-Rhine Westphalian representation in Bonn. His announcement to run for chancellor in 1984, the paper reports in its Saturday edition, quoting some of those present, was strongly applauded.

CSU CHAIRMAN STRAUSS LEAVES FOR VISIT TO U.S.

LD140918 Hamburg DPA in German 0810 GMT 14 Mar 82

[Text] Munich/Washington, 14 Mar (DPA) -- CSU Chairman and Bavarian Minister-President Franz-Josef Strauss left Munich today for the United States. Just a few days after the visit of Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP) Strauss will meet with leading U.S. politicians. He will return Friday.

The high-point of the visit will be a meeting with U.S. president Ronald Reagan. Strauss will also have talks with Secretary of State Alexander Haig; Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger; Treasury Secretary Donald Regan; and Security Adviser William Clark. The CSU chairman was last in the United States when he was CDU/CSU candidate for the chancellorship.

Before he began his trip Strauss has taken a critical stance on U.S. policy. Against the background of American objections to the German-Soviet natural gas pipeline deal, Strauss said in the BILD AM SONNTAG newspaper that American credibility would be greater "if the United States were to conclude no more contracts on grain supplies to the Soviet Union and thus end grain supplies."

BRANDT CONTINUES SUPPORT FOR DUAL DECISION

[Text] Bonn,11 Mar (DPA) -- SPD Chairman Willy Brandt has, before the April party congress in Munich, urged his party to keep to the NATO dual decision on European medium-range weapons, which is hotly disputed within the party. Addressing an SPD forum on the Bundeswehr in Bonn today, Brandt said that the decision forms the basis of the Geneva negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on these weapons. "To call it into question could only reduce the chances for the success of the negotiations," he said. The SPD must do its utmost to encourage the Geneva negotiations and ought to refrain from anything that could have a harmful influence on the readiness of the great powers to negotiate.

Brandt also warned against the demand, especially by the leftwing of the SPD, for a party decision now in favor of a moratorium on medium-range weapons. But he also stressed the SPD's concern that new weapons systems not be continually deployed during the negotiations. "I would regard a decision by the Soviet Union to halt the deployment of new medium-range missiles as an encouraging signal pointing toward such an agreement."

Brandt stated his commitment to the Bundeswehr and to national defense on behalf of the SPD and noted that his party has made considerable contributions toward binding the armed forces into the democratic state. He said that safeguarding an approximate balance and maintaining the military capability for deterrence, linked with a consistent policy of renunciation of force and detente, are the basis of Social Democrat security policy. He said that the SPD equally rejects both unilateral superiority and unilateral disarmament.

Brandt insisted strongly that NATO adhere to its "binding and still valid" task laid down in 1967 of linking military security with the effort for the expansion of detente and for disarmament. Anyone who wants to change this NATO policy must discuss it in the alliance, he said, obviously alluding to the United States. "Even the by far strongest partner cannot determine the direction alone."

Brandt said that the Bundeswehr is not at all affected by the aimed-for process of disarmament in the field of nuclear weapons and only marginally by a reduction of troops in Europe. However, this should not prevent NATO also seeking ways to link military security and disarmament in the sphere of conventional weapons. As a defensive army the Bundeswehr knows that the security of the Federal Republic depends on the struggle to safeguard peace. "This is why disarmament is also part of its business."

Federal Defense Minister Hans Apel also stressed the NATO concept of "defense and detente," to the forum, stating that it is valid because it has proved itself. The best guarantee for the effectiveness of the deterrent in times of crisis is also an approximate military balance, which it is hoped will be achieved at the lowest possible arms level. This principle also applies to the hotly debated NATO dual decision.

He said that German defense does not contradict detente policy and efforts for arms control. The service of the Bundeswehr soldiers is indispensable for the country's security. Apel conceded that the financial constraints of the budget do not make it easy for the Bundeswehr to fulfill its difficult mission. However, expenditure of DM44.3 billion does make it possible for the Bundeswehr to guarantee external security this year too. He gave the assurance that the Bundeswehr will continue to receive the means it needs to fulfill its task.

Brandt and Apel urged that questions relating to the Bundeswehr and the armed forces be included more in public discussion about security and peace policy. Apel urged the soldiers to face up to this discussion and to join in it. He expressed concern at the "intractability and absolutist claims" of many critics of the security policy, even though they are minorities. He said that the great majority of the population has a stable trust in the Bundeswehr.

COMMUNICATIONS EXERCISE BEGINS IN EUROPE

LD131106 Hamburg DPA in German 0947 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 13 Mar (DPA) -- The warning services of the Federal Republic and several other European countries today started a 2-day international exercise which will go unnoticed by the general public. According to the Federal Office for Civil Defense in Bonn the exercise, "Intex 82," is concerned with methods of communications and operational tests of the cross-frontier information system. In the Federal Republic, methods for informing the population involve, in addition to the warning service, the German Meteorological Service, land and federal authorities, several broadcasting stations and territorial army facilities.

CDU/CSU FIGURE DOUBTS EFFICACY OF SANCTIONS

LD121644 Hamburg DPA in German 1557 GMT 12 Mar 82

[Text] Duesseldorf, 12 Mar (DPA) -- Walther Leisler Kiep, CDU/CSU Bundestag group deputy chairman, doubts that Western sanctions against the Soviet Union will be successful. Addressing a gathering of German and British businessmen, Kiep said in Duesseldorf on Friday that Moscow, even under pressure, would make no concessions but rather decide to achieve full self-sufficiency. According to Kiep, the Western alliance must find its way to a clear position toward the Soviet Union. The West, Kiep said, ought to offer long-term cooperation in exchange for a moderate international policy by Moscow.

GENSCHER SEES PARTY GROWING CLOSER TO CDU/CSU

LD141122 Hamburg DPA in German 0957 GMT 14 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 14 Mar (DPA) -- The chairman of the Free Democrats, Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, sees a growth of shared views between his party and the CDU/CSU. There is no doubt that the Union has moved behind the government's policy toward the East, Genscher said over the weekend in an interview with the editors of the HANNOVERSCHE ALLGEMEINE ZEITUNG. On the question of whether he foresees difficulties in continuing his Eastern policy in concert with the CDU/CSU, he said: "Not if the Union continues to follow this tendency." But, Genscher went on, the CDU/CSU must sill go a little further, for there are "still some shrill notes." This, however, does not change the fact that, as Genscher said, "A rapprochement that is in principle gratifying" has taken place. On the other hand, he noted with concern that parts of the SPD are abandoning the joint foreign policy.

Genscher, who is also quoted in the latest edition of DER SPIEGEL as having said in regard to the future of the coalition that "in 1 or 2 months we will have another constellation," referred in the talk with the editors of the Hannover newspaper to what was initially a "fundamental resistance" in the CDU/CSU to the Eastern policy of the Federal Government. If one succeeds in winning over a disapproving opposition to one exhibiting growing support for government policy, then that is pleasing. He is not saying this "for superficial reasons connected with coalition policy," but "because it is good for our country," Genscher added.

MITTERRAND LEAVES FOR 24-HOUR U.S. VISIT

[Text] The president of the republic has just left for Washington at 1110. He left Roissy Airport on board a regular Air France Concorde flight. In the United States Francois Mitterrand will meet Reagan. The two men will hold a 3-hour working session. Francois Mitterrand will be back in France tomorrow morning.

This lightning visit will perhaps enable the smoothing out of divergencies between the United States and West Europe. Indeed, it is unprecedented that a French president should make a 24-hour return trip to Washington merely for a single working session, outside the usual formal framework of talks. Apparently, Mitterrand considers that Europe's increasing opposition to Reagan's policy in Central America and the consequences for Europe of U.S. economic policy justify an initiative by France.

Talks 'Particularly Frank'

NC131212 Paris AFP in English 1148 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 13 Mar (AFP) -- French President Francois Mitterrand arrived home today on a scheduled Air France flight fully staisfied with his lightning visit to Washington, but admitting that his talks with President Ronald Reagan on Central America had been "particularly frank."

"I feel the object of my meeting with President Reagan was fully achieved," Mr Mitterrand told newsmen at the airport, but said that on some subjects "little progress" was made. He added however that France wanted to be a "conciliatory factor, not a complicating factor."

Washington reacted with annoyance to a recent French Government decision to sell 20 million dollars worth of arms to Nicaragua, which the United States holds is a major supplier of weapons to leftist guerrillas in El Salvador.

France, on the other hand, has sternly criticzed U.S. policy in El Salvador, and holds that the rebels should be recognized as a legitimate political force.

On other issues, Mr Mitterrand said the three-hour talks had been "cordial, at times warm." Turning to economic issues, the president said that, as Mr Reagan had pointed out, differences between Europe and the United States cannot be ironed out in a day, but that he expected a first gesture -- a lowering of U.S. interest rates -- within two months.

He said that during this time he planned consultations with other leading industrialized partners, notably Canada and Japan. Japan's vast trade surpluses with its Western partners figured highly in Mr Mitterrand's talks in Washington.

The French president said he and Mr Reagan had also agreed on the "need to demonstrate unity and resolution in the face of Soviet expansionism." Mr Mitterrand, who questions the usefulness of economic blockades, said that the West must be armed with real power, and the Soviet [words indistinct] Real equilibrium will be reestablished."

Returning to Latin America, the president said that he had at least agreed with Mr Reagan that [words indistinct] government in this region "would have the gravest consequences." He added that the fact that he and Mr Reagan had broached the subject, would at least mean they would avoid major misunderstandings.

CONSERVATIVES WIN IN DISTRICT ELECTIONS

NC150835 Paris AFP in English 0643 GMT 15 Mar 82

Complete returns from the 1,945 cantons (constitutencies) at stake in mainland France showed conservative candidates netted 49.92 per cent of the vote, while candidates of the coalition government of Socialists, Communists and leftwing radicals, plus miscellaneous leftists, totaled 49.59 per cent.

The ruling Socialist Party, which won 37.5 per cent of the total vote in the June parliamentary elections, dropped down to 29.86 per cent yesterday, the Interior Ministry announced early today.

The leftist coalition government now faces the danger of having its program thwarted by conservative control of a majority of "general councils" (assemblies), the Socialist newspaper LE MATIN warned today.

This possibility is particularly worrisome because the new assemblies have been granted broader powers under the Socialist reform to decentralize government. LE MATIN pointed out: "For the first time, the departments willbe administered mainly by speakers of the assemblies rather than by the central government's prefects.

Despite the narrow edge in votes, the conservatives stood to win a majority of about 200 seats by the end of the runoff elections next Sunday, Interior Ministry figures showed. Runoffs are necessary in cantons where no candidate got more than half the votes yesterday.

The left had been expected to win most seats thanks to the recent reapportionment of cantons. (City cantons with as many as 20 times more voters than rural cantons were split into several cantons. Conservatives charged the reapportionment was a scheme to give more weight to leftist urban voters.)

Computer forecasts based on the first ballots counted had indicated yesterday evening that conservatives would defeat the left by a 51.5 to 47.5 margin. This prompted triumphant comments by Conservative leaders that citizens had "slapped the coalition government in the face," and were damanding a pause in "socialization."

Interior Minister Gaston Defferre complained bitterly that the computer projections had "fooled many Frenchmen." The Socialists gained nearly 4 per cent of the vote compared with the assembly elections in 1976, he pointed out, while the conservatives only gained 3 per cent.

The left's setback was due mainly to a plunge in popularity by the Communist Party, he noted. Its candidates got only 15.87 per cent. Nevertheless, LE MATIN newspaper conceded that the outcome was a "severe setback" for the coalition.

Socialist leaders blamed the setback on "mobilization of voters by rightists eager for revenge" after loss of power last June following 23 years of conservative administration.

There was much more mud-slinging than in any previous campaign for departmental assembly seats. Some 68.4 per cent of the voters cast ballots -- the highest figure in 30 years for cantonal elections.

Gaullist candidates got 17.97 per cent of the vote. Those of former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's Union for French Democracy (UDF) party got 18.8 per cent, while other conservatives got another 12.95 per cent extreme right wingers, 0.2 per cent. [sentence as received] Ecologists got 0.44 per cent of the vote.

Mr Giscard d'Estaing and former Prime Minister Jacques Chirac were both elected in yesterday's poll.

Gaullists and Giscardists agreed on joint candidates in most cantons to avoid splitting the conservative vote as was the case in the presidential election last May that resulted in victory for the Socialist candidate Francois Mitterrand.

SPADOLINI WINS LOWER HOUSE VOTE OF CONFIDENCE

AU131540 Rome ANSA in English 1508 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Rome, 13 Mar (ANSA) -- Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini's five-party coalition government won a confidence vote in the lower house, followed by the passage of a public works bill regulating housing and evictions. The government had tied the legislation, known as the Nicolazzi decree (after the name of Public Works Minister Franco Nicolazzi), to the confidence vote it won 352 to 237. The bill was then put up for a final secret ballot in which 337 deputies voted in favor, 243 against and 5 abstained.

Another issue that will test the cohesion of the present ruling majority is legislation favoring turncoat terrorists. The MSI-national right leadership has already released a document renewing its call for a leftwing alternative and announcing the start of a tough offensive against the present government.

The American official was said to have acknowledged that the current trade pattern in these areas is running seven to one in favor of the United States. The Italian defense chief came up with a series of proposals aimed at correcting this imbalance and asked for explanation [words indistinct] resolutions passed by the U.S. Senate which restrict foreign purchases. BULGARIAN EMBASSY DENIES LINK WITH RED BRIGADES

[Text] Rome, 12 Mar (ANSA) -- Bulgaria energetically rejects terrorism both at home and abroad and has denied any contact with persons engaged in such activities, according to a statement released by the Bulgarian Embassy in Rome. The denial was prompted by assertions made by Loris Scricciolo, an arrested Italian terrorist who is now cooperating with law officials. He claimed that his cousin Luigi Scricciolo and Luigi's wife Paola Elia were supposed to pass on secret information to a Bulgarian emissary in exchange for arms.

Italy's Red Brigades terrorist organization was said to have gleaned much of this data from their kidnap victim, U.S. General James Lee Dozier. Loris Scricciolo claimed that the couple, who work for the Italian Socialist and laic "UIL" trade union, negotiated with the Bulgarian throughout December and January. The pair already stand accused of subversive activity and membership in an armed gang.

KIPRIANOU ADDRESSES REFUGEES, RESPONDS TO ULUSU

NC141256 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 14 Mar 82

If, he added, there is no progress and the dialogue is led into a deadlock, then the Cyprus issue will be discussed at the UN General Assembly. We are systematically studying the true goals of a new discussion at this international forum. The other aspect of our policy, President Kiprianou said, as we resolved jointly with the Greek prime minister, is to intensify our efforts toward mobilization of world opinion for the creation of the climate needed to exert pressure on Turkey. The president added that within the framework of internationalization the idea for an international conference for implementation of the UN resolutions will be promoted. Kiprianou praised the decisive support of the Greek Government and particularly of Prime Minister Papandreou toward Cyprus and called on those who undermine this cooperation to stop because, as he said, we will continue to protect it with determination as if it were the apple of our eye.

Replying to the provocative statements by Turkish Prime Minister Ulusu, the president emphasized that without a change in the policy and the philosophy of Turkey, a philosophy based on division, progress in the inter-Cypriot talks is impossible. As long, he added, as there is occupation and as long as the Turkish Cypriot leadership is being directed by Ankara, total responsibility for the lack of progress will not rest on the ordinary Turkish Cypriots themselves but on Ankara and on those upon whom dictatorial Turkey fully depends.

Referring to the domestic front, President Kiprianou emphasized the importance of unity of goals and purposes. Underlining the correctness of the handling of the national issue by the government, the president emphasized that when we speak of unity this means unity of those who believe in the same goals. There cannot be unity, he added, with those who aspire to serve any foreign interests or their own personal interests. Addressing the Turkish Cypriots, President Kiprianou assured them that the struggle we are conducting for liberty and justice, for termination of the foreign occupation and for an honorable solution to the Cyprus issue is also the Turkish Cypriots' struggle.

The president then referred to the various problems facing the refugee world and said that in cooperation with the pan-Cypriot refugee committee, which is the only such committee we recognize, we will make every effort toward their solution. President Kiprianou also announced various measures for the refugees. Among other things, he said the program for housing the displaced persons will continue until the total abolition of the refugee camps. He also announced free secondary education for the children of displaced persons, a doubled subsidy for university education, expanded aid criteria for young refugee couples and a gradual repayment of refugee savings.

GOVERNMENT URGED TO DEAL WITH U.S. AS MAIN ENEMY

NC151014 Nicosia DHIMOKRATIA in Greek 15 Mar 82 p 3

[From the "Democratic" column: "They Must Be Ousted"]

[Excerpts] The U.S. administration has stated shamelessly in Congress that the stalemate in the intercommunal talks in Cyprus stems from Andreas Papandreou's assumption of power in Greece. The statement implies clearly that the Greek Cypriot side is equally responsible, since it cooperates on the Cyprus issue with the Greek Government. The government of the republic should not leave this impudent statement by the Reagan administration unanswered. Is is imperative that the government protest this gross falsification of facts. It would be inconceivable and impermissible for the government not to shout out in the face of Washington -- in answer to this monstrous allegation -- the truth about the intercommunal dialogue: That responsibility for the stalemate rests with Ankara, together with the United States which -- for the sake of its dirty aims -- supports Turkey and encourages its rapacity.

Because of all this, the government must protest strongly. With its actions and the whole of its Cyprus issue policy, the United States has proved to be the paramount enemy of Cyprus and, therefore, it should be faced as such by the Cyprus Government, as is natural and proper for every government to face its enemy. Not even the Kaffirs -- an incorrect reference, and we apologize to those peaceful people of Africa -- nor any primitive people of the jungle would tolerate from the United States, its declared enemy. We mean the presence of U.S. aircraft and airborne troops in Dhekelia and Akrotiri in contravention of the "treaty" that the British imposed on us in connection with the seizure of the two bases. We also refer to the use by the Americans of the big radar station at Troodos, which is the second most powerful in the world after the one in Okinawa. Moreover, we also refer to the spy stations the Americans maintain in various parts of the island, with absolutely no right and completely illegally. U.S. aircraft and airborne troops, spy stations and the so-called U.S. experts should by all means be removed from Cyprus territory. They constitute a threat to friendly neighboring nations, to peace -- a threat to Cyprus itself and its people. Given the fact of the U.S. hostility to Cyprus and collusion with the Attila aggressor, their presence -- aircraft, airborne troops and spy stations -- are the enemy within the walls!

U.S. Activities in North

NC150918 Nicosia I DHIMOKRATIKI in Greek 15 Mar 82 p 5

[Text] Reports from various Arab capitals, which are also confirmed by visits by diplomatic quarters to the occupied north, lead political observers to establish that the U.S. Pentagon is placing Cyprus in the zone of Turkey's military and political influence. Turkey is tied inseparably to the wagon of U.S. interests in this very sensitive area of the world. Specifically, according to the above-mentioned reports, the Americans are heading at full speed in two directions:

1. During recent months they have developed even further their special radio monitoring installations at Yerolakkos, Mia Milea and Karavas. Through regular visits by experts, the Americans are equipping these installations with the most modern radio monitoring devices which operate with automatic mechanisms for spying not only in the Middle East but also in the Balkans and, moreover, on the Soviet Union and other countries of the socialist community.

2. Many experts, some of whom also come from the U.S. Embassy here or the U.S. Embassy in Ankara, have recently increased their visits to the radio monitoring stations in the occupied Cyprus north.

3. It has been learned that in addition to the three spy stations, the Americans have also started establishing other military bases in the occupied area. These are equipped with ultramodern radar and other radio monitoring devices. They are also establishing "special military fields" (this term is used to avoid the unpleasant "war base") in which they install heavy guns, modern antitank guns and antiaircraft batteries.

4. These reports are supplemented by the fact that the Americans, at exactly the same time they are threatening to suspend all economic aid to Cyprus, are granting huge amounts to the Denktas pseudoadministration as "compensation" for the fact that the Turkish authorities in the north are taking appropriate measures to keep these U.S. military activities secret.

5. At the same time, it has been learned that all the U.S. experts in Cyprus are coordinating their actions with their colleagues at U.S. military installations in Turkey and Jordan.

6. The general conclusion drawn by political observers around this orgy of U.S. military activities is that the U.S. Pentagon today is giving top priority to the creation of further tension in the Middle East, where the Arab Gulf oil continues to be the "apple of discord." Undoubtedly, the same circles stress, all these activities do not reflect at all, nor do they serve, the true interests of Cyprus, which sees these activities as making its liberation struggle even more complicated.

PAPANDREOU REPLIES TO ULUSU REMARKS ON RELATIONS

NC131748 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1600 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Text] In reply to statements today by Turkish Prime Minister Ulusu, Prime Minister Papandreou stated the following:

The Turkish prime minister distorts reality when he attributes to Greece any aggressiveness and any claims on the Aegean that do not originate from the valid legal status that has been guaranteed by international conventions and treaties. I remind the Turkish prime minister that it is only Turkey that creates faits accomplis and not Greece. Even though the Cyprus question is not an issue concerning Greek-Turkish differences, we should remind him that it constitutes an obvious and provocative case of the invasion and occupation of the territory of an independent state, a member of the United Nations. And since Mr Ulusu likes to refer to the dialogue between the two communities, that is, the disalogue between Nicosia and Ankara, he forgets the UN resolutions, which include a resolution on the immediate withdrawal of the Turkish occupation troops.

Regarding the Aegean, Turkey has almost incessantly violated Greece's national airspace since 1974, and hence has violated the regulations of the Athens Flight Information Region innumerable times. Regarding Western Thrace, we inform Mr Ulusu that the Muslim minority is increasing and proliferating, while Hellenism has been completely uprooted in Istanbul, Imroz and Bozcaada. Within the framework of the continuing violations of the Greek national area and the persistent claims in the Aegean, which aim at upsetting the existing legal status in violation of the Helsinki Final Act, how is it possible to have a dialogue which will exclusively concern the concessions the Turkish leadership demands from the Greek nation? Regarding the Bern protocol, a reply is being given today by our Ambassador Papoulias in Ankara.

Finally the Turkish prime minister, instead of referring to the fortification of the Aegean islands, must explain to the alliance and more generally to the international community the role he reserves for the Aegean army and the 180 landing craft that are anchored not in the Black Sea but on the western shores of Turkey. We know the Greek Government's strong presentation of the continuing threat against Greece's territorial integrity in various international forums deeply disturbs Mr Ulusu because it reveals Turkey's aggressive strategy and holds all the alliance's governments collectively responsible.

Before concluding, I would like to assure the Turkish people that the Greek people fervently wish to lay the foundations of peace and good-neighborliness in our region so that at last some day foreign forces and chauvinistic aims may cease transforming the Aegean from a sea of peace into a sea that contains supreme dangers for the two peoples. To the Turkish prime minister I once again send the message that the Greek Government has no claims on the Aegean, but it is not ready to concede even an inch of land that belongs to it, as this is defined in the international conventions and treaties that constitute the legal status that govern the Aegean. Peace is our goal and we would like to hope that the same thought will prevail among the leaders of neighborly Turkey.

FURTHER AIRSPACE VIOLATIONS BY TURKISH FIGHTERS

NC121934 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 12 Mar 82

[Text] In the past 24 hours our national airspace has been violated 5 times by Turkish fighter aircraft in the area over Meyisti [Kastellorizon]. Tomorrow morning our country's charge d'affaires in Ankara will hand a demarche of protest to the Turkish Foreign Ministry. The government council on foreign and defense affairs, which conferred today under the chairmanship of Prime Minister Papandreou and attended by our ambassador in Ankara, Mr Papoulias, dealt with the question of Greek airspace violations.

ULUSU ON RELATIONS WITH GREECE, RETALIATION

TA131052 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that Turkey will not hesitate to retaliate in the same manner to an attack against Turkish rights and interests in the Aegean. Noting that the major goal of the 12 September administration is to insure security and tranquillity in the country and to achieve economic stability, Ulusu said: The envisaged program will be completed and a parliamentary system, in the real sense and in line with Ataturk principles, will be established. In his sixth news conference in Ankara, Ulusu gave information on the social and economic developments of last year and the goals envisaged for this year. He also made detailed statements on public order and security as well as foreign policy issues.

In the first part of the news conference Ulusu commented on security and public order. Noting that the number of arms captured by the security forces since 12 September 1980 exceeded 800,000, Ulusu said the value of these arms was equal to the military aid Turkey received in 1 year. He added that the 12 September administration's success in its struggle against anarchy and terror was achieved by remaining with the framework of the law and without establishing special courts.

Talking about the economic situation and the policies of stability being implemented, Ulusu said the tax policy has been changed to stress social justice and that salary increases, which it is hoped will not lag behind the inflation rate, have been secured for state personnel.

Ulusu later dwelt on foreign policy problems. Ulusu said the government is trying to contribute as much as it can to efforts to help reduce international tension and that it is taking care to adopt a constructive stand regarding problems concerning Turkey. Referring to relations with Greece, Ulusu said there are serious problems between the two countries. Ulusu added that there is a serious indication that the Greek Government has approved seismic research outside its territorial waters in violation of the Bern agreement. Noting that the Greek Government has been asked to give information on the issue, Ulusu said: The goals of the policy the new Greek Government has been trying to pursue during its last 5 months in office have been clarified -- without any doubt -- from our viewpoint.

The Greek Government on one hand is creating tension in Turkish-Greek relations by interrupting negotiations and by resorting to unilateral actions in the Aegean, and on the other it is continuing -- with various goals in mind -- an unfounded campaign among our NATO allies to the effect that Turkey is threatening Greece. Ulusu said it is up to the Greek Government to choose between a policy of conflict or conciliation in the face of Turkey's peaceful and conciliatory policy. He added that it should be clear that Turkey will not accept faits accomplis that might affect its rights and interests in the Aegean and that it will not hesitate to retaliate in the same manner if these rights and interests are attacked.

At the end of his news conference, Ulusu said: The actual goal of the 12 September administration is to insure security and tranquillity in the country, to solve the economic problems and to achieve economic stability. No doubt great achievements have been attained in this policy. The envisaged program will be completed and a real parliamentary democracy in line with Ataturk's principles will be fully established in the country. You are all aware that the timetable announced by our head of state is being realized.

Further Details

[Excerpts] Pointing out that Greece, based on incorrect logic, refuses to grant any rights to Turkey in the Aegean Sea, Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said it would be naive to expect Turkey to concede to such a logic and give up its rights and interests in the Aegean. Ulusu added that Turkey would never agree to faits accomplis in the Aegean that would affect its rights and interests and that Turkey would not hesitate to retaliate in kind in the event Turkish rights and interests were violated. Ulusu said he was afraid Greek Prime Minister Papandreou could cause new, regretable developments for his country over the Cyprus issue and expressed hope that Greece would not lose this historic opportunity to encourage and support the intercommunal talks being held in Cyprus. On the issue of international terrorism, the prime minister said only worldwide cooperation could settle this problem, adding that making concessions was no way to eliminate terrorism.

Ulusu made these statements during a news conference in Ankara today in the presence of a large number of Turkish and foreign newsmen and which lasted more than 2 hours. He said the country had left behind the black days prior to 12 September 1980 and is experiencing an atmosphere of peace and tranquillity. The number of victims of violence -- which was 22 a day before the 12 September operation -- had now dropped to less than 1 a day. When compared to those days, the present situation can be better appreciated, Ulusu said.

On the Middle East, the prime minister said Israel's aggressive stand made unsolved regional problems more dangerous. Noting that the addition of the problems of Afghanistan and Poland to the existing ones between the West and the East had strained relations further and created a security crisis, Ulusu said the Turkish Government was observing these developments with concern and was trying to contribute as much as it can to efforts to help reduce international tension. He reiterated that the Middle East problem could be solved by Israel's withdrawal from all the occupied territories and the recognition of all the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people including self-determination. He said peace between Iran and Iraq could be realized, depending on the stands of the two countries. Ulusu also said the Polish problem could be sovled by the Polish people without any interference.

Ulusu stated that Turkey's cooperation with NATO, based only on defense, should not cause any concern in any country in the region. Given Turkey's important role in the balance of forces due to its geopolitical position, Ulusu said, the logic of creating a strong Turkey should disturb neither the countries that are members of the NATO alliance nor those belonging to a different political and military system. Recalling that the negative stand of certain members of NATO toward Turkey's vital interests was not compatible with the concept of partnership and sharing of common interests, Ulusu said the unjust criticism by certain Western governments and politicians of Turkey constitute another side of the problem. Ulusu continued: The growing criticism at a time when Turkey has begun a process of solving its own problems and has taken concrete steps in the transition to the democratic system, which it considers as the most suitable system to the wishes of the Turkish people, are really amazing. It is also true that some unfounded accusations against Turkey are being made in order to harm Turkey. Naturally we are not accusing all the European countries of such a stand. Nevertheless our government is determined to implement the program and decisions in accordance with our people's wishes and interests. Our wish is for certain Western European politicians to understand the realities as soon as possible and stop this wrong stand which will benefit no one.

Ulusu noted that during the time since his last news conference relations between Turkey and Greece have not inspired optimism. Ulusu stated the following on relations between the two countries: [Begin recording] We are presistently pursuing our policies for the just and lasting solution of the Cyprus problem through the intercommunal talks being held under the auspices of the UN secretary general. Despite the Greek Cypriot intransigence fed by the demagoguery of the Greek prime minister, we appreciate the efforts of the Turkish Cypriot community to (?support) the intercommunal talks based on the lastest evaluations of the UN secretary general. The unfortunate statements by the Greek prime minister during his visit to Cyprus have not helped solve the Cyprus problem. Greece, which committed a historic act of irresponsibility in 1974 in connection with Cyprus, is presently committing a similar mistake by tring to undermine the intercommunal talks in Cyprus. Let me recall this historic fact: Following each new situation or new stage reached in the Cyprus issue, both the Greek and Cypriot community and Greece have yearned for the past with regret. I am afraid that through his utterances Papandreou might cause further regrets in the future as well. Greece now has a historic occasion to encourage and support the dialogue between the two Cypriot communities. [end recording]

Additional Report

TA131602 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1540 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Text] Ankara, 13 Mar (AA) -- Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu said he was glad to observe intense interest on the part of the Turkish press and public about the government's policy toward Israel, because it demonstrated the strong roots of Turkey's policy toward the Middle East and Arab states. Answering questions at his press conference Saturday, Ulusu said Turkey's stand on the Middle East question was unchanged and Turkish-Arab friendship was strong enough not be affected by Turkey's recent abstention during the UN General Assembly voting, the reasons for which had been explained earlier.

Turkey regrets the recent deterioration of relations between Libya and the United States, Ulusu said, and hopes it will not endanger peace in the region. Turkey has particularly close relations with Libya, where several Turkish contractors and many Turkish workers are employed. Relations with Iran were developing day by day, and Deputy Premier Turgut Ozal's recent visit had helped Turkish-Iranian relations even further with the accords reached. Ulusu denied rumors that the reason an ex-governor, a retired general, had been appointed ambassador to Iran was that no regular diplomat would accept the post. The government may use its discretion in ambassadorial appointments he noted.

The premier did not see any necessity for expounding on his declaration that Turkey would "retaliate similarly" to any fait accompli on the part of Greece. He did not mean, however, that Turkey would simply extend its territorial waters to 12 miles if Greece did so. He believed his meaning was "clear enough," and that the Greek Government would interpret his statement correctly and reach the right decision. The current naval exercises in the Aegean codenamed "Sea Wolf" were a yearly affair carried on twice a year to provide joint training for the navy and air force. The exercise area had been communicated by Turkey to all concerned through Greece as required. Under civil aviation rules, military aircraft were not obliged to submit flight plans, hence it was Greece which violated international rules by trying to obstruct Turkish Air Force planes from flying in international airspace.

Turkey has always been opposed to any sort of racial discrimination, Ulusu reiterated, and had voted for all 16 draft resolutions concerning apartheid at the recent session of the UN General Assembly. The chairman of the special UN committee against apartheid had visited Turkey recently to express in person appreciation of Turkey's policy on this issue.

His government had not downgraded administrative units concerned with Turkish workers abroad, Ulusu said, but on the contrary had two secretariats attached to a supreme coordination board on Turkish workers abroad. A post attached to the state planning organization considered incentives to workers abroad so that they would invest their earnings in Turkey, while a department of the Labor Ministry was concerned with social problems of workers abroad. There were at present over 1.4 million Turks in Federal Germany, including workers and dependents, who constituted one-third of all foreigners in Germany, but 87,000 of these Turkish citizens were at present unemployed. Germany had invited these people to come in the first place, hence they would only be returned to Turkey only if they wished to do so.

Minister of State Ilhan Oztrak would be making a separate statement concerning the government's position on land reform, Ulusu announced.

Asked whether recent arrests, including some intellectuals set off fresh adverse propaganda abroad about Turkey, the prime minister said these arrests were outside the scope of the government's activity, as warrants for arrest were issued by independent courts during the course of trial. Final verdicts would also be given by the independent judiciary, but certain anti-Turkish circles abroad would go on exploiting the question, he added. The drafting of the new constitution, on the other hand, was a primary function of the Constitutent Assembly, but his government kept in touch by expressing its views when necessary. Ulusu denied rumors of an impending cabinet reshuffle.

'SEA WOLF' NAVAL EXERCISES CONTINUING

TA141535 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1420 GMT 14 Mar 82

[Text] Mersin, 14 Mar (AA) -- Warships of the Turkish Navy arrived at the port of Mersin Saturday in preparation for the third stage of the annual naval exercises "Sea Wolf 82." Admiral of the Fleet Zahit Atakan said in a chat with reporters the exercises had shown the morale of the troops taking part was even above expectations.

The third stage of the exercise would start Monday from Mersin and Iskenderun, and end at the Marmara navy base of Golcuk on 21 March. It would involve amphibious operations and air force units, as well as navy helicopters and logistic support troops, he explained.

OZAL DISCUSSES PROSPECTS FOR ECONOMY RECOVERY

TA141540 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1450 GMT 14 Mar 82

[Text] Ankara, 14 Mar (AA) -- Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal predicted that Turkey's economy would improve "beyond expectations" in a few years, "if our economic program is implemented without being spoiled by ideological quarrels." Addressing the general assembly of the Ankara Association of Tradesmen and Artisans, Ozal said Turkey would improve her economy not with foreign aid, but by pulling herself up by her own bootstraps, that is, by exporting everything she could, even at the cost of consuming less and at higher prices at home. "A nation can be independent only through economic independence," Ozal commented.

He believed disputes over which "economic model" to adopt should come to an end for (?there was) place in the Turkish economy for both the public and the private sector. The administration would refrain from obstructing private enterprise, while the private sector should respect the state's regulatory function. Labor relations would be peaceful, he believed, based on respect and affinity. He considered it a normal consequence of industrialization that certain small craftsmen would have to give up or change their occupation, but added small business was an indispensable part of the economy.

Ozal said loans extended by the People's Bank of Turkey to small business had increased by 87 percent in 1981 as compared to the preceding year.

Chairman of the Tradesmen's Association Fehmi Genc said his group was prepared to support the government, but added they could not help but express their displeasure with certain measures. He cited the new practice of prior taxation, and the lack of medical insurance for the self-employed. Genc was re-elected as chairman of the association.

TA150738 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0700 GMT 15 Mar 82

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has said that Turkey aims to raise its relations with all Arab and Muslim countries in the Middle East to the highest level in an atmosphere of mutual trust. Ulusu left on an official visit to Iraq this morning. In a statement at Ankara's Esenboga Airport before his departure, Ulusu noted that there are deep-rooted relations of friendship between Turkey and Iraq. Pointing out that a development beyond the expected level was registered recently in the relations between the two countries, the prime minister said that his visit to Baghdad will render continuity and permanence to these relations. He added that in his contacts with Iraqi administrators, he will exchange views on bilateral relations as well as regional and international issues.

Ulusu and the delegation accompanying him will return to Turkey on 17 March.

East Blamed for Delays

LD131130 Hamburg DPA in German 0939 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 13 Mar (DPA) — According to a statement made by Federal Foreign Minister Genscher, the adjournment of the CSCE followup conference in Madrid keeps the door open for concluding negotiations. The most important aims for such a concluding document are tangible improvements for the people in divided Europe and agreement on a precise brief for a conference on disarmament in Europe which should draw up new confidence and security building measures. According to Genscher, the draft for a concluding document submitted by the neutral and nonaligned states contains "the notable progress in the negotiations achieved so far." The federal republic favors work continuing this autumn on the basis of this document.

The federal foreign minister attributed the responsibility for "the strains on the CSCE process and the delay in the work of the conference," caused by its adjournment on those "who are responsible for developments in Poland." The sooner human rights and fundamental freedoms are restored in Poland, the greater are the chances for the CSCE progress. Genscher declared: "I therefore renew my appeal to the Polish Government to lift martial law with the aim of restoring human rights and basic freedoms, to release the prisoners and to resume the dialogue with the church and the Solidarity leadership. I appeal to the USSR to not place any obstacles in the path of such a development."

KREISKY TOAST TO AL-QADHDHAFI STRESSES U.S. TIES

AU151433 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 13 Mar 82 p 3

[Report on Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's toast at dinner in honor of Libyan revolution leader Al-Qadhdhafi in Vienna 11 March]

[Text] "There would not be any point in keeping from you the fact that your visit to Austria has caused a certain stir, especially in the Western democratic countries," Chancellor Kreisky said at the beginning of his toast at the dinner in honor of Al-Qadhdhafi. "It should not be denied that there are divided opinions about the expediency of this visit, and that is why I want to use this opportunity to clearly and unequivocally outline our position.

"Austria is a country that is most deeply loyal to the system of the Western democracies. As far as the West is concerned, we are "noncommitted" [English term used, followed by German translation] in a military sense, but we are most deeply committed to the fundamental ideas of Western democracies. And we are naturally also linked in closest friendship with the great American democracy and its people. "These principles are inalienable to us, and we have proved in hard times that we are ready to make great sacrifices for them.

"On the other hand, Austria is a neutral state, and it is actually the policy of the present government that, wherever possible, it promotes contacts and talks.

"It is undoubtedly correct that we are living at a time when politically motivated acts of terrorism are occurring again and again. We most deeply detest these acts and combat them with every means at our disposal. One means of preventing them is to remove the causes that lead to terrorism. Thus the best way to combat the phenomenon is to remove its causes.

"And what we mean by this is that the legitimate rights of peoples and minorities, thus also those of the Palestinians, must be recognized. One cannot advocate human rights without respecting at the same time the rights of the peoples, of all peoples.

"I met with Colonel al-Qadhdhafi in the desert in 1975, and had talked with him over many hours about many important questions. I have found in him a man holding views which I did not agree with in many respects but who was ready to discuss quietly and deliberately many questions with me.

"Quite apart from the fact that our relations have become much closer, that was a very useful experience for me, and his current visit to Austria only confirms the correctness of my view that, before one forms a final opinion about a leading figure in political life, it is first necessary to make his acquaintance and to get to know him better and better. I am of the opinion, and I say it quite clearly, that contact and dialogue with the Libyan revolution leader Colonel al-Qadhdhafi is exceedingly worthwhile, and I say that at the risk of being criticized for it.

"I have pondered all this very carefully and have come to the conclusion that your visit, Colonel al-Qadhdhafi, can acquire significance for the future -- namely, if it marks the starting point of a turning to Europe.

"We value cooperation also with those states of the Arab world which have a different political system, because we have found them to be good and serious partners. We believe in a constructive economic cooperation between Africa and Western Europe because we simply do not want the impression to develop in Africa that we are ready to let the communist states have a monopoly of the relations with these states.

"We believe that there are still many unutilized opportunities for understanding between Libya and the Western democratic world and especially the United States, and this visit has made me certain of it."

[Hans Benedict interview with Chancellor Kreisky at Vienna's Schwechat Airport 13 March -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Chancellor, is Austria interested not only in stepping up commodity exports to Libya but also oil imports from Libya because you expect an end to the oil glut and another oil crisis?

[Answer] First of all, I would like to state that we have always purchased more from Libya than we have sold to that country. This means that things were always practiced as follows: We bought oil from Libya and paid for it, and the Libyans paid for what we delivered to them.

[Question] Was the Libyan oil more expensive than oil from other sources?

[Answer] As far as I am informed, the oil is of a different quality and therefore is a little bit more expensive. But we have always purchased it in the past without feeling that we have been compelled to do so. Even now the situation is that the Libyans have expressed the quite legitimate desire that, if they purchase much more from us, we, too, should purchase more from them if we can because they have quite a bit of oil available at the moment.

I personally think that the Voest Corporation is well-advised to accept that deal because it has enough markets where it can sell this oil. Austria itself is sufficiently supplied at the moment. Hence we cannot handle additional quantities. Besides, I believe that in some 3 to 4 months we -- that's the way it goes, the price of oil and gold go up and down, and nobody will say for this reason that gold is not worth anything. Gold remains a precious commodity.... [as heard]

[Question] Has Al-Qadhdhafi come to our country, Mr Chancellor, because, for example, an exacerbating U.S. commodity embargo, a trade embargo with Libya, is now showing its effects, because he has maneuvered himself into isolation not only economically but also politically in the West, in Western Europe and in the United States?

[Answer] I think that one should not overrate all these things. All these embargo and boycott threats are very temporary and the commodity streams will find their way to those places where they are supposed to go. It will turn out that all these things will look altogether different in practice than they appear in the newspapers today.

[Question] But, after all, Al-Qadhdhafi also mentioned this in his talks with us....

[Answer] Al-Qadhdhafi did not deny that he would prefer to arrive at good and normal relations with all states. It must not be overlooked that he is the representative of a very revolutionary regime and other rules apply there than apply to us and to states of our type.

It would make no sense to deny that he appreciated the trip to Austria so much because he believes that this is the beginning of an opening to the European democracies.

[Question] Well, and what do you make of this readiness on the part of Al-Qadhdhafi to seek this opening and to also subsequently implement it? What do you personally make of it?

[Answer] First of all, I know that there are many states which must think about what we did, that is invite him, because of their treaty obligations and so forth. On the other hand, I know that some states envy us for having invited him. There is no doubt about that. I can do nothing but pass on the content of these talks to my friends and colleagues in other cities inasmuch as they show interest in it. One thing I can promise them is that I will keep nothing secret from them.

Tripoli Views Summary

LD131456 Tripoli Domestic Service in Arabic 1330 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Text] In a statement to JANA today in Vienna, Austrian Chancellor Kreisky stressed that the Al-Fatah revolution leader's visit to Austria was very successful and that great understanding about numerous issues was reached during the visit.

Regarding U.S. pressures on West European countries to follow the same aggressive policy pursued by the Reagan administration against the Jamahiriyah, the Austrian chancellor said Austria would not take part in any economic or political boycott and would not take any measures hostile to the Jamahiriyah. He stressed that boycotts and hostile measures are not a good way to establish relations between countries.

Regarding the views of some of the pro-Zionist Austrian newspapers and information media, Kreisky explained that the majority of the papers are controlled by reaction and that they continuously attack him personally. However, the visit has demonstrated to those papers and to the media that there are numerous positive aspects to it. The Austrian people have taken a positive stand toward it and have been favorably impressed.

Austrian Radio reported this afternoon that the Austrian interior minister has praised the visit and its positive results.

Joint Communique

AU151314 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 14 Mar 82 p 2

["Communique on Official Visit" of Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, Libyan chief of state, to Vienna 10-13 March]

[Text] At the invitation of Dr Bruno Kreisky, chancellor of the Republic of Austria, Col Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi, commander of the great Al-Fatah revolution of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah, paid an official visit to Austria from 10 to 13 March 1982.

During his visit Colonel al-Qadhdhafi held extensive talks with Chancellor Kreisky, and called on Nationalrat Chairman Anton Benya and on Vienna Mayor Leopold Gratz. These visits contributed to deepening the existing relations between the two countries.

Within the framework of the visit, this year's annual meeting of the joint Austrian-Libyan commission for economic cooperation took place. At this meeting the development of the goods exchange, the implementation of the projects agreed on between the two countries or between companies, and the possibility of expanding bilateral economic relations were discussed.

'Abd al-Ati Ibrahim al-'Ubaydi, secretary for foreign relations of the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah, had an extensive exchange of views with Dr Willibald Pahr, Austrian minister for foreign affairs, which in addition to a discussion of bilateral questions was primarily focused on topical issues of the present international relations and their further development.

At the talks between Colonel al-Qadhdhafi and Chancellor Kreisky, which took place in a friendly and frank atmosphere, the central issues were the two sides' views on the Middle East conflict and especially its key problem, the Palestinian question, as well as aspects of a peaceful and lasting settlement of these issues. Both sides shared the opinion that such a settlement of the Middle East conflict should also be sought within the framework of the United Nations with the participation of the PLO as the legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

Furthermore the talks dealt with East-West relations, questions of disarmament and detente, the North-South dialogue, Namibia, and the situation in the south of Africa.

The sides agreed that the movement of nonaligned countries plays a particularly positive role in safeguarding world peace.

Concerns Over Growing International Tensions

Colonel al-Qadhdhafi drew Chancellor Kreisky's attention to the present veot system at the UN Security Council, pointing out that members of this community of states are seeking a democratization of the voting procedure. The chancellor agreed to take this matter into consideration with a view to increasing the efficiency of the United Nations.

The sides also discussed the principles that should be applied in international life and for easing international tensions or overcoming crises.

In discussing the international situation serious concern over mounting international tensions and the development of new hotbeds of crisis in the world was expressed. Both sides stressed the need for the policy of detente. They agreed on the view that strict compliance with all stipulations of international law, especially the renunciation of force or threat to use force in international relations including boycott measures and sanctions that are not based on UN decisions, is indispensible and that conflicts between states must be solved exclusively by peaceful means, with respect for territorial integrity. Respecting these norms of international law is regarded as an essential prerequisite for removing the existing international hotbeds of crisis.

Western Sahara Problem Is To Be Solved Peacefully

Regarding the problem of the former Western Sahara it was affirmed that a peaceful settlement must be sought on the basis of self-determination within the framework of the OAU and UN resolutions.

The sides agreed that, especially in the domestic policy sector, questions of welfare and social justice are of decisive importance. In this context the chancellor paid tribute especially to the great social reform work that has been implemented in Libya and with which he personally acquainted himself on the occasion of his last visit there. Since then, the numerous Austrian technicians who are working in this country have also reported about this.

The two sides expressed the hope that Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's visit to Austria will contribute to promoting his country's relations with the democratic states of Europe.

Chancellor Kreisky and Colonel al-Qadhdhafi expressed their unanimous conviction that the talks have contributed toward a deeper understanding of mutual positions, and that they are apt to favorably influence the relations existing between the two states to mutual advantage.

Col Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi has renewed the invitation extended some time ago to Chancellor Kreisky for an official visit to the Socialist People's Libyan Arab Jamahiriyah. Chancellor Kreisky has accepted this invitation with thanks.

Domestic Press Reactions

AU151703 [Editorial Report] Vienna papers in German in the period 13-15 March carry extensive reports and -- mostly critical -- comments on Libyan revolution leader Al-Qadhdhafi's official visit to Austria 10-13 March. Reporting on what it calls "political party quarreling" over the visit, DIE PRESSE (13-14 March, p 1) quotes Austrian People's Party [OEVP] Chairman Mock as having declared that the visit has resulted in an "unprecedented strain on Austrian foreign policy." According to the paper, he said that it was "hazardous for a foreign guest in Austria to grossly abuse the United States, a state treaty signatory," and that "Some people in the Austrian Socialist Party [SPOE] do not seem to mind this, as proved by the interior minister's anti-American speech" in parliament. Mock particularly criticized the fact that Al-Qadhdhafi was invited to SPOE headquarters, charging that by this invitation the SPOE has "identified itself with Al-Qadhdhafi."

KURIER (13 March, p 2) notes critical comments by Mock and by Freedom Party Chairman Steger, quoting Mock as stressing that the OEVP would again pursue a "sound foreign policy" once it is back in power, the kind of policy pursued by Austria in the period 1955-1970. The paper quotes Steger as having charged that Al-Qadhdhafi "severely abused" his official visit with his attacks against the United States. According to the paper, Steger advocated a joint statement by the Austrian foreign policy council "dissociating itself from Al-Qadhdhafi's anti-American statements." KURIER also carries a Gallup poll on the visit, noting that a "majority of Viennese" -- 54 percent pro, 45 percent con -- approved of the invitation to Al-Qadhdhafi to visit Austria.

In an editorial summing up the visit, DIE PRESSE (13-14 March, p 1) says Al-Qadhdhafi is obviously seeking to propagate an anti-American front among the Europeans -- "but this is the last thing to which Austria can lend itself." We have succeeded in slapping the Americans in the face, in deepening the rift with the Israelis, and in presenting ourselves as unreliable customers in Europe. Minister Lanc's unqualified statements in parliament complete the picture -- the distorted picture of a [foreign policy] concept, and it is high time to put things back into their proper perspective." The paper says and adds: "A foreign policy declaration in which positions are put right again is highly necessary. And if the chancellor does not issue such a statement on his own, the opposition will have to enforce it with an urgent interpellation in parliament. In a confused and increasingly dangerous world situation the Austrians have a right to know whether their country -- while fully adhering to its policy of armed neutrality -- still regards itself as ideologically belonging to the West."

The Socialist ARBEITER-ZEITUNG (13 March, p 3) says "America, but especially the Reagan administration, is doing everything to force conflicts between the Third and the First World into the procrustean bed of the East-West conflict. Anyone who does not like the Americans -- and the peoples of developing countries mostly know quite well why they don't -- always has to be a henchman of Moscow. Behind every movement and behind every state which does not obediently follow a pro-Western course, a conspiracy by the Kremlin is seen. This would not be so serious if it were merely an ideological whim, but it is used as a policy -- a dangerous policy," the paper says and adds:

"Al-Qadhdhafi's fear that Reagan wants war with Libya seems to be genuine and not so very unrealistic. And it is particularly in this respect that the visit to Vienna by Washington's Third World bogey man was of eminent importance. It can reduce the political objections that America's West European allies have to talking with Al-Qadhdhafi. And that is precisely what in turn reduces the danger of a war being waged by the United States, or a friend of the United States in the region, such as Sudan or Egypt against Al-Qadhdhafi's country. For, it is easier to beat with impunity a complete outlaw of the international world than a man who is in touch with West European diplomats."

The Communist VOLKSSTIMME (14 March, p 1) defends the Al-Qadhdhafi visit as being "fully in line with a neutral Austrian foreign policy" and as "having contained an element of understanding" that was particularly to be welcomed "at a time when Reagan is seeking to fan international tensions."

The paper complains that the Austrian ambassador in Washington was summoned to the State Department to receive a "rebuke" because of the Al-Qadhdhafi visit -- "As if Austria were a Central American banana republic."

In a brief front page commentary, DIE PRESSE (15 March) claims that "Now even Austrian arms exports to Libya are being negotiated." The paper says in this context: "After the strain imposed by Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi's visit on Austrian foreign policy, after the negative result of the purely economic talks, a violation of the legal stipulations of neutrality is now threatened. After all, there is hardly a country in the world that is involved in more wars and conflicts than Libya." "The Austrian chancellor, however, does not want to take note of this. Instead, he helps bring about a rapprochement between Libya and Malta -- as is Austria could take an interest in severing again Malta's new bonds with Western countries.

Reaction to Press Conference

AU121502 [Editorial Report] Most Vienna dailies in German on 12 March give prominence to reports on the press conference held on 11 March in Vienna by Libyan revolution leader Al-Qadhdhafi.

Stressing what it calls "sharp attacks by Al-Qadhdhafi on the United States," DIE PRESSE (pages 1 and 2) notes that the Libyan visitor attacked the United States in a way that is "quite unusual during a state visit to a third country." The paper reports Al-Qadhdhafi as saying that U.S. President Reagan "understands neither world politics nor Libya." He claimed, the report continues, that the U.S. sanctions jeopardize not only Libya's aid projects for the Third World but also projects involving West European firms worth billions of dollars, and said in this context: "The only way to avoid this danger is to buy Libyan oil." He warned that the Reagan administration with its "aggressive policy" is playing a game that is "highly dangerous to world peace" and can "lead to a catastrophe." Rejecting American charges that he supports terrorism, Al-Qadhdhafi in turn made the same charge against Reagan saying "He is destructive, he is a terrorist," DIE PRESSE reports.

DIE PRESSE brought attention to the fact that during his press conference Al-Qadhdhafi commented on Egyptian President Mubarak, saying "at any rate he is better than As-Sadat." The paper also reports that at a luncheon for Al-Qadhdhafi in Vienna on 11 March Chancellor Kreisky said in a toast: "In the future we want to foster a certain measure of cooperation, not only in economic, but also in political questions."

ARBEITER-ZEITUNG (pages 2-3) also notes Al-Qadhdhafi's attacks on Reagan and quotes Chancellor Kreisky as having "regretted" in an AZ interview that Al-Qadhdhafi who has been called a terrorist by Reagan, has now used the same term for Reagan. Asked to comment on the statement by U.S. Secretary of State Haig that the United States would closely observe how friends and allies were supporting the U.S. policy regarding Libya, the paper reports the chancellor as replying: "This is a policy that is not acceptable. These are threats. Such a policy can do nothing but harm. Any policy that operates with threats is a bad policy."

Lanc Raps U.S.

AU121639 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 2050 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Report on 11 March security debate in the Nationalrat -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Interior Minister Erwin Lanc] We had better not discuss too loudly blackmail in the economic field vis-a-vis small countries, or bigger countries, in Europe. Let me mention two things only: It would be an enormous help for Austria's agriculture if we could cultivate appropriate raw materials for an edible fats industry of our own. You know as well as I do that there is only a letter of promise [zusagebrief] by the Austrian People's Party [OeVP] Government under Chancellor Klaus to continue to behave and buy soybeans from America.

And when in connection with the fats project we merely discussed the idea of seeking to build up a domestic raw material basis of our own, we were quite clearly given to understand, by the United States, that -- although no contract exists -- there is this declaration, and it must be binding also for the present Austrian Government. Ladies and gentlemen, it was you who broached this subject, and that is why I am compelled -- since you have broached the question publicly -- to tell the Austrian public how things actually stand in the world regarding the freedom of reprisals of the economically powerful vis-a-vis the economically weak.

[People's Party Deputy Ermacora] We regard the statements which the interior minister has made from the government bench to justify the [Al-Qadhdhafi] visit as anti-American, [words unintelligible] as running counter to Austria's political interests, and hence as objectionable from the point of view of the policy of neutrality.

[Lanc] In this country democracy is inseparably linked with social democracy. Hence, social democracy is also inseparably linked by internal bonds with the West European democracies and also with the great American parliamentary democracy. And hence I will not take lying down that my statements here are called anti-American, but -- as an old proverb says -- among friends there should be frankness.

Papers View Lanc Remarks

AU121525 [Editorial Report] DIE PRESSE in German on 12 March on pages 1 and 2 carries a report on a dispute over the Al-Qadhdhafi visit to Austria that developed during the Nationalrat debate on security problems on 11 March. Acccording to the paper, Austrian People's Party [OeVP] deputies criticized the visit and charged that Al-Qadhdhafi was connected with international terrorism. The paper notes that during the discussion Interior Minister Lanc "shocked the opposition by anti-American statements as have rarely been heard before from a government member in the Nationalrat." The paper says in this context: "Thus the minister openly charged the United States with attempts at economic blackmail against Austria and criticized the United States for flexing its muscles against the small country of Libya."

The Communist Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German on 12 March (page 1) quotes OeVP Deputy Ermacora as depicting the Al-Qadhdhafi visit to Austria as a "cloak and dagger action" and as an attempt to "enhance the image of an international terrorist."

According to the Socialist ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German on 12 March (page 5) Interior Minister Lanc refuted OeVP speakers' charges that there was proof of Al'Qadhdhafi's being the stringpuller of terrorism. "Rejecting the OeVP charge that Austria had let itself be blackmailed by the Arabs, Lanc recalled that the OeVP Government under Chancellor Klaus committed itself many years ago vis-a-vis the United States to buy soybeans only from the United States, an arrangement which to this day has had negative effects on Austria's cooking oil industry." According to the paper, Lanc added that "especially among friends" it was necessary to call a spade a spade.

DIE PRESSE notes Lanc's statements that there was no evidence whatever that Libyan money was used to finance all kinds of terrorist groups, and his remark that the U.S. Government's assertion about "killer commandos" allegedly dispatched to assassinate President Reagan was "dubious" [unserioes]. According to the paper, OeVP Deputy Kraft charged that, owing to his anti-American remarks, Lanc had disqualified himself for office in a neutral state and called for his resignation. Lanc later took the floor again and emphatically rejected the charge that his remarks had been "anti-American," stressing that democracy and social democracy are inseparably linked.

Party Leaders Score Libyan

AU131249 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1830 GMT 12 Mar 82

[Unattributed report on 12 March statements in Vienna by Austrian People's Party Chairman Mock and Freedom Party Chairman Steger on Al-Qadhdhafi's visit to Austria -- with recorded portions]

[Text] The domestic policy debate about Al-Qadhdafi's visit continues. People's Party Chairman Mock and Freedom Party Chairman Steger vehemently criticized Al-Qadhdhafi's attacks against the United States. Yesterday Al-Qadhdhafi had, among other things, termed President Reagan a terrorist. Both opposition leaders want to bring this matter up in the Foreign Policy Council next week. The Austrian People's Party and the Freedom Party also attacked Interior Minister Lanc for his statements at yesterday's Nationalrat session, where Lanc had also mentioned economic pressure on the part of the United States against Austria.

[Begin Mock recording] It has never happened before that a guest should stay in Vienna at the official invitation of the Federal Government and then massively insult another country, above all a partner to the state treaty, as leader Al-Qadhdhafi did to the United States. But this does not seem to disturb some people in the Socialist Party; I deliberately say some people. One can hope that sensible forces will prevail there as time goes by because Interior Minister Lanc also joined in with an anti-American speech which has thus far been alien to Austrian parliamentary minutes since 1945. Such words were probably spoken when there still was a Communist Party representation in parliament, but certainly not by another democratic faction. [end recording]

The chancellor could have withdrawn the invitation to Al-Qadhdhafi quite correctly through diplomatic channels, as was recently done vis-a-vis the Czechoslovak head of state Husak, Mock noted. This all the more so since economic expectations have not materialized either.

[Begin Mock recording] Economically, it has been a fiasco, at least so far because, ladies and gentlemen, they offer us Libyan oil at $40 a barrel instead of cash payments for our commodity shipments. I can only say that with such an offer, the Libyan partner in the talks no longer even takes seriously the inviting head of government. [end recording]

[Begin Steger recording] I do not criticize the fact of the visit, but rather all the concomitant phenomena surrounding it. I do criticize that the government evidently is no longer in a position to keep what it constantly pledges, that is, to ensure a common foreign policy. A common foreign policy would have involved discussing such a visit before it took place. This certainly would also have served the visit well, because it now is evident that the visit turned out to be a fiasco, that is the attempts to conduct big economic negotiations with the Libyans, because we can purchase oil anywhere in the world at far lower prices than the Libyans have thus far offered. [end recording]

But it only sounds as though you have been offended if you just criticize the fact that you were not notified in advance, rather than criticize the visit as such.

[Begin Steger recording] We can extend invitations to every country of the world. The only question is what is taking place in Austria. It is possible that the insults that were addressed to the United States on Austria's neutral soil are not part and parcel of the practices of a state visit, but visits must be discussed in advance. [end recording]

Should Austria do something about Al-Qadhdhafi's statement that Reagan is a terrorist?

[Begin Steger recording] This question will also certainly be discussed at the Foreign Policy Council.

We members of the Freedom Party will insist that it should be at least clarified vis-a-vis the United States, that we take most seriously the fact that the United States is a signatory state of our state treaty and that we do not want to be mentioned in the same breath with people who utter such insults. [end recording]

Socialist Secretary Comments

AU131922 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Rudolf Nagiller interview with Nationalist Deputy Fritz Marsch, chairman of the Foreign Policy Committee of the Austrian parliament, central secretary of the Austrian Socialist Party and foreign policy spokesman of his party group -- recorded, date and place not specified]

[Excerpt] [Question] Mr Central Secretary, the dominant topic of the past few days in Austria has naturally been Al-Qadhdhafi's visit. There was approval and disapproval in the Austrian public, disapproval primarily on the part of the opposition but also on the part of several newspaper commentators. How do you, how does Fritz Marsch, see these things? After all, you are also chairman of the parliamentary Foreign Policy Committee.

[Answer] Look, the situation in foreign policy today is that categories are being upheld which became outdated long ago. And I think this is the most essential thing. It is no longer possible to classify everything as was still possible some 20 or more years ago.

[Question] Hence a pro and con?

[Answer] With respect to the pro and con or only in a single direction....

[Question] More specifically...

[Answer] East and West or North and South. Some people, for example, only view the North-South problem via East-West relations, something which is wrong in our opinion -- and also in my opinion. Hence, it also is understandable that the views about foreign policy initiatives are divided. But if one, on the one hand, as a state, as the party which provides the government, perceives foreign policy as something active, perceives the policy of neutrality as an active policy -- and this is where we differ from Switzerland -- one must also take steps oneself. And this is why one should precisely take such steps vis-a-vis states which are today seeking an orientation themselves, states which are not unambiguously oriented, at least not according to the concepts that are still being used today even though they are incorrect.

[Question] Hence our neutrality policy is different, and -- in your view -- should also be different from that of Switzerland?

[Answer] Yes, it is an active neutrality policy; above all, it is different because of mere geographic conditions. We border on the East and for this reason our situation is already different.

[Question] The visit probably stirred up excitement not only because Al-Qadhdhafi is a controversial personality but because he is regarded as an archenemy by the United States and because, as a result, the Socialist Party has created the impression among some people that it wants to move Austria away from America. The foreign policy critics of the Socialist Party even believe that Austria is moving further away.

[Answer] Well, I think one must not pose this question in such a narrow manner.

What is involved is not the consideration of a move away from America. What is important is the consideration of whether Europe can make a policy that is as independent as possible. Our judgement in this respect naturally is different from that of the NATO partners, because they have already assumed obligations in the military field. And it is in this that we consider Libya to be an important African state. Shall we leave relations with African states only to the communist states? Our answer to this question is that it must not be so. This also is the task of other states and this is important. It is no longer possible to say Eastern and Western, communist and democratic; these are no longer the only existing orientations.

[Question] Is this sort of a third road in foreign policy between the two superpowers?

[Answer] I say it is another road. There are other roads than those of the superpowers. When superpowers do not know what to do further -- and there also is this danger -- they try to divide things up before a conflict breaks out or even after such a conflict.

[Question] Could you classify Austria in the relations between the two superpowers? To whom are we closer?

[Answer] In sociopolitical terms, unambiguously to the United States. But this does not imply a declaration of sympathy vis-a-vis the present administration.

[Question] Does the Socialist Party support this foreign policy in full or are there different wings in the Austrian Socialist Party? A more pro-American and a more anti-American wing, for example?

[Answer] There is no anti-Americanism. I have said this recently, but first and foremost our party chairman Dr Kreisky has said it very distinctly and emphatically. There is no anti-Americanism in the Socialist Party. It is just that more information exists about America than about the Soviet Union, and this is why it is easier to form a picture. This is, I think, another reason some of our young friends can judge America and, as a result, arrive now and then at negative conclusions. But this is our task: To perform enlightenment work.

SPOKESMAN EXPLAINS SCHMIDT INTENTIONS

LD151608 Hamburg DPA in German 1447 GMT 15 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 15 Mar (DPA) -- Chancellor Helmut Schmidt only wanted to make it clear that he will "not step out of the boat" and that he does not see his time in office as limited when he announced at a party meeting that he would stand again for the office of head of government in the 1984 Bundestag elections. Kurt Becker, the government spokesman, said this to journalists in Bonn on Monday.

Asked about the timing of Schmidt's statement -- 2 years before the elections -- Becker replied that the chancellor thought it would be useful, in view of the widespread speculation, to let no doubt arise about how he sees his future as chancellor beyond election day. Schmidt's announcement last week to a group of leftwing members of the SPD Parliamentary Group was no surprise to the closest advisers of the chancellor, according to Becker. Among those closest to him Schmidt left no doubt about his intention to stand again.

HONECKER HOPING TO VISIT BONN THIS YEAR

LD141540 Hamburg DPA in German 1432 GMT 14 Mar 82

[Text] Leipzig, 14 Mar (DPA) -- The visit of GDR State Council Chairman Erich Honecker to the FRG -- already agreed in principle -- is apparently planned to take place this year. The SED general secretary, in Leipzig today for the start of the fair, replied to a journalist's question as to whether he would be making the trip this year by saying: "I expect so."

The invitation was made by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt last December during his meeting with Honecker at the Werbellinsee. At that time it was expected that the visit would take place within 12 months or perhaps a little longer. Honecker gave an evasive answer to a question as to whether one could expect a "positive signal" with regard to the minimum exchange amount for Western visitors which was drastically raised at the end of 1980.

During Honecker's 15-minute stay at the stand of West Germany's Otto Wolff Steel Firm, the head of the FRG's permanent mission in East Berlin, Secretary of State Klaus Boelling, made a short statement in which he referred to the fact that the meeting at the Werbellinsee had raised the hopes of people in both German states that in spite of all differences, practical improvements to the advantage of both sides would be possible. These hopes must not be dashed, but should gradually be turned into reality. He repeated a formulation of Schmidt's that the perspectives of cooperation between the GDR and the FRG must soon be made visible and tangible.

In his reply, Honecker stressed that there had been firm agreement at the Werbellinsee meeting "that the task of the two German states to secure peace is of considerable significance for the welfare of the people in those states and, over and above that, for developments in Europe." One can say that relations between the FRG and the GDR are developing favorably. He referred to joint trade, cooperation in science and technology and "strongly developing cooperation in third markets," all of which is to the benefit of people in both German states.

The overall political climate of which Boelling spoke is monitored by both sides, who also try to influence it, Honecker said. At the Werbellinsee he was in complete agreement with the chancellor that "We are all but obliged to make our contribution to normality and in connection with this to the preservation of all that was achieved in the period of detente."

'No Conditions' for Visit

LD151728 Hamburg DPA in German 1618 GMT 15 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 15 Mar (DPA) -- The Federal Government -- like SED boss Erich Honecker -- believes a visit by the GDR state council chairman to the Federal Republic is possible this year. Bonn is not making this visit dependent on any intra-German agreements or prior measures on the part of the GDR.

Government Spokesman Kurt Becker told the press in Bonn today that the Federal Government does not exclude the possibility that it would reach agreement with the GDR on a date for Honecker's visit being set for this year. Until now, no talks have been held between the two governments regarding the date or location, he said, referring to the fact that Honecker had accepted the invitation by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt to pay a reciprocal visit during the intra-German summit at Werbellinsee in December. In response to questions about possible preconditions in intra-German relations being set for Honecker's visit, Becker said that the invitation was "not linked with any conditions."

Becker stressed the Federal Government's interest in continuing the dialogue with the GDR in the current "difficult overall climate." He said that the Federal Government is assuming that the GDR is also interested in continuing the dialogue.

A few days prior to talks between Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff and top GDR economic expert Guenter Mittag in East Berlin on renegotiating the swing (interest-free overdraft facility in intra-German trade), the government spokesman again noted Bonn's principle of a continuing "political-psychological link" between the swing and, primarily, questions of easing conditions for people. However, Becker said, the GDR compulsory exchange rate for Western visitors, for which Bonn is pressing for a reduction, is not a question for negotiation but a unilateral, sovereign decision on the part of the GDR.

NORWEGIAN FOREIGN MINISTER TALKS WITH GENSCHER

LD151620 Hamburg DPA in German 1526 GMT 15 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 15 Mar (DPA) -- Norwegian Foreign Affairs Minister Svenn Stray has spoken positively of the proposals of his German counterpart, Hans-Dietrich Genscher, on more consultations within the Atlantic alliance. Stray, who arrived in Bonn this morning for his first working visit since the conservative government came into office in Norway last autumn, also agreed with Genscher's assessment of the importance of the political dimension of the alliance, a Foreign Office spokesman said.

The comprehensive discussion of large-scale European-U.S. coordination within the alliance, such as was recommended last week in Washington by Genscher, was in the foregound of the thorough exchange of views of the two foreign ministers. Since there are no bilateral problems, the two ministers were able to concentrate exclusively on international issues of mutual interest, particularly East-West relations and alliance policy, the spokesman said.

Friendship Stressed

LD151630 Hamburg DPA in German 1536 GMT 15 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 15 Mar (DPA) -- Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has stressed European solidarity with Norway, which is not a member of the EEC. In a speech given at a banquet today in honor of his Norwegian counterpart Svenn Stray in the Godesberg Redoute, Genscher welcomed Norway's interest in "deepening the dialogue with the Europe of the Ten."

Genscher welcomed Stray as a "convinced European" and stressed the "long friendship between the Germans and the Norwegians." In economic cooperation, "German interest in Norwegian oil and natural gas and Norwegian interest in German know-how" came together. Both governments are "determined to increase cooperation with specific projects."

During their working talks, the "broad concurrence of German and Norwegian foreign policy in all topical issues of international politics was confirmed," Genscher said. This applies above all to the Western defensive alliance. However, the massive strengthening of Soviet military potential "which is going on in Northern Europe as well," must be followed with concern, he stated.

SOLIDARITY ACTIVISTS HOLD DUESSELDORF CONFERENCE

LD151358 Hamburg DPA in German 1333 GMT 15 Mar 82

[Text] Duesseldorf, 15 Mar (DPA) -- The activists of Poland's Solidarity union who are living in the FRG have appealed to the German people not to buy any foodstuffs from Poland. These foods are being taken away from the suffering Polish people. On the other hand, most of these activists are against more severe economic sanctions by Western countries because such measures would harm the citizens in their homeland.

This was explained today at a press conference after the first coordination meeting of about 40 representatives of Solidarity from all over the FRG which took place in Duesseldorf over the weekend on the initiative of the North Rhine-Westphalian SPD and with the support of the West German Trade Union Federation.

The Duesseldorf conference, at which Lev Kopelev, Soviet civil rights activist and writer, was a guest, also officially sanctioned the Solidarity information bureau which has opened in Bremen. It is to coordinate the activities of Polish trade unionists scattered throughout the FRC -- they are living here on social welfare -- to organize aid campaigns for Poland, inform people about conditions in Poland and make contact with similar bureaus in Stockholm, Brussels, Paris, Zurich, Amsterdam and New York.

EHMKE ENDORSES REAGAN ADDRESS TO BUNDESTAG

DW151209 Bremen Radio Bremen Network in German 1700 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Interview by unidentified reporter with Prof Dr Horst Ehmke, deputy SPD faction chairman, in Bonn; date not given -- recorded]

[Excerpt] [Question] Professor Ehmke, the Bundestag wants to invite the American president to address a plenary session when he is in Bonn in June for the NATO conference. Does such an invitation make sense? What importance is being attributed to it?

[Answer] I think it makes a lot of sense. I am very happy that Herbert Wehner, chairman of the SPD Bundestag faction, made this suggestion to the Bundestag Presidium in agreement with the other factions. I believe that in connection with such an invitation and such an honor it must be stated once again that the Federal Republic and America depend on each other and that their cooperation in the alliance is inseparable. In addition it must be also noted that despite all its political opinions, the Bundestag agrees that we belong to the alliance and to the Western world, and that we do not share the opinion of the minority which maintains that the Federal Republic would be more secure and better off if it were to distance itself from the two world systems.

I believe that this is important because criticism of American policy exists -- in part it is rather justified criticism of verbal shows of strength and also of actual policy -- and because it is correct to emphasize on such an occasion that despite the individual differences of opinion which must be discussed in a democratic alliance, we stand firmly on the side of the West and we will not be separated from it.

[Question] Could the planned appearance of the American President in the Bundestag take some of the edge from the demonstations planned here in Bonn and maybe also in Berlin? The American President will have an opportunity to outline his policy and his political concept to the Germans.

[Answer] First of all, I believe that it is most important for him to speak here to the Bundestag. What others do outside -- it would not happen at the same time anyway -- is their business. I hope there will be sufficient understanding with regard to the importance of Western cohesion and the preservation of peace so that those who believe they must demonstrate on such an occasion will become aware of the importance of the matter and of their own dignity.

U.S. OFFICIAL HOLDS 'FRIENDLY' TALKS IN BONN

LD151732 Hamburg DPA in German 1705 GMT 15 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 15 Mar (DPA) -- During a comprehensive discussion of coordinating economic action against the Soviet Union, Bonn and Washington agreed today on further talks. The consultations between the delegation led by U.S. Under Secretary James L. Buckley and German experts took place in "a friendly and constructive atmosphere," a Foreign Ministry spokesman announced.

Buckley began his tour of various West European capitals in Bonn today. According to diplomatic sources,the Americans are mainly concerned with coordinating a uniform Western credit policy on conditions for trade with Moscow. Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who received the U.S. delegation for a half-hour meeting this afternoon, explained the Federal Government's view of the significance of political coordination and joint opinion-forming in the alliance.

IRAQI OIL MINISTER WANTS CLOSER TIES WITH FRG

LD151444 Hamburg DPA in German 1356 GMT 15 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Munich, 15 Mar (DPA) -- Iraq is prepared to supply more oil if the FRG helps its economic development and makes the export of technology easier. This would also include, as far as Iraqi Oil Minister Tayih 'Abd al-Karim is concerned, the import of weapons from the FRG. The minister said at a German-Iraqi economic seminar on Monday in Munich that Iraq, which is at war with Iran and is being threatened by Israel, expects "that our friends" will supply "all they can in the way of military and technical support."

Iraq, he said, could satisfy the FRG's oil needs for many years. At the same time, Al-Karim emphasized the desire of his country for even closer relations with the FRG and demanded "equal relations without exploitation." There are already encouraging signs of this.

Al-Karim defended OPEC's oil pricing policy and described the present price of $34 a barrel (159 liters) as "the absolute minimum of the value of this strategic commodity." the level of inflation and the sinking value of the dollar work to the disadvantage of the oil producers. The oil countries are, however, also prepared to revise the oil price downward if the industrial states consider compensation for inflation. For the producers crude oil is an important basis for the development of their own industry. Al-Karim said that the following principle applies to Iraqi oil policy: "One of the two last barrels of oil that is brought up on earth will be Iraqi."

MINISTER DENIES INVOLVEMENT IN ATTEMPTED COUP

AB111016 Paris AFP in French 0918 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 11 Mar (AFP) -- Jean-Pierre Cot, French minister of cooperation and development affirmed on Thursday that the rumors that some French officials of his ministry were involved in last week's attempted coup d'etat in Bangui are "without any foundation." "These rumors form part of the campaign of falsehood which has surrounded this affair from the beginning," the minister declared to AFP on his arrival in Roissy following official visits to Mali and Ivory Coast.

After admitting that the decision of Ange Patasse -- the main opponent of General Kolingba's regime -- to take refuge in the French Embassy in Bangui has created "a new situation," the minister said: "This is a simple situation which has many precedents in Africa."

"When a man who is being pursued in an atmosphere of violence seeks refuge in an embassy, it is a duty to grant it," added Mr Cot. "The CAR and French authorities must now find a solution to this problem through negotiation and with respect for human rights," he stated. The minister finally emphasized the "solidity" of General Kolingba's regime which, he said, "has never appeared threatened at any moment by events such as the recent ones in Bangui."

Concerning his visit to Ivory Coast, Mr Cot said that his discussions with the Ivorian authorities took place "in a spirit of renovation" of bilateral cooperation. "Our two countries wish to practice a policy of Ivorianization of the posts now being occupied by the Franch technical assistance personnel, of whom there are too many," the minister explained.

"In Mali," said Mr Cot, "my visit enabled me to determine the areas of priority action in which French cooperation should operate, especially in the field of rural development."

Cheysson Calls Kolingba

AB121632 Paris AFP in French 1459 GMT 12 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 12 Mar (AFP) -- French Minister of External Affairs Claude Cheysson Thursday telephoned CAR President Andre Kolingba about the issue of Patasse, the spokesman of the Quai d'Orsay indicated today.

The spokesman pointed out that the talk reflected the friendly relations existing between France and the CAR, but he refused to elaborate on the talk. This report seems to confirm the determination of Paris and Bangui, which has been surfacing for several days, to find a satisfactory solution for both sides.

Ange Patasse, a former prime minister under Emperor Bokassa, whose extradition has been requested by the CAR Government, sought refuge a week ago at the French Embassy in order to escape from his country's authorities who accuse him of being behind the recent coup attempt.

France, which decided not to hand over Patasse to CAR justice, is reported to have gotten in touch with several African countries likely to receive him. It is believed that secret tripartite negotiations are in progress, seeking assurances that Mr Patasse will not carry out political activities hostile to his government. The minister of external relations has, however, refused to confirm that such negotiations are underway. "Vague attempts are being made," is all that is said.

Also, reliable sources indicate that the French Government does not want to make any move that would weaken General Kolingba's position. The latter, who favors a compromise in the Patasse issue, must however take into account the champions of a hardline position in the Military Committee for National Redress.

They reportedly want to seize the opportunity of Patasse's presence in the French Embassy in Bangui to get hold of him and definitively put an end to his activities deemed subversive.

Meanwhile, in a news story devoted to the shady side of the abortive coup, the weekly magazine JEUNE AFRIQUE in its latest issue reveals that the director of French Minister of Cooperation Jean-Pierre Cot's office on 30 December 1981 sent a final timetable for the withdrawal of French soldiers from the presidential guard.

According to the weekly, the letter pointed out that those soldiers could be replaced by other soldiers "on contract" paid by the CAR government. The Quai d'Orsay refused to make any comments on the allegations.

Patasse To Leave Bangui

LD140232 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 13 Mar 82

[Text] There is detente in Central Africa. Ange Patasse, the Central African opponent who for a week now has been a refugee in the French Embassy after the failure of the coup attempt, could shortly leave for another African country it is reported. Three countries which have been contacted have categorically refused to grant asylum, but three or four others are believed willing to do so. At any rate, everything seems prepared for a discreet departure of the refugee. Here is a report by our special correspondent Ulysse (Gosset):

[Begin recording] As a new sign of the relaxation of tension in relations between Paris and Bangui, the armed police stationed in front of the French Embassy have been recalled to their barracks. The diplomats and the staff of the chancellery will now again be able to leave the building without being controlled. This is a symbolic gesture by General Kolingba, the strongman of Bangui, who is signaling the trust he puts in France about the negotiations on the Patasse affair.

As we said a few days ago, the main leader of the Central African opposition could be exiled somewhere in Africa. Seven countries were contacted by France. Three of these states have formally refused to receive Ange Patasse who is even more unwelcome as he is accused of having been the brains behind the foiled 3 March coup. Of course, the Central African authorities have not yet agreed to this solution, but General Kolingba hopes to be able to convince the hardliners of his government of the need for a compromise. In the meantime, Ange Patasse can only kick his heels in his refuge which has been sheltering him for the past 7 days. [end recording]

MARCHAIS VIEWS POLAND IN LE HAVRE SPEECH

PM101441 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 5 Mar 82 p 11

[Text] In his Le Havre speech Georges Marchais made the following statement on Poland:

Nobody could have felt or can feel more pain than we communists at the tragedy which friendly Poland is experiencing. All our action over the past 18 months stems from this feeling: We do not want Polish blood to be shed. We do not want internal confrontation of civil war nor do we want the conflict to be internationalized.

That has been and is our main concern. Obviously that does not mean that we viewed events in that country calmly and serenely. Nor does it mean that we do not have an opinion on the causes of the situation it is experiencing and on the best solution which we think should be sought in socialist Poland's interests.

Socialism: A Long Process

Indeed, as we explained during our 24th congress, we take care not to make any simplistic judgment, and not to have any unilateral view in one direction or another as regards the socialist countries. A simple examination of the situation in the countries which are building socialism clearly shows that that new social system is not complete anywhere and is in a state of evolution everywhere. "Hence," he said at our congress "why fix stages, why describe, for instance, existing socialism as 'developed socialism,' when socialism everywhere is in the process of being built, when the socialist countries are developed to varying degrees and when it is a long process in all cases?"

Our observation of the undoubted and often lightning progress those countries have made thanks to socialism, therefore, does not make us disregard or underestimate the real problems facing them. Moreover, those problems differ in form and scale according to the countries concerned. Their very nature is diverse. Some of those problems stem from the international environment in which the socialist societies are being built -- especially the repercussions of the capitalist crisis. Others have their root in the contradictions and the new questions raised by the very development of those societies. But one thing is certain: If they are not taken into consideration and solved in time, they can turn into difficulties, obstacles and even into a crisis. That is obviously Poland's case.

What Has Happened in Poland

What, in fact, has happened in that country? The main thing which strikes you when you examine its history since the end of World War II, is its extraordinary social and economic development. From a country ravaged by the Nazi hordes, from an essentially underdeveloped country, destroyed, and experiencing poverty and illiteracy, Poland has become the 10th ranking country in the world for industrial production in 35 years. But it is easier to see today that that gigantic industrialization effort was made -- especially as of the 1970's -- at a forced pace without taking account of the country's real potential.

Thus the foreign debt increased considerably in that period while productivity did not increase in proportion with the scope of investment and that investment itself was distributed in a totally imbalanced way among the sectors, to the detriment of the sectors which meet the most urgent social needs.

Those growing economic difficulties stemming from serious management mistakes had particularly negative repercussions in the social sphere -- be it on consumer goods for families, housing, transport, and communal facilities. Of course the discontent built up all the more until it took on an explosive form, so to speak, which could not be expressed normally since at that time the trade union movement did not have a real life and had been reduced to the role of rubber-stamping decisions taken elsewhere.

An Indissoluble Link Between Economic, Social and Democratic Problems

All that explains why, from the start of the Polish crisis, from August 1980, we, for our part, stressed the indissoluble link which exists between the economic, social and democratic problems facing socialist Poland. Everybody knows what happened subsequently. For 18 months persistent difficulties and extremes prevented the vital answers being given to those problems and led to the decisions of 13 December last. Those decisions made it possible to avoid the worst -- the bloodbath which was looming ahead. But they did so at the cost of a tragedy which is regrettable in all respects and which has damaged the cause of socialism. Today Poland is facing the pressing need to introduce far-reaching reforms to master economic efficiency, to ensure social progress and to develop socialist democracy, which requires the participation of all, including their participation through truly independent trade unions acting in the interests of the workers and of socialism.

New Developments in the Direction We Want

In that respect, in view of the latest stances expressed on various sides, it is probably possible to detect several elements: First there seem to be signs of a desire not to return either to the situation before August 1980 -- which, in our view, would be unacceptable -- or to economic paralysis and social disintegration; second, initial measures moving toward the vital reforms have been outlined; finally it seems that possibilities of dialogue among the forces concerned are gradually taking shape.

Of course that is all still precarious and uncertain. But, however fragile they might be, we think that these new developments move in the direction which we, and all Poland's true friends, want. Yes, we earnestly hope that the situation in that country might develop in that direction, that the possibility of measures to ease tension and restore peace might emerge and that the door will thus be opened to the peaceful and democratic solution which Poland needs. Moreover, should not all those who say they are worried by the situation facing Poland and its people be contributing to that?

In any case, that is the attitude which we communists take.

PERTINI RETURNS FROM OFFICIAL VISIT TO JAPAN

AU160823 Rome ANSA in English 0810 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Rome, 16 Mar (ANSA) -- Head of state Sandro Pertini returned to Rome last night at the end of his week-long visit to Japan. In a brief statement made at the airport, Pertini said that his stay in Japan was very satisfactory. "In Japan, there is considerable liking for Italy," he noted.

The 85-year-old statesman, who appeared relaxed and well-rested at the end of his long flight, also referred to a conversation with a Japanese philosopher who pointed out the parallels between Pertini's plea for disarmament, contained in a speech delivered to a joint session of the Japanese Diet, and the tenets of Buddhism.

To Launch Peace Appeal

AU151636 Rome ANSA in English 1500 GMT 15 Mar 82

[Text] Anchorage, (Alaska) 15 Mar (ANSA) -- Italian head-of-state Sandro Pertini has always been against war, but after his recent visit to Hiroshima he is ever more determined to use every occasion that presents itself to work for peace. Speaking to newsmen on his homeward flight from a week-long visit to Japan, Pertini said that wherever he goes in future, starting with his coming trip to Washington for talks with U.S. President Ronald Reagan, he will launch appeals for peace.

"Whoever has seen Hiroshima cannot do otherwise," he said. "I have always been against war because it does not solve problems; on the contrary it creates them, leaving massacre, ruin and death in its wake," he continued.

He said he was gripped with anguish in Hiroshima, especially when he thought of man's future. The idea that a nuclear holocaust could be unleashed by a miscalculation was terrible to contemplate, he went on, and said that every head of state should make the trip to Hiroshima to be reminded of the threat war poses to the very continuance of mankind on this planet.

PLO'S QADDUMI ARRIVES IN ROME ON OFFICIAL VISIT

AU152002 Rome ANSA in English 1941 GMT 15 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 15 Mar (ANSA) -- Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) leader Yasir 'Arafat would agree to come to Italy if he was invited, the PLO's foreign affairs spokesman Faruq Qaddumi told reporters here today shortly after arriving on an official visit at the invitation of Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo.

Qaddumi will meet with Colombo on Wednesday. Tomorrow his schedule includes consultations with the leaders of the major Italian parties -- Enrico Berlinguer for the Communists, Flaminio Piccoli for the Christian Democrats, and Bettino Craxi for the Socialists. He also told the reporters that he would "probably" be meeting with Italian President Sandro Pertini, who gets back from a journey to Japan today.

Asked about Italy's participation in the multinational peace force for the Sinai Peninsula, Quaddumi said the PLO "criticised" deployment of the force from the start, and continues to do so. "This position is not just the Palestinians' position, but has also been approved by the Arab League," he added. "But this is not the only side of our relations with Italy."

He also said he had no information on the fate of two Italian journalists, Graziella de Palo and Italo Toni, who disappeared in Lebanon some time ago. "You know the difficult situation in Lebanon," he said. "The most important thing is the Israeli aggression and the American intervention in the country, and anything that may happen in Lebanon should be blamed on these two factors."

FREITAS DO AMARAL COMMENTS ON 12 FEB EVENTS

LD111752 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Deputy Prime Minister Prof Freitas do Amaral, who also holds the defense portfolio, has said attempts to subvert our institutions will be severely punished. Replying to an interpellation of the government, the Internal Administration Ministry in particular, by one of the opposition parties, on the conspiracy uncovered by the government on the night of the 12 February general strike sponsored by the General Federation of Portuguese Workers, the deputy prime minister said: (?Let no one) have any doubts in this respect. Public order will be firmly maintained, terrorism will be vigorously curbed and the attempt to subvert our institutions will be severely punished. However, it must be stressed that the government did not say there had been a general insurrection in the country or that it was close to it. What the government said, and still maintains, was that together with the attempted general strike a combination of criminal activities with a uniform pattern took place. These had nothing to do with the legitimate strike action as a form of labor struggle but pointed to illegitimate political objectives such as toppling the democratic system and to objectives which cannot be legitimately pursued through violence, such as toppling the government or interrupting the process of the constitutional revision.

Speaking at parliamentary question time which began yesterday and only ended in the early hours of this morning, Freitas do Amaral said the government categorically rejects the accusations of political (?operation) or [words indistinct] in view of the fact that what happened was serious and the democratic opposition knows that it is so and should be the first to desire that it does not recur.

The deputy prime minister said those responsible for the various criminal acts committed, or intended to be committed, on 12 February, have been handed over to the Justice [Department]. He said investigations are continuing to ascertain: the scope of subversive plans found in the possession of those arrested; their ramifications, whether internal or external, and the possible connections between the crimes committed by political or trade union leaders; the culprits of the attempted disruption of official communications and of the security forces; and whether the so-called 25 April Popular Force is an autonomous group or whether it is dependent on other organizations or movements.

Despite its scarce resources for the antiterrorist and antisubversion fight, the government will do everything possible to see that these investigations are as thorough and as extensive as possible. In due course, the government will keep the nation informed of its findings but until the investigations are complete it must be bound to the secrecy of justice laid down by the law in force, Freitas do Amaral said.

AFRICAN NATIONAL CONGRESS OFFICES BOMBED

LD141420 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1344 GMT 14 Mar 82

[By Linda Pullen, PA staff reporter]

[Text] An explosion caused by a 10 pound bomb today ripped through the North London offices of the African National Congress, a militant black nationalist organisation outlawed in South Africa.

The blast severely damaged the building and surrounding property.

A police spokesman said the blast was caused by "a device at the rear exterior of the building."

Det Chief Insp Hilton Cole said the device weighed about 10 pounds.

He said police were anxious to trace a man seen in the area soon after the explosion just before 9 am today.

Police sealed off the blast scene in Pentonville as anti-terrorist squad officers and forensic experts sifted the debris. A helicopter was used to check the surrounding area.

A man who was in a flat on the third floor of the building said: "I was showered with glass and I rushed to the window which was just a tangled mess."

He fled the building over neighbouring rooftops because the stairway was destroyed in the blast.

[Excerpt] The socialist EDEK party's Central Committee has stressed that a substantive repositioning of the Cyprus problem as an issue of occupation is imperative. The text of yesterday's EDEK Central Committee's resolution that party chairman Lissaridhis will run as a candidate in the presidential elections also stresses that the presence of the Turkish troops in Cyprus constitutes implementation of Turkey's expansionist policy, that the Turkish Cypriots are the victims of the same conspiracy, and that only if Turkey's final goals become unattainable will it be possible for us to have a substantive dialogue and the elimination of the occupation.

SPOKESMAN ON ANKARA AEGEAN STATEMENT REPORTS

NC160723 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0430 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Text] News agency reports from Ankara say the language used in the statement of the Turkish Foreign Ministry spokesman shows that Ankara has found the Greek Government's reply satisfactory.

In Athens the government spokesman, who was asked to comment on these reports, stated that they are positions of foreign news agencies and that there is no official report from Ankara in this connection.

A pertinent source in Athens described as absolutely inaccurate a report that a state of alert was ordered in the Aegean area on 12 and 13 March and that Greek destroyers have sailed for the area.

GREEK REPLY ON AEGEAN SEISMIC RESEARCH RECEIVED

TA151433 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 15 Mar 82

[Announcement by Foreign Ministry Spokesman Nazmi Akiman; date not given -- recorded]

[Text] As we told the press earlier, we had asked for information from the Greek Government in connection with the seismic research being conducted by Greece on the Aegean continental shelf. The Greek ambassador in Ankara delivered this information to our foreign minister Saturday. The meeting with the ambassador was assessed in terms of our concerns and opinions, which we had conveyed to them earlier -- and from this viewpoint it was found to be useful. However, it is natural that we will continue to follow the developments carefully. We hope we were not wrong in our impressions and assessments and that consequently the atmosphere prevailing in Turkish-Greek relations will improve from now on.

NEED CITED TO COUNTER GREECE'S AEGEAN BUILDUP

NC160836 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 14 Mar 82 p 3

[Editorial by Oktay Eksi: "What Is Going To Happen to the Balance Established by the Lausanne Treaty?"]

[Excerpts] Has he or has he not said what he was expected to say? We think this will be debated for a long time. But whether he has or not, the warning Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu gave Greece at his press conference yesterday is clear enough to remove any doubt.

Ulusu stated: "Turkey will not accept faits accomplis which may affect its rights and interests in the Aegean; if these rights and interests are attacked, Turkey will not hesitate to reciprocate in kind." This constitutes an extremely stern warning concerning this matter and concerning our relations with Greece.

Ulusu did not clarify what lies behind the words "reciprocate in kind" so that in the event of an unexpected development Turkey will have preserved its maneuverability. But this precaution should not embolden Papandreou. This is friendly advice. The extension of the territorial waters to 12 miles in the Aegean is not a case that "concerns only Greece's sovereign rights." Such an action would upset the balance set up by the Lausanne treaty of 1923 in favor of Greece so much that it would be unacceptable to Turkey.

In fact, this balance has already been upset in favor of Greece, even before the extension of the territorial waters to 12 miles, while Turkey unfortunately has stood back and watched for years, an attitude we consider quite unsuitable. The balance established at Lausanne stipulates that Greece has no right to militarize some of the Aegean islands which happen to be right under Turkey's nose. The Lausanne treaty laid down this provision to keep Turkey secure from an attack that may originate from Greece, but Greece started militarizing these islands in 1964, massing troops there. It has built airfields to be used in an attack on Turkey. Turkey kept issuing ineffective notes of protest against all this.

No Turkish Government has the right to act this way. What the Turkish Governments should have done is not what the United States did in 1962 in the Cuban crisis or what Israel did in 1981 in the Lebanese crisis. For they were not acting on the strength of an international treaty. It should have demanded from the Greek Government the demilitarization of these islands. If the Greeks do not consent to this; then it will be an obligation as well as a duty for Turkey to show that it will protect its rights.

[Text] Ankara (HURRIYET) -- It has been announced that Pakistan's head of state, Gen Ziaul Haq, paid a personal visit to head of state Gen Kenan Evren to express condolences on the occasion of Mrs Evren's death and that the two heads of states had had no talks of a political nature. As will be understood from this, no talks of a political nature were held by the two heads of state."

OZTRAK: ANKARA NORMALIZING JUDICIAL PROCEDURES

TA121618 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1545 GMT 12 Mar 82

[Text] Ankara, 12 Mar (AA) -- The state minister and government spokesman, Professor Ilhan Oztrak said that the September 12 administration was reviewing and normalizing the measures and arrangements in parallel with the resoration of peace and security in Turkey. State Minister Oztrak's special statement to NEWSPOT, weekly published by the department of press and information, reads:

"The administration that came to power in Turkey with the September 12, 1980 operation, has taken special care to act in line with the principles of the state of law and has always remained within the confines of law.

The September 12 administration has committed itself to fully respecting the precepts of the sovereign modus operandi of jurisprudence and of the appropriate judicature. For this very reason, no extraordinary courts have been established. Defendants are being tried by civil or military courts established and empowered by laws that were already in force before September 12, 1980. As a matter of fact, these courts were set up by the political parties in power before September 2, 1980.

All trials, whether in civil or military courts, are open to the public and defendants enjoy and benefit, to the fullest extent, from all the rights of defence counselling.

As a rule the verdicts pronounced by martial law tribunals are reviewed by the Military Court of Cassation, the body of appeal, [word indistinct] certain exceptions.

The possibility of excess delays in trials arose in Turkey precisely because the administration respected the principle of appropriate judicature, set up no extraordinary courts, introduced no limitations to the right of defense and allowed the appeal mechanism to function for all cases.

For this reason, in accordance with an amendment to the Martial Law Act No 1402, in (?order to) expedite judicial proceedings and to conclude cases, sentences of less than 3 years and of fines were exempt from appeal.

It was only natural to expect that this temporary arrangement which was approved by taking into consideration the extraordinary circumstances prevalent at the transition period, would be changed in line with the success achieved in restoring peace and confidence in the country.

Consequently, a bill submitted to the speaker of the Consultative Assembly by General Tahsin Sahinkaya, member of the National Security Council and commander in chief, Turkish Air Force, envisages the amendment of the law-decree for appeals procedures for sentences of three years or more. The amendment bill reduces the minimum sentence liable to appeal from 3 years to 6 months.

The September 12 administration is reviewing and normalizing the measures and arrangements in parallel to the restoration of peace security in Turkey.

The establishment of the Constituent Assembly, reduction of the detention period to 45 days, the National Security Council Proclamation No 65 allowing former politicians, with certain exceptions, to express their views on the constitution being drafted, and this latest bill envisaging the amendment of the law-decree pertaining to the right of appeal, each constitutes one of the phases of the program for a return to normal order."

NEW URANIUM DEPOSITS IN BLACK SEA REPORTED

[By Bulent Erandac]

[Excerpt] Ankara (HURRIYET) -- There is important news from the Black Sea. Turkish experts, like the Germans, have established the presence of uranium deposits in the Black Sea. The deposits are under the sea 12-15 nautical miles offshore in Turkish territorial and international waters along the Sinop-Giresun line. Authorities say the discovery of uranium in the Black Sea, a raw material so important to nuclear energy, the manufacture of weapons and to the atomic bomb, is a very important event for Turkey.

West Germany has proposed that the uranium deposits be drawn to places where they could be processed within Turkish territorial waters. As talks and contacts are being carried out at a high level and as the possibilities of exploiting such a strategically important substance are being examined, efforts in this direction are being kept secret.

It has been learned that the Soviet Union is aware of the presence of uranium deposits in the Black Sea. It is also known that West Germany wishes to exploit these deposits. It is believed that as things develop the Soviet Union may propose a partnership with Turkey. The processing of the uranium deposits now lying under the sea necessitates a highly complicated technology. This technology is available only in the United States, the Soviet Union, France, Germany and Japan.

Apart from the deposits in the Black Sea, there are also other important deposits in Turkey. The ore-beds which can be seen and those which are believed to exist are estimated to involve 3,269 tons.

GUNAYDIN PROTESTS TREATMENT OF WORKERS IN FRG

NC160904 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 13 Mar 82 p 3

["Pressure Cooker" column by Necati Zincirkiran: "The Animosity That Has Arisen From the Grave"]

[Text] It was obvious years ago that this was going to happen. We do not claim to be astrologers, but it is true that none of the past Turkish Governments has shown a close concern for the problems of about 2 million of our fellow countrymen who are in a very difficult position in Germany today. They looked upon all these "people who have had to live away from home" as cows to be milked -- certainly as a fertile source, producing not milk but foreign currency.

Nothing can be achieved by talking ill of the past because of the difficult situation encountered now. The only thing that can be done is to take urgent measures for the protection of the life and property of our kinsmen living in that country, against the animosity being systematically created against the Turks. We must also examine ways and means of benefitting from them in Turkey in the long run. As a matter of fact, there should have been fully developed plans for the situations we are referring to. Unfortunately, we are deprived of that as well. Today, the security of the lives of 2 million Turks is left at the mercy of the Germans.

The flow of events shows that the motive behind the anti-Turkish animosity being provoked in Germany is to force the Turks to leave Germany. The events are being planned in an intelligent manner. The simple interpretation of the plan is to disturb and annoy the Turks in this manner so that they will have to leave the country. There is no other explanation for it, because how can these people, who have lived in Germany amiably for 20 years, turn bad now? Why should they be looked upon as enemies? They have lived and worked together with the Germans for 20 years and contributed to Germany's prosperity.

Naturally, our fellow countrymen there are not all well-bred. They went to the center of Europe from villages. But they are all good-hearted, sincere and sympathetic. Some are bound to be wicked, as happens in all countries. But such people are a mere trifle. These people, who are employed under difficult conditions, cannot be treated so meanly "just because an economic crisis exists." This treatment is fundamentally contrary to the human rights convention.

We expect more active behavior from our government in view of this Turkish animosity which has extremely annoyed the Turkish nation. Those who wish to revive the ghost of Nazism should know that it is impossible in the world of the 1980's to connive at it. We can rouse the world and create serious problems for the Germans.

LE MONDE VIEWS DEADLOCK AT MADRID CONFERENCE

[Editorial: "Vacation for Madrid Conference"]

[Text] Poor Madrid Conference: No sooner had the CSCE opened its second meeting in Madrid in November 1980 [as published] than the Soviet troops' entry into Afghanistan caused an initial major crisis in East-West relations.

The emotion prompted by that grave violation of the accords signed in Helsinki 5 years previously had only just subsided when the coup in Poland again plunged the conference into another crisis -- this time a final one. Following the chorus of insults at the resumption of proceedings in January, attended by Western foreign ministers, no progress has been made in any area.

The 35 delegations (all the European states except Albania, reinforced by the United States and Canada) have drawn the necessary conclusions. Following another deadlock disguised as a "coffee break" lasting almost 60 hours, an agreement was reached Monday, 8 March, to end the present phase of proceedings Friday and to resume the conference in the fall, probably 9 November.

The West wanted to hold only plenary sessions so as to condemn the military rule in Poland yet again. The Soviets and their allies wanted a return to "normality" and to resume work in the committee to draft a final document. Both sides managed to save face, because between now and Wednesday there will be alternate plenary sessions and committee meetings. But the West will not speak within the committees.

Doubtless the Eastern camp expects eventually to emerge victorious, and not without reason. Soviet delegate Mr Ilichev had to weather the Polish storm but expects that by November the situation will be sufficiently "normalized" on the banks of the Vistula and that feelings will have subsided sufficiently in the West for the conference to resume its usual proceedings, specifically on preparing for the European disarmament conference which Moscow wants so much.

For the West, the important point is that the conference has not been abandoned, merely suspended. Apart from Mr Chirac and, to a lesser extent, Mr Kissinger, no major Western politician has wished for an end to the "Helsinki process," despite the Polish tragedy. Even Mr Reagan (who, it is true, has been vigorously prompted by his European allies) did not include this measure among his sanctions against Warsaw and Moscow.

Be that as it may, the French Government -- supported on this point by Mr Barre -- regards the Helsinki accords as a "weapon" that "is now backfiring" on those who initiated them in the Eastern bloc. But if, as Mr Mauroy told the National Assembly in December, this weapon should be used by speaking out "loudly and clearly" in Madrid, it is to be hoped that this will not be to condemn another crime. It would be a good thing to avert faits accomplis.

UK NAVY COMMANDER WARNS OF WEAKENED NATO AT SEA

[Desmond Wettern report: "NATO Navies Cut as Russians Build"]

[Text] A grave warning that the strength of NATO at sea has declined by as much as 50 percent in some instances during the past 10 years has been given by the C-in-C Naval Home Command.

Adml Sir James Eberle, one of the Navy's two top commanders, points out that the American chief of naval operations had said last year that there was no longer any assurance that the West had the ability to prevail at sea in a conflict with Russia. This had resulted in a net increase of 25 ships in the American fleet, but the same concern had not been evident in Europe.

"In 1970 the number of Soviet nuclear powered submarines was 20 more than those of NATO," said Sir James. "Today that lead has almost doubled" he told a meeting of London University's Military Education Committee.

In 1970 NATO and the Warsaw Pact both had about 155 operational conventional diesel-electric powered submarines. The number in the NATO navies had now declined by two-thirds, while the number in the Warsaw Pact had risen to more than 240. "The idea that anti-submarine and barrier operations in the Greenland-Iceland-Britain gap can totally contain Soviet naval forces in the Norwegian Sea is conceptionally unsound since it merely moves the Russia start line 1200 miles south from North Cape.

"But its most serious drawback is that it cannot work. It does not cope with ships deployed before the start of hostilities; nor is anti-submarine warfare technology capable of ensuring sufficient watertightness of the barrier. "We have no alternative but to exploit the advantages of defence in depth by beginning our anti-submarine operations as far north as possible and routing vulnerable Atlantic shipping as far south as possible."

Since 1970 the number of carriers in the NATO navies had dropped from 38 to 15 and the number of escorts from 500 to little more than 300. The total of NATO maritime patrol aircraft had been halved and those in the Warsaw Pact had increased from 500 to more than 600. In 1970 the NATO national had more than 500 mine countermeasures vessels. This had been reduced by more than 40 percent, while the mine threat had increased in scope and area. There was a danger "that we have forgotten the lessons of the Battle of the Atlantic; that a war at sea is not necessarily short, because it is the actions of the enemy rather than ourselves that control its duration; that numbers of escorts is important; and that to win the anti-submarine battle requires coordinated use of all our assets -- aircraft, surface ships and submarines."

DANISH CP 'SURPRISED' BY PRAVDA CRITICISM

PM151445 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 7 Mar 82 p 7

[Text] The call by the Soviet party organ PRAVDA to the Danish Communist Party [DKP] to expand its contacts with the peace movement and the strongest Soviet criticism hitherto of the party's poor results in the Folketing election last December have caused surprise within the DKP. "I am thorougly amazed that PRAVDA accuses us of underestimating the importance of peace work and of having given too little priority to it," Central Committee member Hans Kloster said Saturday [6 March]. Kloster is also chairman of the party's Economic and Political Committee. "We are not a peace party but a revolutionary party building on the theory of Lenin and Marx that we must promote economic as well as political and ideological struggle," Kloster said.

In the economic field Kloster said that the greatest problem in Denmark is unemployment, but that the greatest problem in the political field is peace work and the movement of solidarity with oppressed peoples. "In the ideological field some of the greatest problems are those to be found in the Soviet Union. These are the submarine affair, the import of grain and the socialist nation's large debts to foreign countries," Kloster said.

The Soviet criticism was presented in a major article Friday in PRAVDA and written by one of the paper's frequently used commentators, Vitaliy Korionov.

PAHR SAYS RELATIONS WITH U.S. 'UNIMPAIRED'

AU161434 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1133 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Roland Machatschke interview with Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr at Vienna-Schwechat Airport after his arrival from Washington on 16 Mar -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] The relations between Austria and the United States are unimpaired, but there are still different views on Al-Qadhdhafi's visit to Vienna -- that is what you have said, Mr Minister. That is how you have been quoted this morning in our Morning Journal program. Now the question is whether these different views apply to details such as Al-Qadhdhafi's utterances in Vienna, or do they involve questions of principle, the question that Al-Qadhdhafi was invited to Vienna at all?

[Answer] The differences between our views apply to questions of principle. Our assessment of the visit differs from that of the United States, and there are different views also regarding the expediency of the visit. However, as I have said, this does not indicate any impairment of Austria's relations with the United States. As I have been assured, the qualities of our relations are of quite a different nature and thus cannot be impaired by such differences of opinion as quite naturally occur between states.

[Question] The Austrian People's Party [OeVP] foreign policy spokesman, Steiner, declared yesterday at a press conference -- he was in Washington last week -- that Austria has lost prestige through the visit. What is your opinion about that, Mr Minister?

[Answer] Well, I don't know with whom Parliamentary Deputy Steiner has spoken, but I have spoken with the leading representatives of the U.S. administration, and I have not gained such an impression by any means. I believe that Mr Steiner has indulged in wishful thinking here, because actually his aim is to discredit the Austrian Government and Austrian foreign policy.

[Question] The OeVP has also criticized the course of Austria's foreign policy. It charged that this course was leading away from a policy of neutrality in the traditional sense, to a policy of nonalignment. Have the differences of opinion between the government and the big opposition party on foreign policy grown to a point where one can no longer speak of a joint foreign policy, the principle of a joint foreign policy?

[Answer] I believe that one can still, as in the past, speak of a joint foreign policy, because in actual fact the differences of views are very slight. They are merely played up by the OeVP again and again for obvious domestic political reasons. In talks on specific matters, which are held again and again between government and opposition in the foreign policy sector, there are only very, very slight substantive differences of opinion.

[Question] Let us return to your U.S. visit, Mr Minister. What caused more excitement on the part of the Americans, actually -- Al-Qadhdhafi's anti-American statements in Vienna on several occasions, or the possibility, mentioned by Chancellor Kreisky, that Austria might sell arms to Libya?

[Answer] Undoubtedly Al-Qadhdhafi's statements about the United States and President Reagan have irritated the United States more than reports about alleged Austrian arms sales which, incidentally, were carried by only two newspapers in the United States: first the Washington POST published a report with specific reference to OeVP Deputy Koenig as its source, and later on this report was picked up by the WALL STREET JOURNAL. Otherwise, the U.S. public did not take any notice of it.

[Question] But Chancellor Kreisky declared in a press conference here at Schwechat Airport on Saturday that, while he himself did not discuss such arms deals, such talks had been held and were still being held. Did you discuss this problem with your U.S. interlocutors, and would the Americans criticize Austria in some form or other, should it actually conclude arms deals with Libya?

[Answer] I discussed this problem with Deputy Secretary of State Stoessel, and I assured him that, should such arms exports actually materialize, we would deal with them in accordance with the provisions of the Austrian Arms Exports Act, just as with any other arms exports.

[Question] In his talks in Vienna Libyan chief of state Al-Qadhdhafi, as well as the Libyan foreign minister in his talks with you, apparently made clear that Libya was seeking closer relations with the West, with West Europe; it was also mentioned that Al-Qadhdhafi would like to visit the United States. Do the Americans believe that this was meant seriously, and do they believe that there could be some kind of normalization between them, the Americans and Libya?

[Answer] I informed my interlocutors about Al-Qadhdhafi's wish to open Libya's relations toward the West and to overcome existing differences of opinion through negotiations. This information was received with interest, but it rather seems that there are continuing doubts as to Al-Qadhdhafi's credibility. However, his future attitude will certainly by taken into consideration [by the Americans] and they are asking themselves, should there actually be a change in Al-Qadhdhafi's policy toward a more moderate line, if this is not a success for the U.S. policy of strength.

FISCHER VIEWS ANTI-AMERICANISM, LIBYAN'S VISIT

AU161208 Veinna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 16 Mar 82 p 5

[Exclusive interview with Heinz Fischer, Austrian Socialist Party (SPOe) parliamentary floor leader -- date and place not given: "No Anti-Americanism in the SPOe"]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr Floor Leader Fischer, on Wednesday there will be a session of the Foreign Policy Council to discuss developments in Poland and the visit of [Libyan revolution leader] Al-Qadhdhafi. What is the position of the Socialist faction in parliament on these issues?

[Answer] If the Austrian People's Party [OeVP] submits an urgent interpellation about the Al-Qadhdhafi visit it will surely receive a proper answer, but such an answer would probably not contain much that is new: The visit has brought an intensive exchange of opinions, during which it was shown that on many issues Austria holds views that are different from those of Al-Qadhdhafi. However, it has also provided an opportunity to familiarize Al-Qadhahafi with Austrian positions and moreover to intensify economic contacts.

[Question] The OeVP has assessed Al-Qadhdhafi's visit as an affront to the United States, as an expression of an anti-Americanism in the Austrian Government or in the SPOe. What do you say about that?

[Answer] There is no anti-Americanism in the SPOe. This can be said with absolute certainty. Even less can one interpret the visit of a foreign statesman to Austria as an unfriendly act against any other country. The United States is a superpower and Austria is a small, neutral country; nevertheless, our relations are based on equal rights. And this principle means that state guests of the United States -- whoever they may be -- do not constitute an anti-Austrian act, and state guests of Austria -- whoever they may be -- do not constitute an anti-American act.

Incidentally, Honecker's visit to Vienna was not regarded as an anti-FRG act, nor were visits by other Arab government chiefs regarded as being directed against Israel or a visit by a Soviet delegation as an unfriendly act against China, etc.

So, what is the point of it all? Anyone who regards official visits to Austria as opportune only if the visitor would also be welcome in a certain other capital is not assessing Austrian sovereignty and independence correctly. This goes not only for Washington but, of course, also for Moscow and indeed for any other capital.

[Question] However, the charge of anti-Americanism is based not only on the Al-Qadhdhafi visit but also on various criticial remarks about the United States made recently.

[Answer] I would like to answer this question as clearly as possible: We Austrians -- irrespective of political party affiliation -- feel an unrestrained affinity with the American people and, in addition, gratitude for America's magnificent attitude in the struggle against Hitler and regarding European reconstruction. We have the greatest respect for the impressive democratic tradition of the United States. There can be no doubt that the U.S. political system is much, much closer to us than for example than the political system of the Soviet Union. However, we do have great reservations regarding the conservative economic policy of the current U.S. administration marked by high interest rates and millions of unemployed. Is this perhaps something one must not openly say? For example, we have the same or even greater reservations regarding the economic policy of British Government chief Mrs Thatcher, but no one calls that "anti-British."

[Question] Are there not also differences, with the United States for example, regarding the assessment of the Polish issue?

[Answer] As far as the Polish issue is concerned the main, very grave differences are between the United States and the USSR. And -- like many other European states -- Austria does not completely share the opinion of either one of the superpowers. We are of the opinion that martial law in Poland should be eliminated as quickly as possible, that the political prisoners must be released, and that the Poles must determine their future path themselves, without outside interference or even the threat of such interference.

At the same time, however, we believe that the imposing of sanctions against Poland or against other countries neither benefits the Polish people nor is it likely to speed up the abolition of martial law, but rather that it will have the opposite effect. Hence I must repeat once more: This is not an anti-American position, nor is it an anti-Soviet position, but the position of a neutral, democratic, independent European state.

[Question] Complaints are being heard more and more frequently on the part of the two opposition parties that the joint foreign policy is being threatened.

[Answer] Joint foreign policy does not mean -- and has never meant -- that there are beside or behind the foreign minister two "shadow foreign ministers" of the opposition parties with equal rights, that the foreign minister has to obtain the consent of the two opposition parties before every decision or before every statement. Let me remind you of the fact that the OEVP, when it was in control of the government, forced through the Austrian Nationalrat the so-called South Tirol settlement, the "Operation Calendar" -- which, incidentally, still has not been fulfilled after 14 years -- against the votes of the SPOE, but that it nevertheless spoke of a joint foreign policy. Joint foreign policy means that the fundamental elements of Austria's foreign policy are supported jointly by all parties represented in parliament -- and that is undoubtedly the case.

KREISKY WOULD 'LIKE' TO VISIT U.S. IF INVITED

AU171252 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 16 Mar 82 p 3

[Report on Chancellor Bruno Kreisky's press conference in Vienna following 15 March cabinet meeting]

[Excerpts] If he were invited, he would "like very much" to visit the United States "at the earliest possible opportunity," Chancellor Bruno Kreisky declared after yesterday's cabinet meeting.

He added that there had already been hints in that respect on the part of the United States. According to Kreisky, an upsetting of U.S.-Austrian relations by the Al-Qadhdhafi visit is out of the question. Austria's relations with the American democracy are much too deeply rooted for that. The chancellor also declared that Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr's report on his U.S. visit clearly indicated that the U.S. State Department was judging the visit of Libyan revolution leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi to Austria with "great correctness" and with "respect" for the Austrian position.

Kreisky does not want to adopt the role of mediator between the United States and Libya because this will probably not be desired by the United States. As far as Al-Qadhdhafi is concerned, Kreisky said he knew that the Libyan would be interested in a certain easing of tensions in Libyan-U.S. relations. Certainly there is a genuine conflict between Libya and the United States. The downing of two Libyan military planes by the United States was an unusual and "very resolute gesture," Kreisky declared.

Different opinions on foreign political issues between the United States and Austria are nothing unusual, Kreisky went on to say. He recalled that at first the United States had not been happy at all over his support for the PLO, but that later on it was glad for his contacts with them.

Moreoever, the United States knows that Austria always informs its friends very frankly about talks with political figures in whom it assumes that there is interest. This was also done regarding Al-Qadhdhafi, he said.

Kreisky did not want to judge to what extent Interior Minister Erwin Lanc's statement in parliament was or was not anti-American, but he said that he was going to carefully study the passage concerned.

Kreisky was also asked why he had not called a meeting of the Foreign Policy Council before the Al-Qadhdhafi visit to inform this body in advance. Kreisky stressed that the Foreign Policy Council had no right to exert influence on foreign policy, but that it served exclusively to inform the opposition after the event. Moreover, Al-Qadhdhafi had come earlier than was originally planned. Kreisky expressed the opinion that even an advance discussion of the visit by the Foreign Policy Council would not have kept the Austrian People's Party [OeVP] from displaying such an "unqualified" attitude twoard the guest.

Kreisky reaffirmed again that he was not happy over the unqualified statements by Libyan revolution leader Al-Qadhdhafi, and pointed out that he had already said so directly after Al-Qadhdhafi's departure.

BRANDT CALLS STRAUSS CONDUCT 'EMBARRASSING'

LD161556 Hamburg DPA in German 1243 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Text] 16 Mar (DPA) -- SPD Chairman Willy Brandt has sharply criticized statements made by CSU Chairman Franz Josef Strauss in the United States. To the SPD Executive in Bonn on Tuesday Brandt described Strauss' behavior in the United States as not only embarrassing but also undignified. The SPD leader was referring to reports according to which Strauss spoke in Washington of the SPD/FDP coalition and said that the CDU/CSU adopts the same general line as the United States.

Brandt said of this that the FRG is a reliable partner in the Western alliance. "But reliability is not the same as submissiveness."

Once again Brandt advised his party against taking any part in demonstrations at the NATO summit in Bonn in June, which is to be attended by American President Ronald Reagan. Brandt said that on this occasion he disapproves of demonstrations both for and against. It is of considerable importance for the FRG's standing in the world that it should not be seen to be an impolite host.

SAARLAND SPD CHAIRMAN VISITS WITH HONECKER

LD161730 Hamburg DPA in German 1820 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Text] East Berlin, 16 Mar (DPA) -- During a more than 2-hour meeting with Erich Honecker, GDR state council chairman and SED [Socialist Unity Party of Germany] general secretary, in East Berlin Oskar Lafontaine, member of the SPD Executive, today discussed arms limitation and inner-German relations. Lafontaine, who is also chairman of the Saarland SPD and mayor of Saarbruecken, told journalists that it is important to hear the views of the GDR leadership in a detailed exchange of ideas.

Lafontaine said that the Federal Government and SPD Chairman Willy Brandt had been informed of his visit to the GDR and that he would brief them on the outcome of his talks. He said he had discussed the easing of travel restrictions, development of economic relations and youth exchanges between the two German states, but he would give no details.

According to Lafontaine, the announcement made by Soviet state and party leader Leonid Brezhnev on foregoing for the time being the setting up of further SS-20 medium-range missiles in the European part of the Soviet Union was also touched upon briefly. During the discussion, which was held in a friendly atmosphere, the peace movements in the West and East were also examined.

Immediately after his meeting with Honecker, which was also attended by Herbert Hueber, chief of the SED Central Committee department responsible for relations with the Federal Republic, and Norbert Engel, Saarland deputy SPD chairman, Lafontaine briefed Klaus Boelling, the head of the Federal Republic's permanent mission in East Berlin. Lafontaine, who is in the GDR at the invitation of the GDR Institute for Politics and Economics, will also visit Dresden, Weimar and Erfurt during the next few days.

LAMBSDORFF SEES GDR AS GOOD CREDIT RISK

LD161440 Hamburg DPA in German 1047 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Text] Cairo, 16 Mar (DPA) -- In the coming negotiations with the GDR the Federal Government does not wish to establish "a formal connection" between the interest-free overdraft credit facility for intra-German trade -- the so-called swing -- and the concessions on human rights demanded by Bonn.

Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff does, however, believe that it is "absolutely necessary to point out to the GDR that there is an overall political connection."

On the eve of his trip to the GDR Lambsdorff stressed in an interview with DPA in Cairo that if the overall "political conditions" are right, then "in the interests of both sides the basis of trade relations should not be restricted, changed or limited." "We adhere to this: The fact that the sphere of concessions in human rights is a sovereign decision of the GDR is something which we do not deny either." "On the other hand, the issue of the extension and scope of the swing agreement is a sovereign decision of our side -- always with the proviso that we must obtain the consent of the Federal Bank for an extension."

The interest-free overdraft credit facility will be reduced at the end of June from DM850 million to 200 million, if by then no new arrangement has been made. In Lambsdorff's words the GDR has, however, "for quite some time made use of this credit facility with much smaller amounts, which arises from the fact that last year the GDR had a trade surplus with the FRG."

Questioned about the GDR's high foreign debts the economics minister explained in the DPA interview that the GDR is not one of the group of Eastern bloc countries toward which the West should be more cautious in the future regarding granting loans. "In general in the Western banking system there will develop a certain restraint in the granting of credits to CEMA countries," said Graf Lambsdorff who has been in Cairo since last weekend for talks with the Egyptian Government.

In the minister's view the "fact that the GDR does not use the interest-free overdraft credit facility to the tune of some DM400-450 million even though it could, is proof that there can and should be no talk of a precarious loan or currency situation in the GDR."

NIGERIAN PRESIDENT ARRIVES ON STATE VISIT

LD170914 Hamburg DPA in German 0609 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 17 Mar (DPA) -- The president of Nigeria, Alhaji Shehu Shagari, arrived today for a 4-day state visit to the Federal Republic. The head of state of the West African republic was welcomed with a 21-gun salute when his special plane landed at Cologne-Bonn Airport.

After being welcomed by protocol officials, the African guest flew by helicopter to the Federal Government's guest residence, Schloss Gymnich. During the morning, he will be received by Federal President Karl Carstens with military honors at his residence, Villa Hammerschmidt.

MORATORIUM 'EXPRESSION OF SOVIET SUPERIORITY'

DW171057 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 1705 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Reporter Kopp interview with FRG Deputy Government Spokesman Dr Lothar Ruehl on 16 March; place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] The superpowers have adjourned their not very spectacular and almost noiseless round of negotiations on medium-range missiles for 2 months. If you were to draw an interim balance of these talks, whose results will be of extreme importance for Bonn, would you see signs indicating that the negotiators have made any progress?

[Answer] From the very beginning the negotiations were supposed to take place over a long period of time, and we could not expect that an agreement would even begin to take shape between November and March. This pause in the negotiations is supposed to allow the state of negotiations to be examined and various Soviet suggestions and arguments as well as the figures on their medium-range systems to be considered. This corresponds to the long years of SALT negotiations which always took place in rounds and not in a continuous conference.

[Question] It was probably not just by chance that CPSU General Secretary Brezhnev called much attention at the end of the first Geneva round by announcing a unilateral moratorium. Do you believe this is a sign that the Kremlin seriously wants to achieve progress in Geneva, or is it an expression of Soviet superiority in the medium-range field?

[Answer] It is definitely an expression of Soviet superiority because at the moment the Soviet Union has about 300 operational SS-20 missile systems deployed throughout Soviet territory. Two-thirds of these are targeted on Western Europe and can attack West European targets from the Asian part of the Soviet Union beyond the Ural Mountains as well as from the European part of the country. This means the Soviet Union has an all-time high capability to attack with medium-range nuclear missiles.

Brezhnev spoke of an approximate balance in this field of weaponry in May 1978. Even at that time the chancellor did not accept the contention that there was a balance. Today this is even less justifiable.

General Secretary Brezhnev has now announced a unilateral halt to SS-20 deployment in the European part of the Soviet Union and reduction -- not further specified -- of medium-range missiles; what I mean is that he did not say that the number of SS-20 missiles will be reduced. It could well be that it is the number of the older missiles which will be reduced, missiles which must be recommissioned anyway.

Let me now get to my assessment. Whether this constitutes a step in the right direction depends on whether the Soviet Union intends to make this a turning point in its medium-range missile armament, that is, whether it not only discontinues increasing its missile arsenal but is also receptive to a real reduction within the framework of the Geneva negotiations. The Federal Government, at any rate, continues to believe it is necessary to achieve concrete results at the negotiations in Geneva by late summer 1983. It also advocates the zero solution on both sides. Consequently, the Federal Government will judge each step in this field by its contribution to attaining this goal.

SPD Welcomes 'Unilateral Step'

LD161728 Hamburg DPA in German 1414 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 16 Mar (DPA) -- The moratorium on the deployment of nuclear medium-range missiles announced by Soviet party leader Leonid Brezhnev has been welcomed by the SPD as "a unilateral step by the Soviet Union." Social Democrat disarmament expert Egon Bahr said that this step means that the Soviet Union's ever-growing superiority in these weapons during the Geneva negotiations with the United States would not continue to grow. At the same time, he insisted that the superpowers try to successfully conclude their negotiations in Geneva by the end of 1983, the planned timing for the prospective deployment of new American nuclear missiles in Western Europe.

Bahr pointed out that the Soviet moratorium on deployment only applies to the European part of the Soviet Union. The political profit from Brezhnev's statement would be diminished if the Soviet Union were to deploy SS-20 missiles east of the Urals in such a way that they could reach Western Europe.

In its draft resolution for the party conference to be held in Munich in April, the SPD Executive has once again come out in favor of asking the superpowers negotiating in Geneva to eventually consider the conclusion of agreements on a bilateral moratorium. Independent of Brezhnev's initiative, SPD Chairman Willy Brandt spoke in favor of this proposal on Tuesday before the Social Democrat Party Council in Bonn. On the other hand, the party's left wing wants to push through the demand for a moratorium at the Munich party conference.

Juergen Moellemann, the security policy spokesman of the FDP Parliamentary Group, called the moratorium proposal a welcome step with regard to the continuation of international disarmament talks. He said that he hoped that it would make the continuation of the negotiations toward the zero option easier. However, in Moellemann's view the Soviet proposal would be far more convincing if it were not linked to threats of retaliatory measures in the event that the United States begins its planned deployment of new medium-range missiles in Western Europe.

Paper Views 'Conditions'

DW170929 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 17 Mar 82 p 4

[Commentary signed JR: "Brezhnev's Moratorium Conditions"]

[Text] The news from Washington and Moscow crossed: The U.S. Department of State indicated that the Soviet Union now has 300 SS-20 medium-range missiles carrying 900 nuclear warheads, and that it is preparing 5 new launching pads; Soviet party chief Brezhnev told the Trade Union Congress that the Soviet Union would temporarily suspend further deployment of SS-20 missiles in the European part of the country.

The simple conclusion could be drawn that the Soviet Union has now completed its SS-20 production program and is trying to make political capital by making the moratorium appear to be a concession to the West Europeans, whereas this moratorium was really part of Moscow's armament planning.

Brezhnev, however, does not allow us to draw such simple conclusions. The moratorium can be lifted at any time if the United States indicates that it will begin counter-armament in Western Europe, and all the other statements by the party chief -- no replacement for obsolete missiles, reduction of existing launching pads -- would probably also become invalid in such a case. A condition has been given whose nonfulfillment would mean continued Soviet arming. The connection with Soviet-American negotiations in Geneva, which have now been adjourned for 2 months, cannot be ignored. The moratorium is supposed to force the Americans to also contribute to limiting medium-range wespons -- by simply renouncing them.

The Moscow leadership wants to prevent NATO counterarmament under all circumstances, and there is not much time left to do this. The Soviets, however, consider constant pressure from the West European public on the United States to be a good means to achieve this aim without being forced to make concessions themselves.

GREMETZ 'SATISFIED' WITH DELEGATION PRC VISIT

PM161041 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 11 Mar 82 p 9

[Text] The PCF delegation which visited China at the invitation of the CCP Central Committee returned to Paris yesterday morning. Let us recall that it was headed by Maxime Gremetz, Central Committee secretary and chief of the Foreign Policy Section, and comprised Central Committee member Henri Malberg and Foreign Policy Section assistant Alain Roux.

On his arrival at Roissy-Charles de Gaulle Airport Maxime Gremetz made the following statement to journalists: "As you know, our delegation was the first to visit China in 23 years. If I had to sum up in one word my assessment of the 1-week visit we have just made to the PRC I would say: Satisfaction.

"Satisfaction with the fraternal welcome we received from the CCP. Satisfaction, too, with the friendly and frank atmosphere of the 13 hours of talks which we had with several CCP leaders, including Comrades Li Xiannian, party vice chairman, and Ji Pengfei, chief of international relations.

"On the subject of these talks I would like to say three things:

" -- We exchanged information on our parties' action in our respective national conditions. This information and the visits we made enabled us to more effectively assess the effort being made by that country of 1 billion inhabitants to achieve progress in socialism through many difficulties.

" -- We had a direct, wide and detailed exchange of views on international problems.

" -- Finally, we discussed the official restoration of relations between our two parties.

"At the end of these talks we agreed that the different positions or the divergent opinions existing on some questions should not be an obstacle to the restoration of relations between our parties -- relations based on mutual respect, independence and equality. As you know, the French Communists are particularly attached to that concept of relations among communist parties.

"Finally, we were also satisfied at the invitation addressed to Georges Marchais to visit China, which was officially handed to me by CCP Vice Chairman Li Xiannian on behalf of his party's Central Committee and which our party accepted with pleasure. We will fix the date of that visit by joint agreement, taking account of both sides' commitments.

"Thus, as you can see, this meeting enabled us to make progress. Developing our relations and our cooperation on clear bases is the common desire strongly expressed during this visit to Beijing."

In reply to journalists' questions, Maxime Gremetz stated in particular: "We discussed everything. There was no taboo subject. It is that concept of relations, on which we are in agreement with the CCP, which makes it possible to hold the view that there are differences between us but that, beyond those areas of disagreement and taking them into account, we can restore our relations and cooperate."

The PCF, Maxime Gremetz said in reply to other questions, does not intend to play the role of intermediary between the CCP and other parties. "Interparty relations are the affair of each party." He recalled that it had been agreed that the discussions which took place in Beijing had a private nature and that it was, therefore, out of the question to publish their content.

JOSPIN COMMENTS ON LATIN AMERICAN VISIT

PM150827 Paris L'UNITE in French 5 Mar 82 p 15

[Unattributed interview with PS First Secretary Lionel Jospin: "Socialist International Will Be Able To Propose Positive and Dynamic Path for Latin America" -- date and place of interview not specified]

[Text] Following the cancellation of the Caracas conference and at Willy Brandt's request, a factfinding mission of the Socialist International visited Latin America last week.

PS First Secretary Lionel Jospin, who is just back, took stock for L'UNITE of the mission's aims and results.

[L'UNITE] What is the state of the alleged differences between the Latin American and European parties over Central America?

[Jospin] You cannot place all the European parties on one side and all the Latin American parties on the other. The uncertainties about the situation in Central America permeate the European and Latin American parties. It was therefore important to meet with a number of Latin American parties belonging to the Socialist International or governments directly affected by the problems of that area. That is what [Spanish Socialist Workers' Party Secretary General] Felipe Gonzalez and I have done on behalf of the International. Following the cancellation of the leaders' conference which should have taken place in Caracas, a coming meeting of the Socialist International presidium will specify the Socialist International opinion on this issue, because the area's future (peace or war, economic progress or continued poverty, human rights respected or dictatorships) is a crucial issue for the international community as a whole. The contacts which Felipe Gonzalez and I were able to have during our brief mission with the parties which are apparently the most anxious, such as Venezuela's Democratic Action, lead me to believe that the Socialist International will be able to propose a dynamic and positive path.

[L'UNITE] Does not the cancellation of the Caracas conference run the risk of being interpreted as a desire to curb any policy contrary to that of the Reagan administration in the region and, under the circumstances, French policy?

[Jospin] One thing struck me in particular; that is the very broad agreement expressed both by the Democratic Action leaders (Carlos Andres Perez and the whole leadership) and Costa Rica's National Liberation Party, on behalf of the Socialist International member parties, and by Panamanian President Royo, whose party is not a member of the International with respect to French policy and the initiatives undertaken vis-a-vis El Salvador and Nicaragua. Therefore, I do not believe at all that it is a matter of a negative signal with respect to French stances. What is true is that these parties are afraid of a negative evolution in Nicaragua entailing U.S. reactions. The PS believes that the cancellation of the conference is a regrettable decision but one which already belongs to the past. What counts today is the means of asserting a policy enabling the countries of Central and Latin America to ensure their independence and their development in justice and democracy.

[L'UNITE] So the PS is maintaining its relations with movements outside the Socialist International, such as the Democratic Revolutionary Front [FDR] in El Salvador. Are you reaffirming today the PS' "traditional" stance in favor of a political solution in El Salvador and your support for the Nicaraguan revolutionary process -- two stances directly conflicting with U.S. policy?

[Jospin] The FDR brings together several Salvadoran political organizations, such as the National Revolutionary Movement -- a member of the International -- whose chairman is Guillermo Ungo, with whom I met in Panama.

In Nicaragua, the Sandino Front is a political movement directing the process begun in that country following the fall of Somoza, in which it played a large part. It is true that it is not socialist in the sense we understand.

The proposal of a negotiated political solution between the conflicting sides in El Salvador seems to me the wisest solution, taking into account, moreover, the Salvadoran army's inability -- like the guerrilla groups -- to win complete victory over the enemy. It is necessary to end a war in which the foremost casualty is the civilian population. To achieve that, since the FDR has made serious proposals, it rests with Napoleon Duarte's junta to sit down at the negotiating table. The United States is well aware that the coming election, whose legitimacy the international community cannot recognize, will not provide a real solution. It rests with the United States, taking into account its commitment with the Salvadoran army, to note this state of affairs and to promote a negotiated political solution, such as was proposed in the French-Mexican joint declaration. We still believe that the civil conflicts in Central America are caused primarily by situations of injustice, inequality and repression, and that nobody has anything to gain -- at any event, not the peoples of the region -- from turning them into East-West conflicts.

As far as Nicaragua is concerned, the Sandinists' original blueprint (political pluralism, mixed economy, genuine nonalignment) received the Socialist International's support. For reasons undoubtedly stemming both from the Reagan administration's narrowmindedness and from a certain dogmatism on the part of the Nicaraguan leaders, a siege mentality is dominating the country's evolution. That evolution must be broken. There is still time. That is why I believe that France should continue, and undoubtedly increase, its economic, financial and cultural assistance to Nicaragua. The Sandinist leaders should realize that the evolution of their country and their revolution, the forms it will take, does not concern them alone. Their responsibilities extend beyond their national territory alone. I believe that their initial responses in Managua last week to Mexican President Lopez Portillo's important speech prove that they are aware of this. Those leaders are free to choose, but it is a good thing that they know our thinking.

GOVERNMENT LODGES PROTEST ON TURKISH ARRESTS

TA110558 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0500 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Text] The arrest of Turkish Peace Committee Association officials, including Istanbul Bar President Orhan Apaydin, has been officially protested by the French Government. In a statement on this issue, the spokesman of the French Foreign Ministry said that France lodged a protest with the Turkish Embassy in Paris protesting the arrest of Turkish Peace Committee officials. The arrest of several intellectuals for being members of the committee is being considered as a violation of human rights. The note expresses the French Government's deep concern over these developments in Turkey and asks for an end to arrests.

FABIUS WARNS AGAINST DANGERS OF EXCESSIVE DEFICIT

PM151457 Paris LE MONDE in French 11 Mar 82 pp 1, 32

[Alain Vernholes report: "Mr Fabius Warns Against Dangers of an Excessive Deficit"]

[Text] It was a grave and solemn warning against an excessive public deficit that [Budget Minister] Mr Laurent Fabius was to address to the government members at the usual cabinet meeting Wednesday 10 March.

The figures speak for themselves: The budget deficit, limited to Fr30 billion in 1980, reached Fr78 billion in 1981 and should approach Fr120 billion this year.

The first estimates for 1983 show -- with no change in taxes -- a deficit of over Fr200 billion. That is an unacceptable figure.

Of course, the French deficit is still one of the smallest in the world, the industrialized world, of course (around 3 percent of GNP at present). But at the present rate that advantage would quickly be canceled out unless curbs were introduced, and quickly, since great efforts are now being made in other countries to reduce public deficits: that is true of Japan, Britain, the FRG and the United States once again.

Whether you like it or not, the dominant ideology in the economic sphere in the Western world is still that of the need for financial and budgetary balance. In a way, despite rather unconvincing results that view of things has been strengthened over the years since, following the first oil crisis, many industrialized countries used the budgetary weapon -- and state intervention -- to revive business and growth. This is no longer the case, at the beginning of 1982, and France is more or less alone in pursuing an active policy of reviving the economy through the public sector.

Is this isolation the fear of experiencing a new period of economic depression in the world? Whatever the answer, there is alarm at the highest level of state -- in other words in the Elysee, Matignon and the Rue de Rivoli -- about an increase in the public deficit which is especially dangerous since it concerns both state finances and those of social security and unemployment insurance (Fr40 billion in 1983 forecast for the latter two sectors if there are no new measures).

That is, roughly speaking, the picture painted by Mr Fabius and conveyed to the government members by [economy and finance minister] Mr Delors. The lesson to be learned from it is clear: The period of revived public spending which followed the elections in May and June 1981 is well and truly over. A chapter has been closed. The needs for stringency and austerity are reemerging.

The daily exercise of power imposes harsh constraints. The first studies carried out in 1983 show that the margins for maneuver in the budgetary sphere are minimal: that is not a new situation since each year, during preparations for the following budget, the measures adopted in previous years have to be taken into account. It is estimated that out of a total public spending which has now attained Fr800 billion, new measures represent only 2 to 3 percent of the whole, in other words some Fr20-25 billion. The explanation for that formidable inertia -- which a team arriving in office finds difficult to accept -- can be found in a few figures: the interest on the public debt, which already exceeds Fr50 billion for 1982 and will increase by more than 50 w [as published] in 1983; the growing burden of state "interventions" (for employment and also for enterprises); and the cost of administration, which it is virtually impossible to reduce (civil servants' wages, promotion and recruitment) and which alone represents around half of budgetary spending. It will be noted that so far 200,000 new jobs in the civil service have been financed through the budget since last July.

It is still too early to tell how the government will react to this "state of affairs." But it is possible to glimpse the scale of the battle which is going to be fought on the "budgetization" of a number of social burdens, with Mr Fabius refusing to make the state bear the costs -- which are deficits -- which [minister of national solidarity] Mrs Questiaux is trying to pass on to him. The problem is not just one of who will pay. It is rather -- at least in the view of Mr Delors and Mr Fabius -- one of awareness of the need to curb spending. Ultimately, the question is whether it is possible to pursue the reforms without new spending.

That question has been raised. Of course it concerns fiscal reform. But ultimately it calls into question the rate at which some of the reforms already started -- especially that of reducing the work week -- are being implemented.

The authorities' present considerations are strongly influenced by something which Mr Schmidt recently told Mr Jacques Delors in confidence. The FRG chancellor confided to the French minister that he did not see any end to the world economic crisis and that he rather thought it was just beginning.

MAUROY GIVES PEP TALK BEFORE 21 MARCH ELECTIONS

[Summary] All the political parties are preparing for Sunday's second round of local elections. The prime minister, Pierre Mauroy, intends to make two appearances on television -- tomorrow night and Friday night -- and also to hold the traditional press conference on Thursday at the Hotel Matignon. This afternoon, Mr Mauroy invited journalists to hear the slogan for the second round.

[Begin Mauroy recording] "To pursue its march ahead, a peaceful France must rally together and stay united. Change must keep its rhythm and must deepen. When a calm France sees its economy resume working, unemployment fall, inflation diminish; should one return to the policy of yesterday, which brought us to the edge of bankruptcy? Shame on those who wish for more, and more quickly. May they remain outside the rallying together of the entire left. It is up to you, the people, that your departments today, your communities in a year's time, live through the hour of change. You have the power for this, thanks to your ballot papers. I repeat, the transformation of French society -- change -- will never be the work of the government alone. It requires also the peaceful but resolute mobilization of our people." [end recording]

SEA-LAUNCHED MISSILE SUCCESSFULLY TESTED

NC121638 Paris AFP in English 1626 GMT 12 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 12 Mar (AFP) -- France has successfully tested a new sea-launched strategic missile, the M-4, the Defense Ministry said today. The three-stage missile, with a range of 4,000 km (2,480 miles), was fired sometime over the last two days over the Atlantic Ocean from the experimental submarine Gymnote off the Landes testing area, south-west France, sources said. Two out of three previous land-based tests, beginning in 1980, were also successful. Today's test at sea was "a decisive stage in the M-4 program," the Defense Ministry said.

The missile, made by the company Nationale Aerospatiale, can be armed with six 150-kiloton nuclear weapons, each 10 times more powerful than the bomb dropped by the United States on Hiroshima during World War II. Sixteen M-4 missiles are to be installed on the nuclear submarine L'Inflexible, scheduled for service in 1985 in France's "FOST" strategic sea force. L'Inflexible will be FOST's sixth submarine and will have more nuclear bombs than the other five combined.

Four of the other submarines will be refitted in rotation between 1985 and 1991 to take 16 M-4 missiles apiece, replacing the M-28 missiles now in use which have a 3,000 km (1,860 miles) range and carry one one-megaton nuclear warhead each. The M-4 missile can be fired from a greater depth and is more accurate than the M-20.

RED BRIGADES MEMBER TESTIMONY LINKS BULGARIA

[Excerpts] Verona, northern Italy, 16 Mar (ANSA) -- Relations between the Red Brigades and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) were broken off in April last year when Italian police arrested one of the Red Brigades' master-minds Mario Moretti, a court here was told today during hearings on the urban guerrillas' kidnap of U.S. Brigadier-General James Lee Dozier earlier this year. According to Red Brigades member Antonio Savasta, who has agreed to turn state's evidence, Moretti kept up relations with the PLO from 1978 until his arrest and personally negotiated a shipment of arms for the Italian group from Palestinian sources.

Savasta, charged with committing seventeen homicides in the last couple of years, is one of the prosecutions' remaining star witnesses after a ruling Monday that rejected many alleged confessions made by Red Brigades members implicated in the Dozier kidnap. The ruling was a blow for prosecution hopes to get a quick verdict against the seventeen charged with kidnapping Dozier on December 17 and holding him until January 28 when he was released by a special police unit in Padua. Rejection of the confessions was expected because of a wave of charges that they were obtained in an "atmosphere of physical and psychological exploitation" as one defense attorney put it yesterday, in reference to violations of arrestees' rights. According to the allegations, police violated these rights by questioning detainees in police stations and private apartments, by failing to transfer defendants to jails within 96 hours of their arrest as required by law, and by applying various forms of torture and maltreatment.

In other testimony before the court, Savasta said Moretti's arrest put the Red Brigades in serious trouble and the Dozier operation was partially envisaged to set up new international contacts. According to Savasta, Bulgaria promised arms and money provided it could have a say in running the kidnap, but his evidence on this point was at best circumstantial. He claimed that he had heard of the contacts through a member of the Red Brigades' Roman unit, Loris Scricciolo, who has told the police that two trade-union officials, his cousin Luigi and Luigi's wife, Paola Elia, were the go-betweens. The duo have now been in jail for more than a month, protesting their complete innocence, but kept behind bars on the mere word of a relation whom they believe was trying to progress up the ladder of command in the Red Brigades.

NEWS AGENCY RELEASES CPSU DECEMBER LETTER TO PCI

AU171007 Rome ANSA in English 0850 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 17 Mar (ANSA) -- A letter from the Soviet to Italian Communist Party rejecting the latter's critical stand on the December 13 military takeover in Poland had been published in Italy by a news agency generally considered to have close ties with the Italian Socialist Party. The letter was apparently sent at the end of December, right after the Italian party (PCI) condemned the enactment of martial law in Warsaw, and charged PCI leaders of "following in the footsteps of imperialist propaganda." The PCI stand, according to Soviet charges, "seriously damaged relations" between the two parties.

The Italian party granted that the letter as published by the agency was authentic but denied that any copies had filtered out of its leadership's archives. The PCI also said that the translation just published was different from the one it had in its possession. No one seems to know how the news agency got hold of the document.

POPE MEETS WITH VISITING CZECHOSLOVAK BISHOPS

LD111624 Vatican City in English to Central and West Europe 1445 GMT 11 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Of the 13 Czechoslovak dioceses -- 4 in Bohemia, 2 in Moravia and 7 in Slovakia -- only 5 have their own bishops and of these 2 are apostolic administrators. This was pointed out with some sorrow by the holy father on receiving the five Czech bishops in question in the Vatican late this morning.

The holy father went on to tell the five bishops that his meeting with them offered him an occasion to mention some positive aspects of religious life in their dioceses. I am thinking above all, he said, of the intensity of the spiritual life of the many Christian families assigned to your care. The pope also noted that there is a notable religious revival among the young in Czechoslovakia, in the search for a satisfying response to the meaning of life. Of no less importance than consolation, he said , is fact that the cult of the Blessed Virgin Mary continues and, indeed, grows in your dioceses. This is testified to by the various Marian sanctuaries which are visited by large numbers of the faithful each year. My prayer is, he said, that Mary, mother of mercy, may protect all your compatriots who confide in her.

Yet, John Paul II continued, while I unite myself with your joys and hopes, I cannot fail to share the preoccupations and problems of your episcopal ministry which each of you has been able personally to describe to me. This common presence of yours on the occasion of your visit is, the pope declared, a source of joy to me. But when I see that there are only five of you, I cannot but ask myself: When will the time come when the bishops of all the Czechoslovak dioceses will be able to be present? The fact that the majority of the dioceses in your country remain vacant fills me with deep sadness. For my part, I assure you, John Paul added, that I will spare no effort, as did my precedessors, to see to it that all the ecclesiastical provinces of your country, many of which have been without bishops for years, indeed, decades, be provided with their own worthy pastors who, like true fathers, may guide the priests and faithful entrusted to their care in conformity with the needs and the rights of the church of Christ.

Other points of concern were mentioned by the holy father in his discourse. In the first place, the number of priests is insufficient. Many parishes, he noted, have long been without a priest, and everything leads one to fear, unfortunately, that this number of parishes will grow in the future. With profound joy I have learnt that so many of your collaborators are good, zealous and faithful priests and give with generosity and extraordinary devotion in serving the people of God. But the large majority of them are advanced in age and frequently in poor health. To them I wish to express, the holy father told the Czech bishops, my deep appreciation and affectionate recollection in prayer that the Lord sustain them and help them in their pastorate.

Another problem was that of seminars and the formation of priests. This, said the pope, is an essential problem for the life of the church. Pointing with sorrow to the fact that the number of seminarians in Czechoslovakia does not correspond to the real needs of the country's dioceses, the holy father nonetheless wished to express his sincere solidarity with those young men who are following a divine call with so much faith and generosity and who must often patiently await the moment in which they may fulfill their priestly ideal. Another problem was that of the proper catechesis of the young and the family.

Lastly the pope's thoughts went out to the members of religious orders and congregations in Czechoslovakia. I know, he said, their conditions of life and the suffering of their souls. My affectionate thoughts and my prayers go constantly to them. John Paul ended his discourse by extending his apostolic blessing to all the faithful in Czechoslovakia, bishops, priests, religious and laity.

THATCHER 'DISMISSES' BREZHNEV MORATORIUM

LD161716 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1630 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Text] Mrs Thatcher today dismissed President Brezhnev's offer on a unilateral freeze on new nuclear range missiles west of the Urals.

The prime minister's criticism of the Soviet leader's move came at question time in the Commons, when she also announced that she is to speak on disarmament at a special session of the United Nations in New York, in June.

Mrs Thatcher said the Russians' freeze on nuclear weapons ignored two facts. "Firstly, it freezes the total superiority of the Soviet Union in these particular theatre nuclear weapons.

"Secondly, it ignores the fact that the SS-20s can just as well be deployed targeted on this country and the rest of Europe from beyond the Urals as they can this side of them."

Mrs Thatcher's attack on Mr Brezhnev's announcement of a moratorium on the replacement of old missiles by the newer SS-20s coincided with sceptical reaction from the Reagan administration in Washington.

During later exchanges, Mrs Thatcher stressed her commitment to negotiating disarmament -- but only from a position of strength -- and rejected a call for development of a European independent defence policy.

Mrs Thatcher said: "This government, like its predecessor, of which both Mr Foot and Mr Benn were members, believes in keeping a nuclear deterrent as a safeguard for our strength. We also believe it's far better to negotiate disarmament from a position of strength. We believe we do need to negotiate disarmament.

"I myself hope to go to the second special session of the United Nations in New York for the opening part of it to make a contribution on behalf of the United Kingdom."

Labour MP for Houghton-le-Spring, Mr Tom Urwin, asked Mrs Thatcher if she would support a suggestion put forward by French President Mitterrand for the "development of a European independent defence policy".

She replied: "I think we should be very wary before we have in Europe a scheme which applies only to Europe, while at the moment we have NATO.

"It seems to me that would not unite the Western world in defending its interests and it would have the possibility that it could divide us from our friends -- who are the ultimate guarantors of European freedom -- across the Atlantic."

NORWEGIAN PRIME MINISTER MAKES 1-DAY VISIT

PM161043 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 11 Mar 82 p 8

[Ivar Granaasen dispatch: "Increased NATO Concern Over El Salvador"]

[Text] London, 10 Mar -- After his 1-day London visit Norwegian Prime Minister Kaare Willoch stressed that it is unavoidable for NATO allies to have differing views of conditions outside the alliance's area.

In this context he pointed out how important it was that questions like El Salvador be discussed between alliance partners so that unnecessary problems can be avoided.

Prime Minister Thatcher's Downing Street office described the talks as "extremely friendly, as they should be between two countries which enjoy extremely close historical, political and trade ties." In his talks both with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington a number of international issues were discussed, including El Salvador, Poland and Turkey.

At a press conference afterward Prime Minister Willoch did not hide the fact that developments in countries outside the NATO area, in Central America, have led to some incipient strain for the alliance. Some people are making open attempts to discredit the United States because of President Reagan's El Salvador policy. In Norway this has led some voices to call for less intimate cooperation with the United States, Willoch added. However, he pointed out that there had as yet been no need to raise such questions at government level between Norway and the United States.

The talks in London were orientational and a wide spectrum of issues were discussed informally -- Atlantic relations, the coming Paris summit, the disarmament negotiations, the world economy, defense policy, the British economy and energy questions.

In reply to a question from the British press Prime Minister Willoch admitted that the Soviet proposal for a nuclear-free zone had been mentioned during Wednesday's talks. Here he pointed out that Norwegian security is not based on Soviet guarantees, and stressed the importance of a policy which does not disturb or cloud the disarmament negotiations in Geneva.

During the talks with British Energy Secretary Nigel Lawson oil prices were, of course, discussed and both sides agreed that the world market should determine price levels. Prime Minister Willoch was unwilling to make any predictions about the direction in which the market would move, and also avoided replying to a question about whether he expected any further decline in the price of North Sea oil. The British nuclear energy program, gas and coal were also discussed, as was the deprivatization [as published] of the British National Oil Corporation.

However, Willoch gave no indication of what his personal views on this topic were.

The prime minister confirmed that Defense Secretary John Nott had mentioned the British Rapier missile system during the talks, but that a Norwegian purchase of such a defense system had not been specifically discussed.

Replying to a direct question about whether he felt greater affinity with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's policies than with Prime Minister Thatcher's, Willoch replied that Schmidt pursues a sound foreign policy. However, he warned against dismissing Thatcher's policies at the present time. "Those who do so will get a great surprise," he added.

Willoch did not want to comment on Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir Geoffrey Howe's budget on Tuesday because he had not had an opportunity to study it in enough detail, but he added that Norway was also at present pursuing a policy which involves attempts to limit public spending.

GOVERNMENT REBUTS EDEK CHARGE OF NEGLECT

NC161856 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Text] An official statement referring to yesterday's statement by the socialist EDEK party's Central Committee describes as unfounded and arbitrary the allegation that the government has neglected or is neglecting the internationalization of the Cyprus problem. The projection of our national issue, the statement says, in all forums and at every opportunity has always existed and it is our foreign policy's main goal.

The statement adds that both in international conferences and in bilateral contacts the Cyprus Government particularly underlines the character of the Cyprus issue as the primary problem of invasion and occupation of part of Cyprus territory by Turkey. It is also emphatically stressed that the Cyprus issue is not, in essence, a difference between the Greek Cypriots and the Turkish Cypriots but an international problem of blatant violation of the principles of the UN Charter and of the generally accepted rules of international law.

The official statement says that the Cyprus Government in complete coordination with the Greek Government also promotes other ways for further internationalization of the Cyprus issue, among which is the convening of an international conference.

KIPRIANOU URGES INTERNATIONAL PRESSURE ON TURKEY

NC162033 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Text] President Kiprianou stressed today that it is time for the international community to raise its voice effectively in order to adopt the necessary measures, collectively, to ensure that Turkey will abandon its intransigent stance and any sinister designs it may have against Cyprus.

Speaking at the credentials presentation of the first Nepalese ambassador to Cyprus, General Basnyat, President Kiprianou also stated that Cyprus will exert pressure for the convening of an international conference under UN auspices. I believe vigorously, President Kiprianou stressed, that only with international pressure can progress be achieved for a just solution of the Cyprus problem based on the UN resolutions and summit agreements.

President Kiprianou said the lack of progress in the intercommunal talks on the domestic structure of the independent state of Cyprus is because of the divisive philosophy of those who govern Turkey, which is followed by the Turkish Cypriot leadership, as well as the presence of the occupation troops. President Kiprianou added that nevertheless we will continue the dialogue to ascertain whether some change in the Turkish stance is possible. If not, he stressed, we will raise again the issue at the UN General Assembly.

President Kiprianou stressed that the Cyprus issue is not a problem between the Greek Cypriots and the Turkish Cypriots, but an issue of foreign interference and occupation. He stressed that foreign interference must stop and that the two communities can live together and cooperate in free conditions.

In presenting his credentials, the Nepalese ambassador said that his country and Cyprus are adhering to the principles and goals of the UN Charter, particularly in the issue of peace based on respect for sovereignty, teritorial integrity and noninterferance in the domestic affairs of others. He added: Nepal, like Cyprus, attaches great importance to an independent and nonaligned policy and believes it contributes both to the peaceful coexistence and peaceful cooperation among nations, thereby improving prospects for peace.

Denktas on Kiprianou Statement

TA170948 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] In reply to a question by journalists in Lefkosa [Nicosia] today in connection with the statement made by Greek Cypriot leader Spiros Kiprianou in the presence of the new Nepalese ambassador, President Rauf Denktas accused Kiprianou of efforts to undermine the present intercommunal talks being held for the solution of the Cyprus problem.

What the Greek Cypriot leader has in mind, Denktas said, is to end these talks at a time suitable to him in a bid to internationalize the Cyprus issue in a conference -- in line with the Soviet views on the problem -- or even in a miniconference on Cyprus in which the Soviet Union would be excluded in a bid to secure the support of the West.

Denktas said that the Greek Cypriot leader had no right to portray Turkish troops in Cyprus as an invasion force since he must be well aware that the reason these troops are in Cyprus was to deter a Greek invasion.

The Turkish Cypriot president denounced Greek Cypriot claims of violation of their airspace by Turkish planes.

Denktas concluded by reminding Kiprianou that he has no say on matters concerning northern Cyprus and its developments.

EGYPT HOPES FOR FURTHER PARLIAMENTARY RELATIONS

NC161940 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Text] In a letter to the president of the House of Representatives, Ladhas, the speaker of the Egyptian People's Assembly, Mr Sufi Abu Talib, praised the recent resolution of the Cyprus house about the Israeli annexation of the Syrian Golan Heights. The letter, which Egyptian Minister Yahya Husni Qabil handed to Mr Ladhas, also expresses the wish that the two parliaments' relations would develop even further.

KKE'S FLORAKIS QUESTIONED AFTER LEBANON VISIT

PM161601 Beirut AS-SAFIR in Arabic 10 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] Greek Communist Party [KKE] Secretary General Kharilaos Florakis has affirmed that any solution to the Middle East problem that does not take the establishment of an independent Palestinian state into consideration will remain a partial and unsound solution. He said that "resisting the U.S. presence in Greece and in the Arab countries is a joint struggle that brings the people of the Mediterranean countries together." Florakis criticized the stands of the ruling Greek Panhellenic Socialist Movement [PASOK] on the question of Greece's withdrawal from NATO and the EEC, saying that "PASOK has retracted from pursuing these issues and is keeping silent about them."

In a brief interview with AS-SAFIR before his departure from Lebanon yesterday, together with the delegation accompanying him after a 3-day visit, Florakis said that "the Americans are now playing the Turkish card in an attempt to influence Greece's policy and force it to change its stance." Florakis also considered that "by visiting Israel, French President Mitterrand dealt a blow to the Palestinian people's struggle."

[Question] What were the aims of your visit to Lebanon?

[Answer] Our visit was in response to an invitation by the Lebanese Communist Party. We have held several meetings that included the leader of the Lebanese Nationalist Movement, Walid Junblatt, the Central Political Council of the Nationalist Movement, the chairman of the PLO Executive Committee, Yasir 'Arafat, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine [PFLP] command, the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine [DFLP] command, the Socialist Arab Ba'th Party command, the Lebanese Communist Party command, and Comrade George Hawi.

Of course we hold political meetings with the Lebanese and Palestinian nationalist forces because we are very interested in benefiting from such meetings in order to further our knowledge of the political situation and of the details of current developments, since this area is the center of a major imperialist onslaught and also of great political and military tension. As we are neighbors, it is natural that we should be interested in developments of the area.

[Question] How does the KKE see the nature of a lasting and just solution to the Middle East crisis?

[Answer] We do not see any solution to the crisis of the Arab-Israeli conflict without the establishment of an independent Palestinian state. In the absence of such a state, matters will develop in a serious manner. There will be no solution without the withdrawal of the Israeli forces from the territories they occupied in 1967. Any other solution will be partial and unsound.

[Question] Do you see any specific relation between the military bases in Greece and those in certain Arab areas, and what is the effect of this on the general situation in the Mediterranean region?

[Answer] There is definitely a relation between the military presence in our country and in the region, where U.S. imperialism has strategic objectives with regard to oil or because of its important strategic location. U.S. imperialism can dominate the area only by crushing the forces of Arab national liberation. The Americans have established a number of military bases with the aim of achieving their strategic objectives and establishing the Rapid Deployment Force. They use the reactionary forces among the Arab peoples, such as the Egyptian regime and other reactionary regimes, with the aim of striking at and dividing the unity of the Arab peoples and with the aim of imposing solutions that are incompatible with the interests of the peoples of the area.

Of course the U.S. bases in Greece pursue the same objectives. Therefore, resisting this presence brings together all the peoples of the Mediterranean countries that suffer because of this presence.

The Greek people are currently struggling against U.S. imperialism and against the military bases. They are also struggling against the Zionist "base." There is no doubt that U.S. imperialism's principal base in the region is Israel. Thus we see that the Greek progressive forces and the Arab progressive forces have objectives and tasks in common. Therefore it is natural that we should hold meetings and exchange views in order to coordinate joint action, because there is nothing more important than amalgamating the efforts of the progressive forces in one battle against the forces of imperialism and Zionism.

[Question] How does the ruling Greek PASOK party approach the question of Greece's withdrawal from NATO and, consequently, how does the KEE regard this approach?

[Answer] The question of withdrawal from NATO is closely linked to the question of our national independence and sovereignty because our link with this alliance is directly opposed to our national sovereignty. This linkage prevents Greece from pursuing an independent and sound policy. Of course the question of withdrawing from NATO is a fundamental matter for Greece. Our country is small and cannot play the role that the other parties who make the decisions can play.

Our party is the first and only party that stood against Greece's joining NATO. In 1956, because of this issue, I was charged under the martial law, and one of the charges leveled against me was that the KEE is hostile to the NATO alliance. Some 20 years have passed since then and the KEE has proved that it was right since the great majority of the people and Greek parties hold the same stand and oppose Greece's remaining in the NATO alliance, including PASOK, which during the elections expressed a firm and decisive stand in favor of withdrawal from the alliance; it promised the Greek people that it would withdraw from NATO and the EEC and would remove the U.S. military bases.

On the basis of these slogans and other objectives relating to internal policies, the great majority of the Greek people supported PASOK and, thanks to this, it obtained a majority of parliamentary seats and represented 65 percent of the Greek people, who voted for withdrawal from NATO and the EEC as well as for the removal of the U.S. military bases. But unfortunately PASOK has backtracked on these issues or has been keeping silent on them after they became a matter for the future, and it has begun to put forward the question of balancing between the Western and the Eastern camps. Naturally we are against such a proposition and of course we are not alone in this stand, for the majority who supported PASOK now object to this retraction by the party of its stand.

[Question] Do you believe in the possibility of a U.S. military move, if not directly then through Turkey or through the use of the Cyprus problem to prevent this from happening should it become real? [as published]

[Answer] I believe the contrary to be the case. Maintaining the independence of Greece will be achieved through the removal of the U.S. military bases. Even in order to protect ourselves from Turkish chauvinism we must withdraw from NATO and remove the military bases. At present we are members of NATO and have military bases belonging to NATO. Turkey too is a NATO member, but this does not prevent Turkey from threatening Greece. In the past it did not prevent it from occupying 40 percent of Cyprus, which is a UN member state. You know how the U.S. military bases were used then. They helped the Turks occupy the island, and when our planes went to help Cyprus, the U.S. communications station 30 miles from Athens was able to mislead the planes and force them to go to Israel and land in Tel Aviv. This base can monitor all telephone calls as well, and observe political and other events in Greece.

The Americans are now playing the Turkish card in order to bring pressure to bear on Greece in an attempt to influence its policies and force it to retreat from its positions. We believe the solution does not lie in retraction or submission to such pressures but in confronting them and insisting on removing the NATO bases from Greece.

Through our experience we know quite well that the maintenance of these bases is contrary to our national independence. It also poses a danger not only to us but also to the neighboring people and, of course, the Americans use Turkey in order to keep their bases in our country.

[Question] Is there any particular fear of the army's moving, particularly since it has a well-known role in this field?

[Answer] We realize that when the interests of the dominating classes are threatened, they resort to all means, including the most extreme. There are many examples of this in history, for very often the dominating class used the army to strike at democratic freedoms. This was what happened in Greece in 1967. The Americans, in cooperation with the ultrareactionary parties, who found that their interests were threatened, imposed the military junta then. These quarters are now trying to prevent any rapprochement between the army on one side and the people on the other and are striving to maintain a gap through which they are seeking to keep the army as a second defense line or as a reserve for power. The Greek Parliament has no control or supervision over the army. This is the present situation in Lebanon.

[Question] But the question is: Do you believe it is possible that the army will move directly and is such a possibility an imminent danger?

[Answer] There is no imminent danger, but there is a possibility because the army at present is not in a position that allows it to take control or prepare to take control in Greece. We must take into consideration the fact that the majority of officers have learned a lesson during the dictatorial military rule which has left an impression on them. The army also cannot do so now because all the political forces and the masses are opposed to such a possibility and will resist if it takes place.

[Question] Are there any economic factors that force Greece to be linked to the EEC and that prevent it from withdrawing from the EEC?

[Answer] There are certain obstacles because of existing relations. If Greece leaves the EEC, then this would certainly be countered by hostile measures. But the effect of such measures will be temporary and, in any case, much less than the negative results of Greece's remaining in the EEC, which now defines the course of economic development in our country.

[Question] What do you think of French President Francois Mitterrand's visit to Israel?

[Answer] I believe it is an unsuitable and unacceptable step. Through this visit Mitterrand has dealt a blow to the Palestinian people's struggle.

[Excerpts] President Karamanlis today returned to Athens from his visits to Australia, India and Singapore. The president stated: My visits to India and Australia have been useful in many ways because first we had the opportunity to confirm and strengthen the friendship binding Greece with these big countries and seek ways of expanding our cooperation. ALLEGATIONS OF TORTURE UNDER INVESTIGATION

[Text] Minister of State and Government Spokesman Ilhan Oztrak has said that various international organizations are making allegations of torture in Turkey at a time when the country has achieved tranquillity and that this attitude stems from efforts to create a negative impression concerning the 12 September administration in Turkey.

Oztrak made the statement in response to journalists' questions regarding allegations made by Amnesty International concerning torture cases in Turkey. He said all alleged cases of torture or mistreatment that reached the authorities were being investigated carefully and that legal action was being taken against those seen responsible at the end of the investigations.

Noting that the 12 September administration took care to remain within the framework of the law, Oztrak added: As a matter of fact, of the first list of 62 persons Amnesty International submitted to us which it claimed had been killed as a result of torture, 60 cases have been investigated. It was determined that 15 were killed in conditions other than torture, allegations concerning 15 were true, 8 of them were not even under detention, 4 were detained but alive, 1 was free and alive, 3 were killed during armed clashes with the security forces and 11 are still being investigated. Of the 15 trials, 3 have been concluded and 9 of the security officials who were believed to be involved in torture were convicted.

Oztrak said that despite the care taken by various administrations, similar cases have occurred even in Western countries. However, he added that the important point was that these incidents occurred outside the knowledge of the officials and that the necessary measures were taken as soon as the authorities were informed. Recalling that such allegations recently have increased in the FRG, France and Norway, Oztrak said: The Government of the Turkish Republic in no way approves the torture of those under arrest and it seriously investigates complaints and information received on the issue. The 12 September administration is acting within the limits of the law. Suspects are being tried by independent and normal courts.

In the last section of his statement, Oztrak said no administration in any country which has returned from the brink of civil war has more respect for the law and the independence of the courts than the administration of Turkey. He concluded by saying that it is impossible therefore to describe allegations made by Amnesty International as serious and impartial.

FORMER MINISTER SENTENCED FOR BRIBERY, MISCONDUCT

TA162100 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Former Customs and Monopolies Minister Tuncay Mataraci, who was being tried at the High Tribunal for certain of his actions during his term in office, has been sentenced to 36 years in prison and fined 787,386,166 Turkish lira. Former Public Works Minister Serafettin Elci, who was being tried in the same case, was acquitted.

Asked to make their final statements during this morning's session of the High Tribunal, the suspects rejected the charges cited in the indictment and asked for acquittal. The tribunal then recessed in order to reach a decision, which was announced at 2015, by Constitutional Court President Sevket Muftugil. Muftugil said it was concluded that during his term in office Mataraci received bribes from certain individuals and organizations and misused his office and authority.

Mataraci was first sentenced to a total of 43 years and 5 months in prison. However, as the sum of the prison sentences exceeded 36 years, in accordance with the Paragraph 1 of Article 77 of the Turkish Penal Code, the sentence was reduced to 36 years. The other suspects were sentenced to prison terms ranging from 6 months to 6 years and fined various amounts. The decision of the High Tribunal cannot be appealed.

The indictment also stated that, to this end, the suspects were involved in various incidents such as bombing, distributing pamphlets and organizing demonstrations in Gaziantep and its vicinity during 1978. Prison terms ranging from 5 to 8 years are demanded for the suspects.

BELGRADE PAPER INTERVIEWS GENERAL EVREN

AU161311 Belgrade POLITIKA in Serbo-Croatian 12 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] Gen Kenan Evren, president of the National Security Council and head of state of Turkey, has responded to the request of a group of Yugoslav journalists and replied to several questions put to him pertaining to Turkey's domestic and foreign policy. This group of journalists consisted of Tadija Gavrilovic (TANJUG), Mihajlo Nicota (VJESNIK) and Bosko Jaksic (POLITIKA), who visited Turkey recently as guests of the government of that country, as well as Salih Konjhodzic, TANJUG permanent correspondent in Ankara.

To Establish the Security of Citizens

[Question] Mr President, would you be so kind as to set forth for the Yugoslav public the basic directions of the domestic and foreign policy of the current Turkish Government, and would you please explain how far the work on drafting a new constitution for your country has advanced?

[Answer] Immediately following the operation of 12 September (1980, when a bloodless coup d'etat was carried out -- POLITIKA) which was in response to the aspirations and wishes of the vast majority of the Turkish people, the 64-year-old General Evren replied, I clearly formulated before public opinion the main goals that refer to domestic policy.

These goals can be reduced to the following points: To protect unity and national integrity by eliminating anarchy and terrorism, to establish the security of citizens and their property, to renew the state's authority and preserve it, to establish social peace, and to ensure a good functioning of the republican, secular regime based on the freedoms and rights of citizens and on human rights.

As far as the guiding line of foreign policy is concerned, the Turkish nation's stance is reflected in Ataturk's principle of "Peace in the country, peace in the world."

As far as the new constitution is concerned, it is well known that the Consultative Assembly is obliged to prepare it. The Consultative Assembly will carry out this task within the fixed time limit and will submit the draft constitution to the National Security Council. In view of this, and in order not to influence the Constitutional Committee, formed as part of the Constitutional Assembly, and the assembly itself, I will restrain from any assessment in connection with the constitution.

The basis of Turkish political life in the near future will be a democratic, pluralistic and secular system whose institutions will function in harmony. This regime, based on the principles of social rights and drawing its strength from national solidarity and respecting the rights and freedoms of man, will primarily consider the security of individuals and society.

The Middle East Pushed to a State of Serious Instability

[Question] We would like to hear your assessment of the complex international situation, the stagnation in the process of relaxation of international tension in the world, the relations between Turkey and Greece, your view about Cyprus and the existing hotbeds of crises and conflicts, as well as about Turkey's current position.

[Answer] In addition to the delicate situation in the Middle East, the conflicts and problems you have mentioned have pushed this region in recent years to a state of serious instability. It is necessary to admit that security in such a sensitive area is also closely linked with international security. Viewed from this angle, it is very important on one hand to seek solutions for conflicts which affect our area and on the other hand to study the causes of international tension. Aware of its responsibilities and within the framework of its foreign policy, which I have just explained to you, Turkey is making efforts to make its contribution to preserving regional as well as international peace.

A strong and stable Turkey, as a NATO member and through the firm relations it maintains with the two blocs as a result of its geographic position, will continue to be a factor for security and stability in our area. On the other hand, when conflicts in which Turkey is one of the interested sides are involved, Turkey is interested in preserving a peaceful approach.

Within this context, with calmness and moderation, which it has shown thus far, Turkey continues to nurture the hope that the problems it has with Greece will be removed, through negotiations, by solutions which consider a balance of rights and mutual interests.

As far as Cyprus is concerned, a peaceful solution to this conflict can be found exclusively through negotiations between representatives of the two communities on the island. So that the sad experiences of the past do not occur again, we favor, through intercommunal talks and with UN support, a bicommunal, biregional, independent and nonaligned republic.

Shortcomings of Well-meaning Criticism

[Question] Your Excellency, what could you say about criticism that can be heard in the world at the expense of the current regime's actions in Turkey, particularly those that refer to political freedoms in your country?

[Answer] As regards the current situation in Turkey, as well as political freedoms, various interpretations and appraisals were made. Most of what is set forth stems from persons and circles which are not up to date with Turkey's actual reality, nor with its structure sui generis, while other criticism is intentionally spread by those who do not wish Turkey any good. The present administration is responsible only to the Turkish people.

Proceeding from this view, it can be noted that criticism from abroad is groundless and rests on completely fabricated elements. On the other hand, well-meaning criticism is made worthless by a failure suitably to appraise the situation in Turkey.

[Question] How do you view the current difficult economic situation in the world, and how do you view the problem of establishing a new international economic system?

[Answer] In order to come to specific results as regards the North-South dialogue, whose aim it is to adopt structural and radical solutions for international economic problems, it is necessary that all countries participate in this dialogue and that they assume mutual obligations.

As far as the success of the negotiations within the framework of the North-South dialogue is concerned, as well as the creation of a new, fairer international economic system, we are guardedly optimistic that in this respect progress can be registered, at least in the long term, because sooner or later it will become obvious that without finding suitable solutions for global problems it will not be possible to preserve national interests.

Realistic Potentials for the Development of Balkan Cooperation

[Question] Mr President, what is your view of the opportunities for the further development of cooperation in the Balkans?

[Answer] There exists real potential for the development of cooperation among the Balkan countries. Both bilateral as well as multilateral cooperation that will be achieved, according to the pragmatic point of view, is by the nature of things such that it contributes to the interests of all Balkan countries and serves the cause of peace and security in Europe.

[Question] What can you say about Turkish-Yugoslav relations?

[Answer] If it is necessary to sum up Turkish-Yugoslav relations, I can describe them as very positive. There are no political problems between our two countries. The development and even greater strengthening of our relations on the basis of mutual respect and friendship is one of our basic aims. On the other hand, we note that we share the same views and feelings with Yugoslavia in certain areas. The two countries, as is the case where the Balkans and Europe are concerned, attach special attention to strengthening peace and cooperation on a world scale, and they are making efforts in this respect.

In to the numerous problems in the international arena, I can say that we have similar approaches. For this reason I believe high-level visits between Turkey and Yugoslavia can contribute to the already existing relations and dialogue between the two countries.

On my own behalf and on behalf of the Turkish people, I wish the peoples of Yugoslavia a future full of prosperity and happiness.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE INVITED TO POLAND

PM170859 Amserdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 11 Mar 82 p 7

[Text] The Hague -- On Wednesday [10 March] Polish Sejm member Jozef Barecki invited the Second Chamber's standing Foreign Affairs Committee to send a delegation to Poland to acquaint itself with developments there. Barecki made the invitation during an interview with the committee that had taken place at his initiative. Communist Party of the Netherlands representatives were not present.

Barecki, who is also chief editor of the new government newspaper RZECZPOSPOLITA, asked the chamber to show understanding for the military intervention in his country and made a plea for economic aid. According to the Sejm member, the military intervention was necessary because of the economic problems and the fact that the Solidarity Free Trade Union wanted to seize power. He showed the chamber articles in support of this latter assertion.

Questions put to Barecki did not make the chamber members any the wiser. The Pole described the conditions attached to further economic aid from the West as interference in internal affairs. Barecki also said that the situation in his country was being further normalized, but he was unable to say when the state of martial law would be lifted. Chamber Foreign Affairs Committee Deputy Chairman Ter Beek (Labor Party) concluded from the visit that Poland has an enormous need of contact, a need primarily dictated by its enormous economic problems.

PORTUGAL

PRIME MINISTER VIEWS GOVERNMENT, ARMED FORCES

LD170550 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1900 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Speaking at the Institute for Higher Military Studies this morning, the prime minister said that the armed forces cannot help but be regarded as an instrument which the government needs to carry out its responsibility of conducting the country's policy.

Pinto Balsemao said the government must be aware of military matters, know how the military functions and be able, at just the right and opportune time, to introduce legislation designed to eliminate its vulnerability and increase its potentials. There is no justification, he said, for the armed forces to remain independent of the government, which has to provide it with funds from the general state budget, or for it to decide on establishing relations with military organizations of other countries without the interference or knowledge of the government which conducts international relations.

Pinto Balsemao rejected arguments for the armed forces' eventual subordination to executive power. He said that its integration into civil power is not a question of being carried out in phases but instantly from the promulgation date of a revised constitution. The revision of the constitution, which he defined as a basic priority, does not depend on the government, and the armed forces' subordination to the government is not the only aim of revising the fundamental law, and should not be viewed in isolation. He said that the parties group under the Democratic Alliance those who champion the cause of the constitution's revision, who will fight for it wherever it may become necessary, whether in parliament or in the streets.

In his lengthy address, the prime minister elaborated on the measures adopted by his government with a view to economic and financial recovery.

Dealing with foreign policy, in the strategic sphere Balsemao said that the axis of Portugal's national external policy gives new prominence to the strategic positions it holds which, he said, might not have been duly appreciated in the past. Thus he pointed to a reevaluation of existing cooperation with the United States, adding that Portugal cannot be relegated to a mere passive role in granting facilities located in strategic positions.

FOREIGN MINISTER CRITICIZES U.S., POLAND

LD171032 Stockholm International Service in Swedish 1000 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Harsh criticism of the regime in Poland and of U.S. foreign policy was expressed in the government declaration in the Riksdag foreign policy debate today. Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten demanded that the Polish generals adhere to their words about freedom, and he also regretted the narrow East-West perspective which marks U.S. foreign policy. Ullsten emphasized that the crisis of Poland is a crisis for the rest of the world. What the communist leaders speak of as their internal affairs have brought the East and West closer to impasse and confrontation, the foreign minister said. It is the view of the Swedish Government that U.S. foreign policy increases tensions in the Third World, which have become a threat to peace and stability, Ullsten said.

CABINET ISSUES STATEMENT ON BREZHNEV PROPOSAL

LD171338 Hamburg DPA in German 1440 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 17 Mar (DPA) -- In a detailed statement at its cabinet session today, the Federal Government noted that the results of the Geneva talks remain the yardstick for progress in arms control in the medium-range missile field. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker read the following statement to the Federal press conference:

One day after the start of the break in the talks, the Federal Cabinet has discussed the state of the talks in Geneva. The cabinet notes:

1. Even compared with other arms control talks, these talks have been conducted briskly. Both sides have submitted proposals for negotiation and clarified objectives. The break in the talks is necessary now to give both delegations an opportunity to analyze the progress of the talks so far, brief their governments and prepare for resumption on 20 May.

2. The day before the break in negotiations started, General Secretary Brezhnev announced the Soviet decision to introduce unilaterally a moratorium on the siting of medium-range nuclear missiles in the European part of the USSR. This decision incorporates the contents of moratorium proposals made at an earlier date. A condition for putting it into effect is that the West stop preparations to site U.S. Pershing II missiles and cruise missiles in Europe. In other words, this decision is also aimed at preventing the siting of such U.S. missiles in Europe, regardless of the progress of the Geneva talks, and maintaining the existing imbalance in this field to the advantage of the Soviet Union. The government spokesman pointed out in this respect on 16 March that the Soviet Union currently possesses more than 300 SS-20 missiles with 900 warheads, two-thirds of which are targeted on places in Europe. Furthermore, SS-20 missiles sited on the other side of the Urals can also reach Western European territory because of their long range. The moratorium, limited to its European territory, thus allows the Soviet Union the opportunity to set up more SS-20 missiles east of the Urals, from where they can still threaten Western Europe. That is why only the elimination of SS-20 missiles, as demanded by the West, can remove this threat. In addition, the Soviet Union has already developed siting areas on both sides of the Urals which can take SS-20 missiles.

3. In the Federal Government's view, it remains vital that concrete results be achieved from the negotiations by the end of summer 1983. The Federal Government advocates that both sides completely relinquish land-based medium-range systems. It measures the importance of the recently announced Soviet decision by the yardstick of this goal. It recognizes that the general secretary's statement reflects the Soviet Union's great interest that no U.S. Pershing II's or cruise missiles be stationed in Europe. Only an agreement on a mutual zero solution as a result of the Geneva talks can take account of this interest. The Federal Government concludes from this that the talks can only lead to success if the Soviet Union firmly believes that otherwise U.S. missiles will actually be sited in Europe as of the end of 1983.

SPD RAISES DOUBTS OVER U.S. HUMAN RIGHTS POLICY

LD161044 Hamburg DPA in German 0913 GMT 16 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 16 Mar (DPA) -- Doubts about the aims of the American human rights policy have been raised by SPD politicians in talks with U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Elliott Abrams in Bonn.

On his first trip to Europe, the head of the Department for Human Rights [as received] in the U.S. State Department sought contacts on Monday and Tuesday in Bonn primarily with the political foundations of the parties which are involved in developing countries.

In his explanation of American policy on Central America Abrams encountered mainly reserve among the members of the SPD leadership with whom he spoke. The 33-year-old assistant secretary of state defended American support for the junta in El Salvador, referring to the fact that the Duarte government is fighting against the terror actions of the communist guerrillas. The Reagan administration's policy on human rights differs from the policy of his predecessor, Jimmy Carter, primarily in the fact that it does not make propagandist public condemnations which are ineffectual. Abrams spoke in Bonn with SPD Deputy Egon Bahr, with secretary of state in the Foreign Ministry, Berndt von Staden and with Minister of State Hildegard Hamm-Bruecher (FDP).

The abuse of human rights has increased in Nicaragua as well, Abrams said. In Washington's view the Sandinist leadership in Nicaragua is aiming for domination of the country with Marxist precepts. Abrams complained that in the international press "four political prisoners in Paraguay are deemed of more interest than all the atrocities in Afghanistan."

CDU/CSU OFFICIAL: 'STRAIN' IN U.S. RELATIONS

[Text] Bonn, 17 Mar (DPA) -- During a brief visit to the United States, which included meetings with U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, Manfred Woerner, deputy CDU/CSU Parliamentary Group chairman, noted widespread disfavor with the Federal Government. Woerner said in Bonn today on his return that the dominant impression in Washington is that the Federal Government places its alliance policy interests in second place to its special relations in its policy toward the East. This has resulted in a substantial strain on German-U.S. relations. On the basic issues of East-West relations and alliance policy, however, a high degree of agreement exists between U.S. policy and the political views of the CDU/CSU.

According to Woerner, the Americans are also disappointed at the course of recent talks in Bonn by U.S. Assistant Secretary James L. Buckley. From the U.S. point of view, the result of these talks is not in line with statements made shortly before by Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in Washington. The Federal Government's argument that state guarantees for Eastern credits have nothing to do with granting credits convinced no one in the U.S. capital. The fact that the Federal Government had, since NATO's January decisions, guaranteed credits to the Soviet Union amounting to DM1.5 billion has been sharply criticized in the United States.

Woerner expressed the view that the United States is not striving for military superiority over the Soviets nor have they any intention of waging an economic war with Moscow or forcing this sort of confrontation upon its allies. The aim of U.S. policy in relations between the two major powers and relations with the Third World is not confrontation but moderation and restraint. Considerations regarding the use of economic measures are no longer focused on the gas pipeline deal, which is still criticized, but on the transfer of technology and the granting and guaranteeing of credits.

With regard to the situation in the Caribbean, Woerner said that he gained the impression that the U.S. Government is not thinking in terms of military intervention but is working increasingly toward a political solution. A condition for this, however, is that Nicaragua must refrain from supplying arms to rebels in El Salvador.

CARSTENS TOASTS NIGERIA'S SHAGARI AT BANQUET

LD171640 Hamburg DPA in German 1517 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 17 Mar (DPA) -- Against the background of recent clashes in Angola, Federal President Karl Carstens, together with Nigerian President Alhaji Shehu Shagari, has called for an end to racial discrimination in South Africa. Speaking at a banquet on the first day of Shagari's state visit to the Federal Republic, the federal president, in a toast at Bruehl Castle, also supported Nigeria's insistence on independence for Namibia. Nigeria, with a policy of peaceful adjustment and accomodation, is an "element of stability in Africa," the federal president stressed.

Carstens described Shagari's 4-day state visit as the high point of German-Nigerian encounters during the past few years, which included visits to Nigeria by Chancellor Schmidt and the Bundestag President Stuecklen. German industry is prepared to continue to contribute to the development of Nigeria, which ranks among the Federal Republic's 20 most important trade partners. One example of this successful cooperation is the Aladja steel plant, which is one of the biggest and most modern in all of Africa.

At the dinner Shagari paid tribute to the "very important role" which the Federal Republic plays in Nigeria's rapid industrialization. The Federal Republic could play a part, particularly in the training of skilled personnel and the transfer of technology. At the same time Shagari stressed that Nigeria is Bonn's most important market in Africa and one of the most important anywhere in the world.

According to Shagari the first visit by a Nigerian head of state to Bonn confirmed the optimism of the two sides regarding their countries' relations. Nigeria and the Federal Republic share the same views and interests on many matters concerning world peace and security. "On several international questions our two states have fought for the same aims, in economic, political and social spheres," Shagari said.

Shagari also condemned the policy of apartheid in South Africa and "the flagrant disregard of public opinion throughout the world" by the government of the country. The Federal Government's participation in the search for a solution to the Namibia problem is "encouraging and constructive."

GOVERNMENT MAY GIVE EGYPT NUCLEAR REACTOR

LD171904 Hamburg DPA in German 1820 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 17 Mar (DPA) -- Egypt may receive a small nuclear research reactor from the Federal Republic as a gift.

A Ministry of Research spokesman confirmed in Bonn today that relevant talks have been taking place for some time. The reactor is still in the possession of Frankfurt University.

Following Egypt's joining the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, thereby accepting international control of its nuclear activities, a government agreement on the peaceful use of nuclear energy was signed by Cairo and Bonn last October. This German-Egyptian agreement is to provide the basis for the possible delivery of German nuclear power stations with a total output of 2,000 megawatts. This deal is still in the preparatory stage.

MITTERRAND CALLS EC PROPOSALS 'UNACCEPTABLE'

LD171434 Paris Domestic Service in French 1400 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Francois Mitterrand has issued a warning to France's European partners: The president stated during a Council of Ministers session a short while ago that the farmers' interests will be defended with constancy and persistence. Mr Mitterrand considers unacceptable the Brussels commission's proposals and says that although France may be very attached to European construction it has no intention of sacrificing its agriculture to it.

In his statement to the Council of Ministers President Mitterrand went even further: There is no question, he said, of one state's hindering the application of the basic rules or of others agreeing to a dismantling of the common agricultural policy. Finally, France today expects its partners to say clearly whether they want Europe to continue to develop or whether they want an open crisis.

There you have the main points of the president of the republic's statement at the Elysee this morning.

MAUROY APPEARS ON TV, ADDRESSES ELECTION ISSUES

LD172128 Paris Domestic Service in French 1900 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Summary] Premier Pierre Mauroy appeared on television tonight, invited by French Television, as was Jacques Chirac on Monday and Jean Lecanuet on Tuesday. Georges Marchais has been invited to appear on 18 March. Mauroy stated: I believe it is quite suitable for me to speak on television in connection with the cantonal elections in order to explain the policy of the government. The weak French franc is due to the ups and downs of the dollar and also to the cantonal elections. It is no cause for anxiety and it does not represent a failure of the left, he added. The left is indeed making good progress. The French voted for change and we have already started this with a series of measures on the minimum wage, various allowances, etc. The basis for change must be consolidated well, with no haste. This is done through voting for reforms, just as we have done so far. More is yet to be done.

As regards social reforms such as labor legislation and workers' rights, this will be done through consultation with the trade unions and all parties concerned, without haste. The aims of the government are being fulfilled and the promises made by the Socialist government are being fulfilled and the promises made by the Socialist candidate, now president of the republic, are being carried out.

Efforts are being made for all those who are not happy, such as the farmers, Mauroy stated. He said: "I shall go myself next week especially to see the German chancellor in order to prepare in the best circumstances our dossier regarding agricultural prices."

Asked for his reaction to Soviet President Brezhnev's statement regarding a moratorium on the SS-20 missiles and whether there was an official reaction from the government, Mauroy replied: "I believe we do not have to confer on this matter. Mr Brezhnev is creating a false sensation in that he is proposing a freeze of his own advantage."

CABINET 'TO STUDY' USSR MORATORIUM OFFER

NC171409 Paris AFP in English 1354 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 17 Mar (AFP) -- The French cabinet has not yet discussed Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's proposal for a moratorium on deploying medium-range missiles, Elysee Secretary-General Pierre Beregovoy announced after today's weekly cabinet meeting.

The cabinet would, however, be studying the proposal, he said in the first official French reaction to the Brezhnev offer. "It does not seem," he added, "that at present the positions expressed by one or other of the superpowers enables a solution to be reached on the agonising question of arms reduction."

Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson meanwhile said after the meeting that there was "nothing very new" in the proposal. "It had been expected for three months," he added.

CHEYSSON THREATENS POLAND WITH ILO COMPLAINT

PM150823 Paris LE MATIN in French 9 Mar 82 p 7

[Text] France reserves the right to issue a complaint against Poland to the ILO if Warsaw fails to satisfy the demands drawn up by the ILO's Trade Union Freedoms Committee and approved by the ILO's Administrative Council. This was explained by [External Relations Minister] Claude Cheysson in a letter to ILO Director General Charles Blanchard.

France does not intend to allow Jaruzelski's Polish regime to violate the commitments undertaken by Warsaw by virtue of its membership of various international organizations. Claude Cheysson has also threatened the military junta with issuing a complaint against it to the ILO in Geneva if it fails to satisfy the demands issued last week by the ILO Administrative Council in a report which was, according to its chairman, adopted unanimously. This report demands from Warsaw written documentation on the situation in the country and on the fate of the detained trade unionists, as well as the hosting of an international factfinding delegation.

The drafting of this document was the occasion for some very lively exchanges between Western and Socialist bloc delegations. The latter persistently repeated that Solidarity's activities "did not belong within the trade union framework" and that they therefore should not be debated by the ILO. The Soviet representative went so far as to add that Solidarity "was threatening Poland's social equilibrium" and that it was composed "of dangerous extremists," some of whom aimed "to extricate Poland from the Warsaw Pact."

However, the Eastern bloc countries' numerous obstructive maneuvers did not deter the Western delegations, which finally approved a report which neither Moscow nor Warsaw was able to oppose, since the Administrative Council did not vote on it. The term "unanimity" used by the chairman nevertheless prompted some surprise: Were the Soviet delegates asleep when he spoke? Or did the interpreters omit to translate his speech?

In a letter sent to ILO Director General Blanchard Friday, Cheysson explained France's intention to issue a complaint against Poland if it fails to heed the ILO's demands. It would be an exceptional step to take.

Indeed, it is rare for a state to issue a complaint against another within the context of trade union freedoms. Usually it is trade union organizations that take the initiative: in Poland's case, the ICFTU and the World Confederation of Labor. "The French Government," Cheysson told Blanchard, "would like to continue hoping that the procedure undertaken by trade unions within your organization will make it possible to achieve positive results." Otherwise Paris reserves the right to act.

PCF'S MARCHAIS LOOKING FORWARD TO PRC VISIT

PM161117 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 11 Mar 82 p 5

[Excerpts] PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais was the guest on the French Television Channel 1 news program at 1300 hours yesterday [10 March].

Questioned by Yves Mourousi, he spoke in particular about the importance of the canton elections and of the Communist vote, of the major problems facing France and he discussed the visits he is to make to Cuba, Nicaragua and China. Questioned on the forthcoming visits he is to make, the PCF secretary general explained: "The visits to Cuba and Nicaragua are visits which I was due to make at the end of last year and which I postponed in view of the political circumstances and the preparations for our 24th congress.

"Regarding China, we are obviously extremely happy that the conditions now exist for the restoration of normal relations with the CCP. We have always upheld the idea that there can be not only differences but divergences between communist and workers parties. That is the case with the CCP and also with the CPSU and other parties. In our view, the existence of divergences should not be an obstacle to normal relations among the communist and workers parties. "That is why I was extremely happy to receive and immediately accepted, on my party's behalf, the invitation made to me to visit China to restore relations with the CCP. "The Chinese people number 1 billion and they are a people and a country which play a major role in the international arena, and I am very happy to be able to restore completely normal and friendly relations of cooperation with that party."

LE MONDE VIEWS LESSONS OF CANTONAL ELECTIONS

["J.F." commentary: "Persuasion"]

[Text] France went to bed Sunday night in the certainty that the left had suffered a heavy defeat; it awoke to learn that the defeat was only relative. In the interim the majority of morning papers, printed overnight, spoke only of the defeat, its inaccurate figures and its conclusions.

Such is the news. It is not the voters who make the result: It is a television set coupled with an opinion poll organization. It is not the parties or the press which form opinion, but the media. Their power is all the more formidable in view of how quickly they move.

The second lesson to be learned is that the presidential system -- once so heartily opposed by the left -- is what protects the left from electoral upheavals, or at least from their effects. Whether the unfavorable results are in by-elections or local elections the parliamentary majority is not directly upset by them. Even if the majority were small and even if the usual mugwumps were to abandon it, the president has time and authority on his side. Even his adversaries cannot challenge such assets without performing a turnabout, if at least they remain loyal to the spirit of the system which they have not ceased to defend.

The warning stands. The government has committed two errors. The first is to have underestimated the resistance to change among rural folk, who are precisely the ones most concerned with the cantonal elections. The second is to have played into the opposition's hands both in the case of the filibustering and in the case of the farmworkers' demonstrations -- and indeed in other matters too. It would have been better to counter them with the "calm strength" which the president of the republic wishes to embody.

Municipal elections will be taking place in a year's time. More than the canton elections, they are a springboard for the general elections. The opposition is already planning for them, and the majority will be tempted to follow it in this direction, the easy one. But it is not by adhering to a "sectorial defense" albeit justified, that the government will improve the French people's lot. It must strive to persuade a broader sector of the public of the correctness of its policy of reforms, which is something that it has clearly not yet succeeded in doing.

A more select team, a more consistent policy and a more active president would be likely to win over the sector of the population who do not reject change but who mistrust upheavals.

MINISTRY ISSUES STATEMENT ON BREZHNEV PROPOSALS

LD180004 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2300 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Although Brezhnev's statement at the congress of the Soviet trade unions on the problems of medium-range nuclear forces do not contain substantially new elements in respect to the already-known Soviet position, they can be interpreted as a sign of Moscow's persistent willingness to negotiate. This is said in a statement issued by the Italian Foreign Ministry, which emphasizes that the unilateral moratorium announced by the Soviet Union is not only to be applied after Moscow has deployed not less than 300 SS-20's with 900 independent nuclear warheads, while NATO's modernization program is still at the beginning, but is also limited to the European part of the Soviet Union.

This fact, the statement by the Italian Foreign Ministry maintains, could devalue the contents of the Soviet initiative, which, however, does show a certain evolution on the part of Moscow, although only theoretical at present, toward the fundamental NATO proposal, which is still the reduction of the medium-range nuclear missiles of the two sides to zero.

L'UNITA NOTES PRAVDA REPRINT OF GUS HALL SPEECH

PM180927 Venice L'UNITA in Italian 11 Mar 82 p 15

[Giulietto Chiesa dispatch]

[Text] Moscow -- "Remarks made by certain leaders of the Italian, Spanish and Japanese communist parties" concerning events in Poland are "unpardonable, irresponsible and slanderous." Using a lengthy summary of a speech by Gus Hall, general secretary of the Communist Party of the United States [CPUSA], PRAVDA has taken a further step in the polemic with Eurocommunism and in particular with the PCI.

Indeed, the majority of the CPUSA leader's arguments are directed against the Italian Communist "leaders," specifically against Enrico Berlinguer -- the only one apart from Carrillo actually named (and named several times) in the article. Following the brief opening mention, the Japanese leaders, however, are not referred to again. The arguments used are not very different from those already seen in the columns of the CPSU paper. In some passages Gus Hall does permit himself a little freedom; for instance when he states that the Polish Communist Party leaders "sought for 18 months with the utmost patience, perhaps with too much patience, to withstand the counterrevolutionary forces by peaceful means." In essence, the entire article is a harangue in defense of "real socialism" against what is described as "the largest web of lies" ever conceived. The leaders of the culpable parties fell into this "tangle of lies" "in an attempt to appear respectable and to secure a good press."

It is not known whether, in trying to refute them, Gus Hall actually examined any of the matters of substance that have appeared in the PCI's official documents. In any case, it does not appear so from the summary provided by PRAVDA, which seems -- as do all previous Soviet press items on the subject -- devoid of any precise reference to the Italian Communists' stances, which still remain entirely unknown to the vast majority of Soviet citizens and even to CPSU members.

In his indictment Gus Hall devotes particular attention to the polemic with the Eurocommunists' ideas about democracy. He claims that "Comrades Berlinguer and Carrillo misuse the word both in letter and in spirit" and that "it is mentioned every couple of lines as though it should be used as a decoration or embellishment." Polemical lapses aside, the argument aspires to some kind of theoretical standard when the CPUSA general secretary ventures to set down a kind of "instruction manual" supposedly consisting of "universally adopted conclusions of the socialist building experience."

In short -- and this is the only challenging point made in the entire speech -- "weaknesses and errors" (whose existence Gus Hall admits, without ever describing their nature) must be explained "by the supporters of socialism" within the context of "a general move forward," these errors being "for the most part errors deriving from growth." The Eurocommunists, however, Gus Hall concludes, "separate the weaknesses from the general context and use them to discredit, dismiss and undervalue the entire socialist system; all this while they extol the bourgeois aspect of democracy."

COLOMBO HOLDS TALKS WITH PLO'S FARUQ QADDUMI

AU171946 Rome ANSA in English 1931 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 17 Mar (ANSA) -- The Italian Government made an attempt today to "facilitate the start of a dialogue...between the leading Arab and Israeli figures in the Middle East controversy" at the meeting Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo had in Rome today with the Palestinian Liberation Organization's (PLO) foreign affairs spokesman Faruq Qaddumi. Italy and the PLO have been meeting periodically since 1977 but the Rome government has not granted official recognition to the resistance organization.

A Foreign Ministry communique issued after today's meeting said Italy has a policy of trying to facilitate a dialogue that could lead to "mutual acceptance of (the Arabs' and Israelis') respective basic rights." The statement also said Italy was interested in the opinions expressed by the spokesman of an organization "which is largely representative of the Palestinian people" and "whose claims have represented a constant reference point for Arab Middle East policies since the 1974 Rabat summit."

Today's meeting was described as "confirmation of the growing attention and particular sensitivity with which the Italian Government views the Palestinian role, the claims of the Palestinian people, the necessity of their achieving the right to self-determination and, if they so desire, the creation of a statehood." The head of the PLO's liaison office in Rome, Nimr Haddad, attended today's talks.

ROME TO GRANT EASY-TERM FINANCIAL AID TO EGYPT

AU171948 Rome ANSA in English 1923 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Cairo, 17 Mar (ANSA) -- Italian Foreign Trade Minister Nicola Capria made arrangements to accord Egypt 180 million dollars worth of easy-term credits and grants during a five-day visit that ended here today. While in Cairo, the Rome government official went over all aspects of bilateral economic and trade cooperation with top members of the Egyptian leadership.

The spokesman for the visiting Italian delegation indicated that the new credits will enable Egypt to get industrial and trade plans totalling some 900 million dollars off the ground. Both the Rome and Cairo governments are looking into ways of expanding cooperation even further.

During his visit to Rome Sr Calvo-Sotelo will meet with his Italian counterpart, Giovanni Spadolini, Italian head of state Sandro Pertini, and will also be received in private audience by Pope John Paul II.

MILITARY SOURCES PREFER U.S. F-18 PACKAGE

LD171736 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1300 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Madrid Radio has learned from well-informed military sources that the technical elements of the package offered by the United States in return for deciding on the F-18 fighter are better than those offered by France for taking the Mirage-2000 for the same program. The FACA [Future Fighter and Attack Aircraft] program is currently being studied by officials. The experts believe that the U.S. aircraft is superior to the French one on four counts: It operates and handles better; the credit payments are more bearable to the Spanish economy; the total technical package is better; and there is the political factor of more important diversification [as heard]. In the area of the technical arrangements included in the package, some of the most notable are: joint production in the United States and in Spain in future of vital aircraft components; greater capacity for servicing the aircraft; and the joint manufacture or even, probably, manufacture by Spain alone of other essential aircraft components, thus permitting export of these components as well as servicing and upgrading of other models of aircraft used in Spain apart from the F-18.

PORTUGUESE FISHING BOATS SEIZED OFF GALICIA

LD172250 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2200 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Four Portuguese fishing vessels -- Ocefano, Vila Real, Mar Nosso and Mariposa -- have been seized by the Spanish authorities while fishing near Punta Candelaria, off the Galicia coast. The vessels have been taken to the port of El Ferrol, in Coruna, where their catch has been seized.

It will be recalled that the fishing agreement signed between Portugal and Spain in 1978 does not allow Portuguese fishing boats to operate north of Cape Finnisterre.

POLICEMAN KILLED NEAR REPUTED BASQUE STRONGHOLD

NC151609 Paris AFP in English 1553 GMT 15 Mar 82

[Text] San Sebastian, northern Spain, 15 Mar (AFP) -- A civil guard was killed today in a terrorist incident in Renteria, a dormitory town midway between San Sebastian and the French frontier. He is the fourth policeman to be killed by terrorists in Spain this year.

Renteria is reputedly a stronghold of the Basque separatist ETA-Military organizations.

Police said it appeared the man, aged 41, had been shot by two men, one armed with a pistol and the other with a sub-machine gun, while he was in his car with his wife and daughter, whom he was driving to school.

The killers escaped.

CHANGES IN 'NORDIC BALANCE' COME FROM OUTSIDE

PM101601 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 6 Mar 82 p 7

[APN commentator Ilya Baranikas article: "Tension Brought to the Nordic Community From Outside"]

[Text] The Nordic foreign policy debate often uses the term "the Nordic balance." It often speaks of the need to maintain this balance or equilibrium as if the axis of confrontation runs exactly along the Norwegian-Soviet border.

It seems to me that the only correct interpretation of the term "the Nordic balance" is as follows: "The Nordic balance" is the military political situation prevailing in the Nordic countries. Its components are Denmark's and Norway's membership of NATO (combined with the voluntary limitations they have placed on themselves in this connection), Sweden's neutrality and Finland's neutrality combined with the Finnish-Soviet Friendship, Cooperation and Mutual Assistance treaty first signed in 1948.

The military political situation prevailing in the Nordic countries, that is, "the Nordic balance," is now undergoing changes because it does not appeal to some forces outside the Nordic countries. Here I am primarily referring to the fact that Denmark's and Norway's "base and nuclear arms policy" is gradually being undermined. (Nuclear arms launching systems are present -- for the time being temporarily -- on their territory, where there also is the almost permanent presence of foreign troops because of almost constant maneuvers, etc.) Another shift in "the Nordic balance" is Sweden's approach to the United States in the military field. (An example of this is the cooperation between the two countries in the field of arms production.)

The above-mentioned changes in "the Nordic balance" are, as I see it, negative, since the level of tension and confrontation in the Nordic area have always been lower than in Central Europe. The processes taking place under pressure from NATO obviously do not contribute to keeping this level low. But "the Nordic balance" should also be able to undergo positive changes. The establishment of a nuclear-free zone in this area would contribute to reinforcing stability and reducing tension in the Nordic area. The zone would strengthen the Nordic countries' nuclear-free status and eliminate the possibility of nuclear arms appearing in the Nordic area using a "crisis situation" and U.S. "defense assistance for its allies" as an excuse.

The Reagan administration's foreign policy irresponsibility and negative attitude to detente sometimes makes the Nordic peoples look on "big brother" with anxiety. However, for the time being the dominant tendency is the opposite one -- to look Eastward with anxiety. When we look at how the majority of the bourgeois mass media portray the Soviet Union to their readers, viewers and listeners, we would never be able to believe that it was the October Revolution which gave Finland its independence, that the Soviet Army helped to liberate northern Norway or that Soviet demarches helped to protect Swedish neutrality during World War II....

The assumption that the USSR is in some way opposed to the Nordic countries is an erroneous point of departure for an analysis of the military situation in the Nordic area. Of course the land border between Norway and the USSR is a watershed between two military political blocs facing each other. But for more than 150 years this border has also been a border of peace and friendship. For many centuries contacts between the Norwegians and the Russians in the north have been able to serve as an example of good-neighborly relations for all peoples. This is an argument against looking at the border between Norway and the USSR as an axis of confrontation in "the Nordic balance." Another argument is the obvious fact that according to all reasonable logic these two neighbors cannot be placed in opposition to each other.

You can talk of confrontation and counterbalance between NATO and the Warsaw Pact, between the United States and the USSR, but if you reason that Norway "must be in a position to repulse a Soviet attack from the Kola Peninsula," you have lost touch with commonsense.

Finally, I would like to say that in my view it is very important to bear in mind that no one in the northern European region is opposed to anyone else. All frictions, all tensions occurring in the Nordic area have been brought there from outside.

KOIVISTO BRIEFS FOREIGN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

PM170905 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 13 Mar 82 p 18

[Excerpt] The government Foreign Affairs Committee met Friday [12 March] to hear President Mauno Koivisto's account of his trip to the Soviet Union. It was the first meeting of the new government's Foreign Affairs Committee with the president of the republic in the chair. President Koivisto's working visit to the Soviet Union ended on Thursday. In the communique on the visit President Koivisto and President Leonid Brezhnev stressed that the favorable relations between Finland and the Soviet Union are not affected by changes on the international political scene. The two heads of state also said that they support continued personal contacts between the two countries' leading persons.

Government circles view the Foreign Affairs Committee's meeting as an expression of the president's endeavors to activate the committee. When the present government was appointed the president expressed his desire that the government would take part in foreign policy in a more active way than its predecessor. In past years the president has only taken part in Foreign Affairs Committee meetings very occasionally. Usually the chair is taken by the prime minister.

USSR LOANS INDICATE CONTINUING ECONOMIC SUPPORT

PM170845 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 13 Mar 82 p 12

[P.E. Paul article: "Credit Agreements With Sweden, France"]

[Text] The Soviet Union was an active borrower on the European credit market in February and secured some large loans from banks in France and Sweden. Credit Lyonnais granted the Soviet Union a $90M loan and Paribas a $50M loan. Both loans are for 8 years and "on easy terms" according to NZZ.

However, it is particularly remarkable that in January the Soviet Union secured two major loans from Sweden, covering the financing of the Urengoy-Uzhgorod natural gas pipeline. The first loan, of 700 million Swedish kronor, was granted by Svenska Handelsbanken, and the second, of 500 million Swedish kronor, by Skandinaviska Enskilda Banken. The interest rate for these two loans are also said to be moderate.

Large investments like the enormous Urengoy-Uzhgorod gas pipeline require large amounts of steel piping, pumping stations and other equipment from the West. Bank consortia in West Germany are primarily involved in the financial backing. Finally, the Soviet Union's support for Poland requires considerable resources, as does its action in Afghanistan.

Both the French and Swedish banks' loans must be ascribed a certain political significance. The loans show that economic cooperation between East and West is continuing in Europe despite the toughening world political situation.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS TAKE UP BASIC FREEDOMS ISSUE

NC171908 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1730 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Excerpts] A new meeting within the framework of the intercommunal talks was held at the Ledra Palace Hotel today. A UN communique states that during today's meeting discussion began on questions of equal distance, as they are called including questions of free movement, free settlement and the right to own property. Another meeting will be held Monday afternoon.

In a statement prior to the meeting, the special representative of the UN Secretary General,Gobbi, mentioned that during today's meeting there would be a start of discussion on the three basic freedoms, that is settlement, movement and property. We now start, he said, the most difficult part of our discussions. Answering a question on why discussion of the three basic freedoms is being conducted separately from the discussion on human rights, Gobbi said this separation is in accordance with the Makarios-Denktas agreement on the four points, within which special significance was given to the three freedoms.

The representative of the Greek Cypriot side at the talks, Ioannidhis, stated that discussion of the three basic freedoms leads the dialogue into a difficult area. Our own position, he said, is that the people of Cyprus must have the right to exercise these three basic freedoms. Answering a question on the internationalization of the Cyprus problem, Ioannidhis said the intercommunal talks are an international process in accordance with the UN resolutions. Ioannidhis added that he does not think there would be any harm done to the intercommunal talks if any attempt is undertaken supporting dialogue and promoting a peaceful solution to the problem.

Turkish Cypriot interlocutor Onan said there has been progress on points on which there was a coincidence of views and that now discussion is starting on questions related to points on which the views of the two sides are equidistant. Onan said the question of the three freedoms must be faced with a conciliatory and constructive spirit and with mutual understanding. If the two sides face the issue with open minds, he said, then a satisfactory functional and viable solution will be found for this aspect of the Cyprus problem. Onan opposed internationalization of the Cyprus issue, which, he said, he considers unconstructive and not helpful. He added the only way to solve the Cyprus problem is through the intercommunal talks.

GREEK CYPRIOT OFFICERS INVOLVED IN DRUG TRAFFIC

NC180718 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 15 Mar 82 pp.4, 12

[Text] Lefkosa [Nicosia] (AA) -- It has been reported that some soldiers of the Greek Cypriot National Guard recently have been breaking into shops and houses, and that high-ranking officers are engaged in narcotics smuggling. According to Greek Cypriot sources, the Kiprianou administration and the Greek General Staff are beginning to worry about these illegal activities by members of the Greek Cypriot National Guard.

The general director of Greek Cypriot security, Andoniou, held a press conference in Nicosia in which he directly accused the Greek Cypriot Army, saying that "thefts among the soldiers have increased." He refrained, however, from referring to high-ranking Greek and Greek Cypriot officers who are engaged in smuggling narcotics.

ANKARA SPOKESMAN'S VIEWS ON RELATIONS 'POSITIVE'

NC171943 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 17 Mar 82 p 1

[Excerpt] The Turkish Government has "postponed" the prospecting it had decided to carry out in the Aegean. This is the result of the Greek protests to Ankara and the talks Ambassador Papoulias had with Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen last Saturday. In commenting on the Turkish Foreign Ministry spokesman's statement the day before yesterday that the climate in Greek-Turkish relations is now improving, the government spokesman in Athens described this as "positive" and added: "Provided what is being said is observed. Greece has never disturbed Greek-Turkish relations."

Yesterday's statement by the Turkish foreign minister is indicative of the change in the climate between the two countries. In his statement to foreign journalists, the foreign minister said: "Our problems with Greece are not new. We had them for many years. The dialogue was interrupted, but not at our whim. But I would not like to appear pessimistic today. Turkey is ready to start negotiations when Greece wants to, and when it can see that it is for the good of the two countries to continue the negotiations process."

In answer to a question about the content of his talks with Ambassador Papoulias, Mr Turkmen confined himself to saying: "The meeting was constructive. Our statement yesterday by our Ambassador Akiman stressed our basic positions. We hope we are not wrong in our assessments, and I will stop here."

Regarding the Cyprus issue, Mr Turkmen said: "We tried to help as much as we could in the Cyprus issue by encouraging the negotiations between the two communities so these may become more productive. There has been some progress in the intercommunal talks. There has been no tension and, consequently, the Cyprus issue was not discussed at the UN General Assembly for 2 consecutive years. We continue to believe there is a peaceful way to solve the Cyprus issue through the intercommunal talks."

GROUP CLAIMS EL SALVADOR LINK IN ATHENS BLAST

NC171904 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 17 Mar 82 p 2

[Text] The two bombs that went off the night before last outside the branch office of Citibank had, according to press reports, almost the same mechanism as those that caused the major fires in the department stores in Athens and Pireaivs. The second bomb caused slight damage to a parked car. The two devices had been placed in trash cans.

According to reports, leaflets were found at the sites of the two blasts with the signatures "AOI, Solidarity With the El Salvador People" and "4 August National Organization."

Explosions in North

NC171805 Athens NEWS in English 17 Mar 82 p 4

[Text] Bombs exploded shortly after midnight on Monday outside two branch offices of the American-owned Citibank in Athens causing slight damage but no injuries, police said on Tuesday. There were several other minor explosions in provincial towns.

An organization calling itself "Revolutionary Greek Battalions," claimed responsibility for the blasts in Kavala, Xanthi and Yannina. The group aims to free the military officers who imposed a military dictatorship in Greece in 1967.

TURKMEN ON AEGEAN OIL SEARCH, GREEK RELATIONS

NC180814 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 15 Mar 82 pp 1, 14

[Nilufer Yalcin report from Ankara]

[Excerpt] In a statement to MILLIYET, Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said: "The information Turkey sought in connection with the search for oil in the disputed waters off Thasos has been obtained. We will evaluate this information, together with the statement Prime Minister Papandreou made in reply to Prime Minister Ulusu. I hope this evaluation will be carried out this week and that Turkey will determine its stand according to its results.

Foreign Minister Turkmen confirmed our information that Greece's reply was brought to him by Greek Ambassador Papoulias, who returned to Ankara the other night, but added that it would not be correct to "make any disclosures before every aspect of the latest developments concerning Turkey's relations with Greece is duly evaluated."

However, according to information obtained from diplomatic circles, the Greek Government has not hinted in its reply to Turkey that it considers the Bern agreement null and void. Moreover, in his statement, which constitutes a reply to Ulusu's press conference, Papandreou tried to refrain from using "a provocative and escalating" style and to reply to points raised by Prime Minister Ulusu. The same circles say that the reply Athens sent to Ankara appears to have been drafted in a style which "tends to soften the present tension." For example, after commenting on Ulusu's views yesterday from his own angle, Papandreou said at the end of his statement that "it was time the Aegean was converted into a sea of peace," and accused "foreign forces and chauvinist aims" of trying to cause a confrontation between the two nations. In this statement, Papandreou said he was "not ready to enter into a dialogue with Turkey." Nevertheless, he admits the necessity of turning the Aegean into a sea of peace. Such a result depends on creation of a more moderate atmosphere between the two nations.

On the other hand, it is pointed out that although Prime Minister Ulusu's words at his press conference in connection with Turkey's relations with Greece were "severe, they conveyed a reasonable and balanced content" and stressed Turkey's determination to resolve the issue through negotiations and good will.

ULUSU 'PLEASED' WITH RESULTS OF VISIT TO IRAQ

TA171724 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu, who paid an official visit to Iraq as the guest of Taha Yasin Ramadan, Revolution Command Council member and first deputy prime minister, has returned to Turkey. In a statement at Esenboga Airport on his arrival, Ulusu said he was pleased with the results of his visit. He said the two countries were now embarked on a process of speedy development of relations, adding that the Iraqi leaders see Turkey as a trustworthy and brotherly country and want to maintain the existing friendship and cooperation.

Prime Minister Ulusu said he had paid a visit to Iraq in line with the government policies regarding the Middle East and Iraq, and that this visit had strengthened confidence in the future of relations with that country.

DISPUTE ARISES WITHIN FOREIGN POLICY COUNCIL

[Special DIE PRESSE report by "GB"]

[Excerpt] Vienna -- On Wednesday evening, following a meeting of the Foreign Policy Council of over 2 hours, which was completely taken up by the Al-Qadhdhafi visit, a sharp dispute arose between Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr and Ludwig Steiner, foreign political spokesman of the Austrian People's Party [OeVP]. Steiner rejected Pahr's reproach that he had made propaganda against Austria in the United States as "absolutely unheard of" and an "outrageous statement." Steiner himself declared that on his visit to the United States in the past week he explained, only when asked, the negative attitude of his party concerning the visit of Al-Qadhdhafi in Vienna.

At the meeting of the Foreign Policy Council, the diverging views between the government and the opposition parties were also expressed. However, all parties agreed that the insulting statements by Al-Qadhdhafi about the United States -- about a nation friendly to Austria -- must be regretted and rejected.

Pahr Comments on Controversy

[Edgar Sterbenz report on foreign Minister Pahr's press conference in Vienna 18 March]

[Text] Another retrospection on the Al-Qadhdhafi visit, a description of the principles of Austrian foreign policy, a preview of diplomatic travel, and a general view of world policy -- all these were the key points of the foreign minister's press conference. Willibald Pahr refuted the charges leveled in connection with Al-Qadhdhafi's visit by the Austrian People's Party [OeVP] that Austria was increasingly slipping from its traditional neutral policy to a policy of nonalignment and that, as a result, Austria was losing its internationally appreciated predictability. The foreign minister said:

[Begin Pahr recording] The charge leveled by the opposition, or rather by one opposition party, that Austrian foreign policy is increasingly leading to nonalignment is not proved by anything, it is a mere assertion which conflicts with Austria's unambiguous attitude. I do not see -- particularly in this visit -- anything that could not be predicted in Austrian foreign policy, which has always been a policy of talking to everybody who wanted to talk to us. Look, it is a duty of the neutral to be impartial, and being impartial also implies listening to all parties. Therefore this is very much in agreement with predictability. [end recording]

Pahr also commented on the controversy between him and Ambassador Steiner, OeVP foreign policy spokesman. Yesterday at the session of the Foreign Policy Council Steiner had rejected as outrageous Pahr's charge that he, Steiner, had conducted propaganda against Austria in the United States. Pahr stated in this context today:

[Begin Pahr recording] I would like to state in advance that I am far from insulting Ambassador Steiner or from charging him with being base-minded. He is free -- like everybody in Austria -- to uphold his own opinion, the opinion of his fellow thinkers, or of his party whenever and wherever he likes. But please permit us also to form an opinion, and to state this. We have never demanded nor will we ever demand that the opposition must defend the view of the government. [end recording]

With respect to the principles of Austria's foreign policy, Pahr noted that this policy is consistent, straightforward and reflects the situation at the given moment. [Begin Pahr recording] With our foreign policy -- and this is the noblest aim of foreign policy -- we want to make a contribution to security policy, a contribution to the security of Austria, and we believe that we can best achieve this primarily by making a contribution to security throughout the world. [end recording]

Here are a few Pahr statements on topical world problems. About the U.S.-Libyan conflict over territorial waters in the Gulf of Sidra: He did not want to give any advice to foreign governments. It is always the best thing in a conflict, however, to seek negotiations. With reference to the forthcoming elections in El Salvador: Austria would not dispatch observers. This is a matter of concern for the Central American region. The roots of unrest in Central America are the social and economic conditions in these countries. The population of the Central American states must solve their problems themselves with the participation of all political forces. Also, a mere freeze of the existing potentials in the sector of limiting missiles is insufficient, Pahr said.

KREISKY INTERVIEWED ON AL-QADHDHAFI VISIT

DW181303 Hamburg DIE ZEIT in German 19 Mar 82 p 8

[Theo Sommer interview with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky -- date and place not given]

[Text] ZEIT: Did Al-Qadhdhafi's visit meet with your expectations?

Kreisky: I have known Al-Qadhdhafi for 7 years. He is a Third World revolutionary who cannot be judged by our standards -- neither regarding his ideas nor his deeds. Therefore, I was confronted with the question: Should this man be ignored or should an attempt be made, if the opportunity presents itself, to hold a talk between two planets, as it were.

ZEIT: What was the result?

Kreisky: Economically, matters were already well settled. We can't expect anything better than what we already have.

ZEIT: And politically?

Kreisky: Politically, it was an attempt to discuss open questions with him and see what possibilities there are in this respect. Regarding Malta, for instance, I persuaded Al-Qadhdhafi and Mintoff to meet because I know them well. They agreed to something big states rarely accept: arbitration by the International Court of Justice.

ZEIT: Did you also discuss Libya's role in Africa and Al-Qadhdhafi's links with international terrorism?

Kreisky: He told me that he doesn't have any such ties, that this isn't true, that this is a fabrication. Personally I believe that he did and still does have quite a number of such ties. However, this is good reason to try to convince the man that it is probably much easier to solve problems some other way and that it will at least be easier for him to find allies in solving these problems another way.

ZEIT: Do you have the impression that he wants to reorient Libya toward West Europe or is making an effort in this respect?

Kreisky: Not exclusively toward West Europe. However, he wants to establish contacts with West Europe; he wants it to develop another image.

ZEIT: Three years ago you welcomed Arafat in Vienna. Now you appeared publicly hand in hand with Al-Qadhdhafi. What role do you have in mind for the Republic of Austria?

Kreisky: Austria's world political position allows me to pursue such a policy, and in so doing I repeatedly calculate very precisely to ensure that in the last analysis it only benefits and does not harm Austria. It cannot be seriously assumed that what we occasionally hear from America is in all circumstances the final word. You know how long I was alone regarding the Arab and, above all, the Palestinian issue. Now all the world is prepared to recognize that it is the central problem.

However, I attach great importance to the following: I am not a professional mediator; interpreting certain standpoints is much more important.

ZEIT: Following your talks with Al-Qadhdhafi, would you say that he is open to reason? Is it worthwhile trying to influence him? Would you recommend him to other West European capitals?

Kreisky: I wouldn't say it is worthwhile trying to influence him because he is naturally a man with a very strong will. In our talks he behaved like a young man would toward a very old man who has been in political life for a long time and in whom he has a certain confidence. At any rate, there were certain useful possibilities raised which I don't want to talk about now. There are always possibilities -- this is experience I have gained in the past 10 years.

Exile Rumor 'Absurd'

[Text] Vienna (AZ) — "Incomprehensible lies," and "sheer madness" -- with these words Chancellor Kreisky commented in an interview with ARBEITER-ZEITUNG [on 17 March in Vienna] the assertion of KURIER [of 16 March, page 3] that Libyan revolution leader Al-Qadhdhafi had come to Austria because he feared an attack by the United States.

KURIER wrote that Al-Qadhdhafi was prepared to seek asylum in Austria, and that this was why he had brought his wife and son with him to Austria -- to get himself and his family to safety. Kreisky declared that this assertion was absolutely absurd if only in view of the fact that he had not brought his other five children with him. Moreover, he said, it was astonishing how calm Al-Qadhdhafi had been. "Other statesmen would have been much more nervous" in such a case as the proclamation of the economic boycott by the United States. "It is always the same: They themselves are exceedingly touchy, but then they denigrate and insult others," Kreisky said.

CHANCELLOR ADDRESSES SYMPOSIUM, VIEWS POLAND

AU181344 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1140 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Helmut Klezander report on opening of international 2-day symposium on "Chances and Opportunities of the 1980's" sponsored by the Austrian Zentralsparkasse Savings Bank on the occasion of its 75th anniversary, with speeches by Chancellor Kreisky and Prof Margarita Maximova of the Soviet Academy of Sciences delivered 18 March -- with recorded portions, Maximova statements beginning in Russian with German translation superimposed]

[Excerpts] The aim of the symposium, to be addressed by 14 prominent speakers, is to make a contribution toward a better understanding between East and West, as well as between North and South -- in other words, between industrialized and developing countries.

The first speaker was Chancellor Kreisky. The deliberations of a militant politican -- those were his words -- were primarily devoted to the current international tensions and the world economic crisis, with the focal points being Poland and armament. Any attempt to break Poland out of the East bloc would bring Europe to the brink of a military conflict, he said, pointing out that Poland has to struggle with the difficulties of a military dictatorship and at the same time with those of a party that hardly functions.

[Begin Kreisky recording] At any rate the policy of detente is extremely endangered through Poland. But the strong armament trend which exists today, especially on the part of the superpowers, also constitutes a serious threat to the policy of detente. One should not indulge in any illusions about the reactions in democratic Europe. [end recording]

The pacifist trends, Kreisky went on to say, are further strengthened by ideas regarding a nuclear war limited to Europe.

Kreisky naturally also commented on loans for East bloc countries -- possibly because Creditanstalt Bank Director General Androsch had recently declared in London that there would not be a single dollar for Poland before the question of Poland's repaying its old debts had been resolved at the international level. Chancellor Kreisky said today:

[Begin Kreisky recording] I believe we must very soon have the courage, within the existing organizations -- EEC, OECD -- to have a very thorough talk on the possibilities for resolving the world economic crisis, and I believe that in this context it would also be necessary to discuss the question of loans for the communist countries in a very calm atmosphere. For, ladies and gentlemen, you know better than I that these loans were not taken from us forcibly by these countries, or obtained by trickery, but that they were granted in connection with the strongly developing East-West trade in the phase of detente. And I would consider it as highly dangerous if we were to politicize these economic questions in a manner which ultimately would certainly have to be retracted again. [end recording]

According to Kreisky, it is above all dangerous to try to exert economic pressure on the East.

[Begin Kreisky recording] For, among the peoples -- even where communism is in power -- there are certain tendencies which many do not recognize and understand -- namely, that such pressures touch off a national resistance which in the final analysis serves the regime and not those who want to combat the regime in this manner. That is a historical experience of over half a century, and I cannot warn enough against basing a policy upon such illusions. [end recording]

Margarita Maximova of the Soviet Academy of Sciences [who spoke after Kreisky] then expressly referred to Kreisky's words, supporting his attitude toward a joint solution of the Polish problem. Regarding the East bloc's financial problems, Maximova said:

[Begin Maximova recording] The West's attempt to close the international credit markets to the Soviet Union is difficult to understand in view of the necessity for cooperation in many fields. As regards the total amount of its debts, the East bloc, for example, is not more indebted than Brazil. Poland is a special case. Here numerous internal and external factors combined. But the Polish problem is primarily one between Poland and the Western banks, and not so much a problem of the Soviet Union. [end recording]

BRIEFS

AUSTRIA-GDR TRADE -- The volume of Austria's trade with the GDR has more than quadrupled since 1970. This was stated by Trade Minister Josef Staribacher on the occasion of his visit to the Leipzig Fair. According to the minister, new records were reached last year in Austrian-GDR trade. As against 1980, imports went up 21 percent to 2.58 billion schillings, and exports rose by 12.9 percent to 3.35 billion schillings. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 16 Mar 82 p 7 AU]

SCHMIDT DEPARTS FOR U.K. FOR TALKS WITH THATCHER

LD190910 Hamburg DPA in German 0845 GMT 19 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 19 Mar (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt flew to Britain this morning for talks with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher. The heads of government will have their regular German-British consultations at Chequers to discuss topical political issues before the Brussels EC summit at the end of March and the Western NATO and economic conferences at the end of June.

It is expected that the talks will focus on the West's position after the events in Poland, the continuing economic recession and the persisting quarrel about Britain's EC contributions.

CHANCELLOR MEETS SHAGARI, REJECTS SANCTIONS

LD181726 Hamburg DPA in German 1556 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn 18 Mar (DPA) -- The oil-rich African state of Nigeria and the FRG want to increase their economic relations. The Nigerian president, Alhaji Shehu Shagari today, in Bonn, invited German industry to make further investment in his country and pointed to the efforts of his country in the development of branches of industry other than oil. FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt promised that Bonn would "accompany positively" the participation of German firms in the development of capacities for the liquifaction of natural gas in Nigeria.

Today, the second day of his state visit to the FRG, Shagari had a 2-hour exchange of views with Schmidt at which questions concerning world economy, the situation in southern Africa and the North-South dialogue were discussed, as well as bilateral relations. Previously, the Nigerian president had met Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and the SPD chairman, Willy Brandt.

Shagari and Schmidt told journalists after their talk that they agreed in their demands for an end to apartheid and racial discrimination in South Africa. But Schmidt rejected economic sanctions against South Africa as a matter of principle. "We do not believe in economic wars, neither in a southern nor an eastern direction nor in any direction," he said. "We especially do not believe in it when it is harmful to ourselves."

The chancellor pointed out that other countries also followed this principle: "This is true of grain, for example, in one part of the world; it is true of the black neighboring states of South Africa in another part of the world. We are not in bad company in this matter." At the same time, Schmidt underlined that a refusal to use sanctions did not imply an acceptance of the actions of others, "not in the case of South Africa, not in the case of Poland, not in the case of the Soviet Union in Afghanistan."

STRAUSS BEHAVIOR ON U.S. VISIT DEEMED 'INEPT'

LD181852 Hamburg DPA in German 1731 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Bonn, 18 Mar (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has sharply criticized the statements of CSU Chairman Franz Josef Strauss during his visit to the United States and has accused the opposition politician of ignoring the preservation of mutual national interests in an irresponsible manner in order to gain an internal political advantage. It is dangerous for the FRG that Strauss wanted to give the wrong impression to leading Americans and the U.S. public, the impression that there is a movement in the FRG which has to be taken seriously, which attempts to make our loyalty to the alliance doubtful and, on top of that, which is supported by the Federal Government, Schmidt said in an interview with the WESTFAELISCHE RUNDSCHAU made available by the SPD.

The FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher also criticized the "shrill noises" made by Strauss. The CSU chairman, as well as the deputy chairman of the Parliamentary Group, Manfred Woerner, had aroused prejudices in Washington rather than trying to work for the national interest, "to dismantle prejudices in as far as there are any." In a Deutschlandfunk interview Genscher objected above all to the fact that Strauss had spoken of a Bonn policy of "sitting on the fence."

Schmidt stressed in the newspaper interview that the supposed anti-American tendency brought up by Strauss does not exist at all. He pointed to a poll by the American Gallup Institute in six Western European states according to which the necessity of a U.S. troop presence in Europe and the stationing of U.S. nuclear weapons is supported most strongly by the Germans. The reliability of the West German ally is also expressed in the defense contribution which has been higher than in any of the other partner states over the last 12 year. Schmidt said that the Federal Government, in agreement with the opposition, takes pains to inform the U.S. public correspondingly. "Anything positive that has been achieved here has been knocked down again by Strauss' ineptitude."

BAVARIAN MINISTRY OFFICIAL LANGEMANN ARRESTED

LD181318 Hamburg DPA in German 1206 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Munich, 18 Mar (DPA) -- The head of the State Protection Department in the Bavarian Interior Ministry, Hans Langemann, who was suspended from duty 2 weeks ago, was arrested this morning, the ministry's spokesman, Alfons Metzger, said in Munich today.

He said that Langemann had been arrested at the instigation of the Federal Prosecutor's Office in Karlsruhe. He stressed that he was not able to give further details because only the Federal Prosecutor General was entitled to give information.

The Federal Prosecutor's Office started preliminary proceedings against Langemann 2 weeks ago on suspicion of treason after a report had appeared in the Hamburg magazine KONKRET on the activities of the Federal Intelligence Service (BND) allegedly based on information supplied by Langemann, who is a former BND official.

BOMB EXPLODES AT BERLIN'S 'AMERICA HOUSE'

LD190016 Hamburg DPA in German 2352 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] Berlin, 18 Mar (DPA) -- A bomb placed outside the America House in the Center of Berlin exploded Thursday night. First police reports say the blast broke several inside windows. The specially secured outside panes remained undamaged. Nobody was injured.

It seems that the explosive device waw hidden in bushes at the back of the building, situated in Hardenberg Street near the Zoo Station. America House, which has been the repeated objective of anti-American demonstrations in the past few years, is guarded round the clock. There are no indications as to the culprits. The building has been cordoned off by the police. Investigations are to continue in the morning.

ENVIRONMENTALISTS PLAN ANTI-REAGAN DEMONSTRATION

[Report signed Ban.]

[Text] Bonn, 17 March -- Preparations for a demonstration on the occasion of the visit by U.S. President Reagan and of the NATO summit meeting in Bonn are beginning to take concrete shape. Some 37 organizations which consider themselves a part of the "peace movement" have called for a demonstration in Bonn on 10 June and have worked out a draft resolution to be adopted in early April by a considerable number of groups representing various movements.

The appeal, entitled "Stand Up for Peace," is directed against the striving of the American Government for a "worldwide position of dominance" and urges the NATO members to rescind their approval of NATO's dual decision. The aim is said to be worldwide disarmament with the first steps in this direction to be made in Europe. The appeal calls for a strong peace movement to exert pressure on Washington to negotiate "seriously" in Geneva. It condemns the "U.S. Government's cynical policy of intervention in Central America and other parts of the world."

According to the group views outlined late Tuesday in Bonn, the central demonstration is supposed to take place in the Rheinaue near the government buildings. A "meeting with the people of Bonn" is to take place the same afternoon in the Bonn Hofgarten where the so-called Bonn peace demonstration took place on 10 October last year with 250,000 participants. The groups which took part in that demonstration are supposed to be won over to also take part in the new demonstration; they will be invited to the preparatory meeting in early April. "The management of the preparatory committee," was supposed to be handled by the "Federal Association of the Citizens' Initiative for Environmental Protection" (BBU) and the "German Peace Society United Opponents of Military Service." In past years reports from the Office for the Protection of the Constitution said the latter were under the influence of the DKP. The group's chairman is Klaus Manhardt who belongs also to the "Committee for Peace, Disarmament and Cooperation."

So far the environmentalists, the Young Democrats and the "United German Students Association" have said they would take part. The Young Socialists will probably decide to take part despite the warnings of the SPD leadership.

One of the supporters of the 10 October demonstration, the Aktion Suhnezeichen [token of atonement], will take part despite earlier reservations. These reservations seem to have been overcome because the draft does not criticize the person of the American President as much as the first statements by the environmentalists. Although organizations close to the DKP, such as the "Socialist German Workers Youth" (SDAJ), did not take part in the Tuesday discussion, according to a statement by the DKP Executive Committee they are likely to take part in the meeting. The DKP had earlier approved a demonstration on the occasion of the NATO summit.

Discussions took place on Tuesday on the issue of how the Polish situation is to be treated by the appeal. Now the lifting of martial law and a political solution are demanded for Poland without, however, directly mentioning Moscow's responsibility. The appeal also objects to the fact that Poland is being used by NATO as a "means to aggravate international tensions." The United States, however, is directly charged with pursuing an "interventionist policy" in Latin America. The "cruelties" committed by "pro-American puppet regimes" are said to be the results of Washington's policy aimed at "again becoming the uncontested number one world power."

JURISTS: DEPLOYMENT OF MISSILES UNCONSTITUTIONAL

[Eckart Spoo Dispatch: "Even the Basic Law Is Supposed To Prevent the Missiles"]

[Text] Hanover, 15 March -- On the basis of constitutional law noted jurists have warned the Federal Government against approving the deployment of new U.S. missiles on West German territory as envisaged under the NATO dual decision. The "relation concerning the constitutionality of the deployment of U.S. medium-range missiles on the territory of the Federal Republic of Germany" published in Hanover on Monday has so far been signed by, among others, Bertram Boerner, Heinrich Hannover, Martin Hirsch, Werner Holtfort, Horst Isola, Erich Kuechenhoff, Ulrich Klug, Wolfgang Penningsdorf, Theo Rasehorn, Fritz Sack and Guenter Tondorf.

The jurists refer to Article 26 of the Basic Law according to which "actions tending to disturb the peaceful coexistence of the peoples and especially to prepare for waging a war of aggression" are unconstitutional. In the opinion of the signatories, this article of the constitution says in full conformity with Article 39 of the UN Charter that even the mere threat of military force against another state aimed at changing the status quo against its will is prohibited. Under both constitutional and international law such a threat of attack is equivalent to a war of aggression, just as blackmail is considered equal to robbery under domestic penal codes.

Thus in 1962 nobody in the Federal Republic doubted that the deployment of Soviet medium-range missiles in Cuba would have been an act of aggression in that sense "and that the USSR-Cuban agreement on the matter, the preparation of launching pads and the sea transport of the missiles were preparatory acts at variance with international law," the jurists argue. After all, the warning period that United States would have had would have been reduced to a point where Washington would have been prone to nuclear blackmail. For example, Washington "might have been forced to leave South Vietnam or El Salvador to the self-determination of their peoples," the "Relation" reads in part. Legally, the deployment of U.S. medium-range missiles in the Federal Republic must be assessed the same way.

The signatories concede to the Federal Government that "subjectively" it does not itself intend to commit an act of aggression if it takes steps to target Eurostrategic arms at the Soviet Union from the territory of the Federal Republic. Yet, in assessing the compatibility or incompatibility with the constitution it is not necessarily relevant that it must be the Federal Government itself which pursues such an intention. By the same token the Federal Government "must not allow a development where its own actions make it possible for another state to direct an act of aggression against a third country from FRG territory."

The jurists believe that it is an established fact that the "Pershing II" missiles and the "cruise missiles" are not strictly defensive weapons and that neutron weapons even constitute a means of aggression. In addition, it is in keeping with historical knowledge that both the United States and the USSR have been prepared to enforce their interests by force if necessary, as illustrated by the experiences of Mexico and the Dominican Republic as well as the Indians, Filipinos and Vietnamese. The jurists use this argument to warn against trusting that the United States would not misuse the new nuclear weapons for military extortion under the leadership of President Ronald Reagan. The "Relation" says in this connection: "After all, the United States is the only state which so far has waged nuclear war (against Japan) and chemical warfare (against Vietnam). Besides, it is the United States which has encircled the other power bloc politically and militarily. It was the United States which began arming with atom bombs, hydrogen bombs, neutron bombs and bacteriological weapons. The Soviet Union always merely counterarmed in all these technical areas."

The jurists further write that therefore anybody allowing the United States to deploy nuclear medium-range missiles on his national territory must necessarily accept the fact that these missiles are deployed with the intention of forcing Russia some day, if necessary through the threat to initiate military force, to change an existing situation against its will (for instance, to waive any option of exerting influence on the oil-producing countries in the Persian Gulf, to drive a hated ideology out of Poland, or to allow free plays to the mullahs in Afghanistan). Under German law, however, this is unequivocally a situation which is unconstitutional.

GENSCHER DISCUSSES DISARMAMENT WITH SOVIET ENVOY

LD191326 Hamburg DPA in German 1155 GMT 19 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 19 Mar (DPA) -- The Federal Government today warned Moscow against expecting that Bonn would not be in a position to politically implement the deployment of American medium-range missiles if the Geneva negotiations fail. In a talk with the Soviet ambassador in Bonn, Vladimir Semenov, Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher said that it would be a "grave error" to assume this. Semenov presented Genscher with the official text of Leonid Brezhnev's speech in which the head of the Soviet party and government announced a halt to the deployment of Soviet medium-range missiles.

A foreign Ministry spokesman said that Genscher used this opportunity to explain in detail the Federal Government's view that a satisfactory solution to the medium-range missile problem will be achieved only "through the complete mutual renunciation" of these weapons. Bonn has "clearly indicated" the way to this so-called zero option. Genscher also pointed to the Federal Government's "considerable concern" over the Soviets' present total of 300 SS-20 missiles which have a total of 900 warheads.

In his talk with Semenov, Genscher strongly emphasized the statement that the deployment part of the dual decision could be carried through. "Everything must be done to reach satisfactory results in the Geneva negotiations by the summer of 1983." At the same time, Genscher also stressed the German "interest in detente and cooperation with the Soviet Union," an interest that is shared by all Germans and "the parties represented in the Lower House."

Genscher pointed out to the Soviet ambassador, whom Genscher received shortly before he flew to London for the German-British consultations, the German-American determination to cooperate more closely. These closer contacts would include all partners in the Western alliance.

Genscher said that "dialogue, negotiations and cooperation with the leadership of the Soviet Union" are also an important task of this closer cooperation in the alliance. During his visit to Washington he had "noted with satisfaction that close and intensive talks are taking place between Washington and Moscow."

Genscher reminded Semenov of the Afghanistan debate in the Lower House on 11 March and reiterated the West's demand that the occupation by Soviet troops be ended and genuine nonalignment for Afghanistan be guaranteed. In this connection, Genscher again pointed to German concern over the situation in Poland. Implementing the three basic demands -- lifting martial law, releasing all internees and resuming the dialogue with the trade union and the church -- is the only path to a "successful future" for Poland.

SUBSTANTIAL TALKS WITH GDR EXPECTED AFTER EASTER

LD181726 Hamburg DPA in German 1535 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Leipzig, 18 Mar (DPA) -- Federal Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff said that in his talks with SED Politburo Member Guenter Mittag he gained no new knowledge of any possible accommodation by the GDR in the matter of easier conditions for people. Summing up his talks with Mittag and GDR foreign trade minister Horst Soelle at a news conference in Leipzig today, Lambsdorff announced that after Easter substantial talks with the GDR on the electrification of a railway line between West Berlin and federal territory and on an economic agreement between the two German states would be started.

PSI SECRETARY CRAXI MEETS WITH MITTERRAND

PM181015 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Mar 82 p 6

[Text] PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi was received for luncheon on 15 March by Mr Mitterrand, accompanied by Minister for European Affairs Andre Chadernagor, PS First Secretary Lionel Jospin and Socialist deputy for Paris, Claude Estier.

On leaving the Elysee Palace Craxi stressed "the coincidence of his viewpoints" with those of the president of the republic with regard to European issues. He judged the meeting "useful and interesting, inasmuch as President Mitterrand has recently had important international talks." The Italian Socialist leader described the French-Italian wine disputes as a "negative point."

"We also discussed the political situation in Italy," he added, "from the viewpoint of the government majority's relations with the communist opposition."

PRESIDENT, SCHMIDT DISCUSS U.S. INTEREST RATES

LD181846 Paris Domestic Service in French 1600 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] Francois Mitterrand is convinced the American bank rates will go down beginning now until the summer. This analysis follows his recent visit to Washington. Yesterday he spoke at length on the telephone with Helmut Schmidt to tell him this. France and West Germany have spoken several times against the rise in the bank rates which does not help them in the least to overcome the economic recession.

HERNU, INDIA'S RAO HOLD DEFENSE TALKS 18 MAR

NC181927 Paris AFP in English 1917 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 18 Mar (AFP) -- The chief of staff of the Indian Army, General Krishna Rao, met with Defense Minister Charles Hernu here today for talks focusing on cooperation between the French and Indian armies, the Defense Ministry said.

In a communique, Mr Hernu said it was decided that Indian student officers would follow training sessions in French military schools. He said France was "actively interested" in extending the two countries' military cooperation.

General Rao is scheduled to visit several military schools during his week-long official visit here that started Tuesday.

He has also met with army chief of staff Gen Jean Delaunay and military chief of staff Gen Janou Lacaze.

SCIENTISTS SAY IRAQ REACTOR COULD HELP MAKE BOMB

NC181536 Paris AFP in English 1527 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 18 Mar (AFP) -- Iraq's projected new "Osirak" nuclear reactor could be used to produce nuclear weapons, French scientists said here recently in a report sent to President Francois Mitterrand.

The Osirak reactor was destroyed in June last year when Israeli air force bombers attacked the Iraqi nuclear research center in Tammuz. France has offered to help Iraq rebuild the reactor on condition that Osirak be used for exclusively peaceful purposes.

But in a study carried out following a request by the French Government, five top-ranking French scientists concluded that the Osirak nuclear research reactor could in fact produce plutonium, needed to make the bomb.

In an attempt to ensure that Osirak operations could not be diverted into the production of military weaponry, France initially offered to supply Osirak with "caramel" fuel instead of enriched plutonium. Caramel is made up of uranium oxide enriched with a low quantity of Uranium 235. Unlike the highly enriched uranium (95 percent of Uranium 235) used to produce nuclear bombs and which often serves to fuel nuclear reactors, caramel cannot be converted into N-bomb capacity plutonium.

According to the terms of the initial Franco-Iraqi Osirak contract, Paris agreed to supply caramel in doses of only 13 kgs (28.6 lbs) at a time. These tiny quantities guaranteed France against Iraq diverting the fuel to military use as any diversion would have halted Osirak's continuing operation.

But the French report, prepared by National Centre for Scientific Research workers Georges Amsel and Raymond Sene, and by three other Academy of Sciences members, stressed that though the fuel problem had been resolved, Iraq was nevertheless capable of producing plutonium.

The water-cooled Osirak-type research reactor was one of the most powerful in the world, they said. As such, any matter undergoing irradiation in the test reactor could be replaced by natural uranium in order to obtain plutonium for the bomb.

A U.S. congressional committee has already concluded that international controls for "this type of reactor" are "ineffective," they said.

Osirak had a yearly plutonium production capacity of 3.3 to 10 kgs (6.6 to 22 lbs), the scientists said, pointing out that only 5 kgs (13.2 lbs) of plutonium were needed to produce the N-bomb.

The Soviet Union, Syria, the United States and Saudi Arabia had all expressed concern over the risks involved, which should not be taken lightly, they said.

PS-PCF ISSUE COMMUNIQUE 21 MAR ELECTIONS

PM190905 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Mar 82 p 7

[Text] At the end of the meeting which took place at PS headquarters in the afternoon of Monday 15 March between Lionel Jospin and Georges Marchais, the following communique was published:

"On behalf of the PS and PCF, Lionel Jospin and Georges Marchais met at PS headquarters on 15 March to review the situation after the first round of the canton elections.

"While the right certainly seems to have obtained all its votes last Sunday, it is clear that the left did not rally all its forces. This is what it must achieve in the next few days with a view to the second round which will be decisive for the installation of the department assemblies.

"The French men and women who want to see the success of the policy of social justice, economic recovery, the struggle against unemployment and major reforms followed since 10 May must answer this call on Sunday.

"In all the cantons in which the decision was not made in the first round we must unite and mobilize to ensure the success of the leftwing candidate who came first, and who will be the majority's only candidate in the second round. The PS and the PCF will devote all their efforts to the success of the union candidate in each canton for the continuation of change."

LE MONDE COMMENTS ON MITTERRAND U.S. TRIP

[Editorial: "A French-American Summit 'Without Ceremony'"]

[Text] It was a very unusual visit, as Mr Reagan himself said, which the president of the republic paid to Washington Friday, 12 March. First it was unusual in its brevity: It is unprecedented for a French head of state to cross the Atlantic for so short a time to meet with a U.S. President. Second, it was unusual in the time taken to prepare it: The Americans were surprised by the French president's insistence on moving so quickly. They agreed with good grace but with some apprehension. Finally, it was unusual in its significance: Why did Mr Mitterrand upset the rather vague protocol of transatlantic relations in this way?

In reply to those questions the French side says that France and the United States, precisely because they are old friends and allies, should be able to meet "without ceremony" when they feel the need. Without ceremony and without inhibitions; Mr Mitterrand seems to have completely dismissed the quibbling over protocol which hung over French diplomacy for a long time and which Mr Jobert had formerly championed. He showed no embarrassment about the fact that he was meeting with Mr Reagan for the fourth time in 9 months and each time on the American continent, and he left it to Mr Lecanuet and Mr d'Ornano, formerly regarded as "extremely Atlanticist," to point to that alleged breach of "dignity" and to Mr Marchais to approve of the step....

Similarly, the president of the republic has just revealed that, although he will not attend the Atlantic summit in Bonn in June, he will send Mr Mauroy to it and will visit the West German capital himself on that occasion to attend a dinner. In that respect he is doing more than Mr Giscard d'Estaing, who used one of those methods at the two summits held in Brussels in 1974 and 1975, but never both at the same time.

In any case the trip made it possible to have discussions at the highest level for the first time on the major disagreement which has arisen between the two countries over Central America. Judging from public statements the disagreement has not been dispelled: Washington still feels a grudge against Paris for having supplied arms to Nicaragua and for taking too favorable an attitude to the Salvadoran guerrillas. Mr Mitterrand does not intend to change his attitude but he is trying to present it in the least disagreeable way for his American interlocutors, who, he admits, are "in the front line." Hence his support for the Reagan plan for the development of the Caribbean and also the eagerness with which the two countries reaffirmed their commitment to the principle of "democratic government" throughout the region.

The French president also resumed, although in a very elliptical way, in his public statements his old ideas on a reform of the Atlantic alliance, which he wants to make "more coherent" and "alive." Barely a year before coming to power he had asked in these columns "to know finally where we stand" with regard to the alliance, its obligations and its automatic operation. Today Mr Mitterrand has been able to gauge all the traps awaiting him on that dangerous ground. But he does not seem to have lost sight of the objective.

EMBASSY 'NOTES' PRC WARNING ON TAIWAN RELATIONS

AU181605 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] Beijing, 18 Mar (ANSA) -- The Italian Embassy here announced today that it has "taken note" of a Chinese request to all countries with which it has trade and political relations to block the opening of Taiwanese trade offices on their soil.

"Like the other European Economic Community countries, we have taken note of the Chinese verbal note and we have transmitted it to the Foreign Ministry in Rome, as the note requested," an embassy spokesman said.

The Chinese position was conveyed to all embassies here. It warned against official relations with Taiwan, which China considers as an integral part of its territory. The warning has only limited practical significance for Italy whose trade relations with the offshore island are very limited. Italy recognized the People's Republic of China in November 1970, breaking off all political relations between Rome and Taipei.

According to Western observers, the Chinese move is of special significance in view of current contacts between China and the United States on the Reagan administration's plans to sell arms to Taiwan.

SPAIN'S CALVO-SOTELO MEETS WITH SENIOR OFFICIALS

LD181630 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Report by special correspondent Juan Jose Campo]

[Text] Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo has been received at the Quirinal Palace by President Sandro Pertini. During their cordial talks, they reviewed the international situation and bilateral relations.

Calvo-Sotelo then went to the Montecitorio Palace for a meeting with Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini. A communique from the Prime Minister's Office reports that the talks took place in a climate of special cordiality. At a later point the meeting was also attended by the Italian and Spanish foreign ministers, Emilio Colombo and Perez-Llorca, and other members of the two delegations. The communique stresses the desire to increase cooperation between the two countries with the aim of promoting reciprocal economic development.

Calvo-Sotelo invited the Italian prime minister to pay an official visit to Spain and the invitation has been accepted. The date of the visit has not yet been fixed, but will be decided as soon as possible through normal diplomatic channels. The communique notes that special attention was given to Spain's forthcoming accession to the Atlantic alliance and the European Economic Community. In this respect Italy reaffirmed its determination to accelerate the process of Spain's entry into NATO and the EEC.

At this moment the prime minister is hosting a luncheon in honor of Giovanni Spadolini at the Montorio Palace, residence of the Spanish ambassador to Italy. After the luncheon the Spanish prime minister will meet the press.

Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo has also had a meeting with the president of the Italian Chamber of Deputies, Milde Iotti.

Communique Issued

AU181942 Rome ANSA in English 1906 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 18 Mar (ANSA) -- Italy has reiterated its support for Spain's entry into the European Economic Community and the Atlantic alliance during the talks the Spanish Premier Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo is having here. Calvo-Sotelo arrived in Rome yesterday for a three-day official visit.

A joint communique released today at the end of his consultations with his Italian counterpart Giovanni Spadolini said that the two sides also extended their talks to bilateral ties which they hope to develop further.

The encounter included the two foreign ministers, Pedro Perez Llorca for Spain and Emilio Colombo for Italy, and their respective delegations.

With regard to Spain's entry into the EEC, Spadolini voiced confidence that it would provide new impetus to the building of a Europe that plays an ever greater role in the development of European democracy, as well as serving as a factor of world peace and stability. For this reason, Italy is working for a quick and positive conclusion to the negotiations to include Spain in the European Community, Spadolini said.

The Italian Government also voiced its satisfaction over Spain's inclusion into NATO as "a significant and constructive contribution to Atlantic solidarity at a time of difficult East-West relations." Spadolini voiced the hope that the Iberian nation would be in a position to take part as a full-fledged member of the alliance in NATO's spring sessions and especially at the Bonn summit in June.

During the talks today the two sides also exchanged views on key international issues, and particularly the situations in the Middle East, the Mediterranean and Central America. Calvo-Sotelo invited Spadolini to make an official visit to Spain, an invitation which was warmly accepted. The date is still to be set but the visit will be arranged as soon as possible.

The Spanish premier was also received today by Italian head of state Sandro Pertini and tomorrow will be received in the Vatican by Pope John Paul II.

L'UNITA DOCUMENT ON RED BRIGADES CALLED FORGERY

NC190948 Paris AFP in English 0940 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 19 Mar (AFP) -- A document published in the Italian Communist Party newspaper L'UNITA -- which purported to show that two Christian Democratic cabinet members helped negotiate the release of a Neapolitan official from the Red Brigades terrorist group -- is a forgery, it was reported today.

Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni yesterday denied that the document had come from his ministry.

The document, reportedly a police report on Interior Ministry stationery, purportedly confirmed a visit by Culture Minister Vincenzo Scotti and Secretary of State of the Merchant Marine Francesco Patriarca to Ascolo Piceno prison, to meet with Camorra leader Rafaele Cutolo.

Cutolo, whose Camorra is known as the Naples version of the Sicilian mafia, agreed to mediate with the Red Brigades for the release of the Neapolitan official, a Christian Democrat named Ciro Cirillo. Mr Cirillo was freed on July 24, 1981, after being held for 88 days. He was freed in exchange for a 1.25-million-dollar ransom furnished by the Banco di Salente, according to L'UNITA which published the contested document yesterday.

L'UNITA also reported that several pages of the prison guest register were torn out, presumably to keep the ministers' visit a secret.

Both Mr Scotti and Mr Patriarca denied the stories, and threatened to sue the newspaper for libel. Yesterday, Mr Rognoni formally denied that the document had come from his services, and newspapers of all political persuasions reported that the document was a forgery.

L'UNITA's story today, under a headline saying "The Scandal -- The Payment of a Ransom -- Remains," said: "To say (the document) is a forgery is arbitrary. It would mean that someone made a forgery to harm persons named in the document. We would then be faced with an enormous scandal, much bigger than that of the payment of a ransom to the Red Brigades."

Informed sources said the Italian Communist Party has refused to accept "for the time being" the resignation of L'UNITA director, Claudio Petruccioli, who has taken full responsibility for the newspaper's latest reports.

Mr Petruccioli wrote in an editorial: "The line of the party is not involved. The choice...was made by the newspaper and the newspaper alone, with a conviction that it makes making a contribution to uncovering one of the mysteries poisoning Italian political life."

MEDIA STRIKES PLANNED FOR WEEK 20-28 MARCH

LD190822 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2300 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] The National Press Federation proclaimed a week of strikes which will leave the country without information. In a statement the federation talks of the bitter decision which -- not underestimating its consequences -- the journalists were compelled to make in view of the blind position of publishers who, ignoring the invitation by the government, have put their veto on negotiations.

The strike calendar envisages 4 days of strikes by employees of press agencies, daily newspapers and periodicals. As regards radio and television, the strikes will be total on Saturday, 20 March, Wednesday, 24 March, and Friday, 26 March. Radio and television journalists will support the dispute by refraining from service on radio and television and by broadcasting considerably shorter news bulletins. On the 21st, 25th and 28th there will be no daily papers.

POPE PRAYS FOR POLISH SOLIDARITY TRADE UNIONISTS

LD171542 Vatican City in English to Central and West Europe 1445 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] During the course of the general audience, John Paul II continued his prayer in Polish to Our Lady of Jasna Gora. He began by reading once again the words of the Polish bishops in their communique of 27 February. Social understanding must guarantee the satisfaction of the needs and the realisation of the desires of the population, the cooperation of the citizens in public life and in effective social control. The elements in this understanding are the ruling authority and the credible representatives of organized social groups.

Nor must we forget the representatives of syndicates which have been temporarily suspended and, among these, the autonomous and self-directing Solidarity union, which possesses such a broad social (?base). The problems touched upon an indication of the direction to be taken in the search for and making of solutions.

The pope then prayed: Our Lady of Jasna Gora, you have instructed the sons and daughters of my nation for many generations. In the last 10 years the links between them and you have become very close. Therefore, allow me today to express to you these words of my brothers in the episcopate. These words are a manifestation of the care for the future of the nation, of the care which has arisen in the midst of the trials of the last few months and years. These words are a program of life for the conditions of the social order.

You, Mother of the Church, lend your help so that these words may be fulfilled.

PSOE DECIDES TO 'LIMIT FRICTION' WITH GOVERNMENT

PM191043 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 16 Mar 82 p 21

[Joaquin Prieto report: "PSOE Decides To Moderate Its Attitude Toward Government"]

[Excerpt] At its meeting over the weekend the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] Federal Committee adopted a line of moderation in the confrontation with the government as long as the situation of weakness in the democratic system continues, reiterating its readiness to resolve the points of friction by means of partial agreements. The Federal Committee -- the Socialist Party's top body between congresses -- also approved the setting up of a committee to study economic sectors which may be nationalized. It also endorsed the proposal for setting up a party standing committee, as was forseeable.

This Federal Committee meeting concluded with a resolution in which the PSOE officially undertakes to limit to the utmost its points of parliamentary friction with the government and to do all it can to ensure that the general election is held in 1983. However, the spirit of the meeting was very different -- concern about the democratic system's weakness in its confrontation with putschism, anxiety about the offensive by broad rightwing sectors against socialism and conviction that the dissolution of the Cortes will occur after the summer vacation. From the information supplied by several of those attending the meeting it follows that the Socialist strategy for the next few months can be summarized as follows:

— Support for everything implied by the maintenance of democracy against reactionary threats.

— Launching of an election campaign in Andalusia to end up as the foremost party in that region, but without overconfidence.

— Immediately afterward to prepare the organization for a general election in the fall. If an early dissolution of the Cortes does not occur, the PSOE will launch an offensive against the government.

"There are no substantial changes concerning the party line," Alfonso Guerra and Guillermo Galeote stated at the conclusion of the meeting. "We have reaffirmed the policy of responsibility and of making possible the governability of the state until the next legislative elections, which should be held in 1983. But it is unlikely that the government will be able to hold out without calling an election before the end of 1982."

The PSOE Federal Committee also broached the controversy over nationalization measures, starting from questions put by a Socialist deputy, Luis Solana. Alfonso Guerra denied that there are disagreements among the members of the leadership over this issue, but in addition to the debate, which in fact was very brief, the Federal Committee decided to appoint a committee to study the sectors in which nationalization measures might be implemented. In a ballot the Federal Committee elected Joaquin Leguina, Ernest Lluch and Jeronima Saavedra to compose this commitee.

The committee will not devote itself solely to the "passive sectors" in terms of economic growth but will direct its work on the basis of the criteria mentioned in Article 128 of the Constitution, according to which it is possible by law to reserve essential resources or services for the public sector. The report expected from the committee concerns the energy sector and the part of the financial sector in which possible nationalization measures might be implemented, as well as control of the functioning of public enterprises.

This decision of the PSOE Federal Committee is not so much a measure adopted following the public controversy over nationalization measures as the fulfillment of a resolution of the party's 29th congress envisaging the setting up of a committee of this kind and mentioning the food, pharmaceutical and electronic sectors as those in which a "considerable public presence" is required, like the official credit institutions and the savings banks.

DEFENDANT IMPLICATES KING IN COUP ATTEMPT

NC171742 Paris AFP in English 1655 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Madrid, 17 Mar (AFP) -- Lt Col Antonio Tejero, who led an armed commando into the Spanish parliament during the abortive putsch of February 23, 1981, today claimed full responsibility for the takeover which he said was "a success."

Testifying today at the putschists' trial here, Lieutenant-Colonel Tejero said he was convinced at the time that the operation, led by Gens Antonio Armada and Jaime Milans del Bosch, had the approval of Spanish King Juan Carlos.

He said he had planned the occupation of the parliament well in advance of the coup because "the only way to prevent a civil war when you have an operation of this kind is to detain the highest officials of the state."

Marching firmly and clicking his heels to stand at attention before the judges, the officer said General Milans del Bosch had told him at a meeting on January 18 last year that he was planning "a Turkish-style coup, with no bloodshed involved."

The general, whom he considered to be the tactical head of the coup, told him that "the King was fed up with (then-Premier Adolfo) Suarez and approved of the operation, because he could see no other politician capable of running the government."

Lieutenant-Colonel Tejero told the court that he was not a monarchist. The idea, he said, was to set up a military government, amend the constitution, put an end to terrorism and "freeze" Marxism.

"The public," he added, "was to believe that the operation was being conducted in the name of democracy. That was the only reason why I tolerated such repeated use of that word."

He spoke of "the atmosphere of sincere comradeship" during the occupation of the parliament. Many soldiers, he said, "came in shouting 'long live Spain' and saying they were ready to do anything, even if they deny it today and utter stupidities."

He himself fired two shots in the air and ordered his men to shoot bursts from their machineguns, he admitted, but the aim was only to intimidate some members of parliament who may have been armed.

"So there was to be no bloodshed?" the prosecutor inquired. "My God, no. Absolutely none," replied the lieutenant colonel. He said he was convinced that he had accomplished a difficult mission, "because I am a stubborn man. I believe that if a man decides to punch a hole in a wall with his head, he can do it."

Party Chiefs Defend King

LD182146 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] Felipe Gonzalez, secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party, is in Jaen to take part in meetings with Socialist leaders. He said that he considers as deplorable the attempts to implicate the king in the events of 23 February 1981. The king has always been a firm proponent of democracy.

With regard to his party's program, Felipe Gonzalez said that a nationalization policy is difficult at the moment because it would impoverish Spain rather than create wealth.

For his part, Nicolas Sartorius, deputy secretary general of the Spanish Communist Party, said today in Madrid that to counter the offensive [of] the February 23 putschists his party is proposing a meeting of all parliamentary parties for the total defense of the head of state. Sartorius said that the PCE is also going to take other initiatives for the same purpose. MUNDO OBRERO [PCE publication] will devote an important space for the subject of defending the person of the head of state and the democratic institutions.

JORGENSEN WELCOMES BREZHNEV MISSILE PROPOSAL

NC181735 Paris AFP in English 1726 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] Copenhagen, 18 Mar (AFP) -- Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen today reacted positively to Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's announcement of a Soviet freeze on the installation of medium-range nuclear weapons in its European sector.

Mr Brezhnev made the announcement Tuesday along with other arms control proposals.

"I find President Brezhnev's statements attractive and I hope they help bring about the reduction of atomic arsenals that we are all hoping for," Mr Jorgensen said in an official statement. The prime minister said that "it goes without saying" that the Brezhnev proposal concerns the current U.S.-Soviet Euromissile negotiations being held in Geneva. He added that he "hopes that the proposals will be concrete and controllable, and I suppose that the Soviet Union will raise them at the Geneva negotiations."

KOIVISTO'S VISIT TO MOSCOW SEEN AS SUCCESS

PM170913 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 12 Mar 82 p 2

[Olof Santesson editorial: "Koivisto"]

[Text] Koivisto's debut as Finnish president visiting Moscow seems to have gone well. Nor was anything else to be expected. Both Finland and the Soviet Union have every interest in demonstrating that everything is the same as it was in Kekkonen's days. For the Soviet Union it would have been counterproductive to show continued dissatisfaction with the election of Koivisto, who was not the Soviet favorite. The chief value of Koivisto's working visit is probably that it has given the Soviet leadership a first opportunity to build up direct personal contacts with the new Finnish head of state, whom they do not feel they know very well. In such cases as this the Kremlin is un-Marxist enough not to think in terms of productive forces and the like, but in terms of the person, pure and simple.

An important issue between Finland and the Soviet Union is the 3 billion markkaa balance of trade deficit in Finland's favor. This problem will not be solved by a few days' friendly talks. What is most interesting for the rest of the world is that neither Koivisto nor Brezhnev made very much of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area. Koivisto will perhaps not pursue the question as intensively as his predessor, and the Soviet Union obviously does not want to commit itself any further at the present time.

DEFENSE MINISTER ENDORSES NATO EXERCISES

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report: "Soviet Submarine Could Have Had Uranium Warheads"]

[Text] Bardu, 15 Mar -- "The Soviet submarine which went aground off Karlskrona in Sweden could have had as much as 10 kg of uranium on board in the form of warheads in torpedoes," Norwegian Defense Minister Anders C. Sjaastad told a press conference in Bardu this evening in connection with his visit to the NATO Allow Express exercise.

"We only have the reports of Swedish experts to rely on in this context. But the conclusion of the reports dismisses the claim made by one researcher that the uranium radiation from the submarine could have come from a watch [klokke]. Ten kilos of uranium in one or more watches is a bit much," Sjaastad said.

"Exercises like Allow Express show that the defense alliance is in good health and that it works," he said. "A vast majority in Norway support Norwegian membership in NATO and the vast majority of us also realize the necessity of exercises like these."

He repeated his previous statements to the effect that it is wrong to link U.S. affairs in Central America with exercises held by the NATO alliance and announced his opposition to the Nordland Labor Party's resolution that U.S. troops are not welcome on Norwegian soil because of the U.S. involvement in El Salvador.

When asked why the troops taking part in Allow Express are not practising defense against nuclear attack, Sjaastad said: "We give priority to conventional defenses. We want primarily to spend money on a conventional defense force which will have a deterrent effect and be able to repulse a possible future attack."

Sjaastad also commented on the reports that a prominent Conservative Party politician in Troms had supported a resolution passed by the local council that the government should work actively for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area.

"In a democracy like ours we will find people in all parties who have differing views on this issue," Sjaastad said. "And Foreign Minister Stray has already said that the nuclear-free zone issue is not a matter for a local council."

GOVERNMENT TIGHTENS MILITARY SALES, TRAINING

LD182222 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 2000 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] Sweden will tighten the sale of arms and military services abroad. The Swedish Government has drawn up a new bill on the matter which, for example, restricts manufacture by licence of Swedish military equipment. Juhani Lompolo reports from Stockholm:

[Begin Lompolo recording] Under the government's new bill, the export from Sweden of military equipment will be banned. However, in practice this is not as radical as it sounds, for the manufacturers of arms and other military equipment can apply individually to the government for permission to export their goods. The new bill, which the government has now sent into committee, will however, tighten up arms sales. Manufacture under license abroad will now require a permit. In other words, the government will be able to have its say about the activities of Swedish enterprises abroad.

The new bill also contains a paragraph with which Sweden hopes to be able to avoid scandals like the so-called Telub affair, which concerned the training of young Libyans at Vaexjoe in south Sweden at the state-owned defense industry Enterprise Telub. It was publicly disclosed that the young Libyans were in fact soldiers and that the training that had been publicly described as being of a civilian nature contained military subjects. In connection with the affair, the truthfulness of the statements by many government members was questioned, but the ministers got out of the hullabaloo with public reprimand. The new bill places military training on a par with arms sales and the manufacture under licence of military equipment, and thus it will be subject to government permission. [end recording]

ULLSTEN DISCUSSES SEA BORDER TALKS WITH USSR

PM171349 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 8 Mar 82 p 3

[Swedish Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten "Focus" article: "No Sellout of Swedish Interests"]

[Text] In recent months, Sweden's boundary negotiations with the Soviet Union have attracted a great deal of interest. This is a pleasing sign, since this is an extremely important question for Sweden and is well worth the attention of politicans, the mass media and the general public.

However, parts of the debate have been inaccurate and there have been several misunderstandings about what the negotiations are really about and about the stage which the negotiations have reached. Perhaps this is not that odd, since the problems surrounding the demarcation line are complicated. At the same time it is important that all those who make statements on this issue do so on the basis of correct facts.

What is it we are negotiating about? Let me first state that the question does not affect our territorial boundaries. For several years Sweden has had a territorial boundary lying 12 nautical miles from its coastline. And around Gotland, too, the territorial boundary is 12 nautical miles from the island's coast. No one has demanded that we move this territorial boundary -- not even the Soviet Union, which has also had a corresponding 12-mile limit for a long time.

Despite the fact that Swedish territory ends at the 12-mile limit we are also able to lay claim to certain limited, but important rights over the sea areas further away from our coasts. These are principally two types of rights -- the right to exploit possible resources on the ocean bed (the continental shelf) and fishing rights.

It is these rights which are now the subject of our negotiations with the Soviet Union. Thus the main concern is to establish how far from its coastline Sweden will be able to exploit the possible resources on the sea bed. The other concern is to determine the boundary between the Swedish and Soviet fishing zones.

What the negotiations are not about is giving Sweden total jurisdiction over these sea areas. Regardless of who is given the right to the continental shelf and to fishing, these areas remain open sea, where foreign vessels, including naval vessels, can stay for as long as they like and can be freely overflown by other countries' aircraft. Even if we were to obtain the precise demarcation lines we want in the Baltic we should not be able to prevent foreign submarines, for example, or other naval vessels from navigating freely right up to the edge of our territorial waters.

A convention dating from 1958 lays down the principle to be applied in determining a demarcation line on the continental shelf between countries facing each other across an area of sea. The convention gives the main rule that the demarcation line should be a median line between the two countries' coasts.

However, exceptions will apply when there are special circumstances calling for a deviation from the median line. Even though there are no corresponding international rules covering demarcation lines between two nations' fishing zones it is natural to assert that the same principles should be taken as a guide. It is also more practical to have one and the same demarcation line for both the continental shelf and fishing zones.

In international practice there have been quite a few cases where the question of how islands are to affect the drawing of a demarcation line has arisen. In this connection the situation varies from case to case.

As far as small islands and islands lying very close to another country's coast are concerned there have been deviations from the median line principle, but it is Sweden's view that the situation is different in the case of Gotland, which is a large island with a considerable population and its own commercial and industrial life and is not too far from the Swedish mainland.

During the negotiations we have therefore consistently argued that the demarcation line should be the median line between Gotland and the Baltic coast. However, this view has unfortunately not been accepted by the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union has instead argued that the demarcation line should in principle be a median line between the two countries' mainland coasts. While the Soviet Union accepts Swedish territorial waters and their limits, the Soviet position means that the Soviet section of the continental shelf and its fishing zone would stretch right up to the edge of Swedish territorial waters. At the same time the Soviet Union has declared its readiness to try to negotiate some form of compromise solution.

The demarcation line negotiations have now been going on for more than a decade without reaching any settlement. Meanwhile the circumstances surrounding the disputed area — the so-called white zone which is around 13,500 square km — have been fairly unsatisfactory. We cannot, for example, drill for oil or exploit in any other way the possible resources on the sea bed in this zone as long as the boundary question remains unresolved. Nor have any control over the fishing that goes on there. Thus it is in our own interest that we bring about a settlement of the border. How is this to be done?

For Sweden it is natural that when two sides are in disagreement attempts are made to arrange a legal investigation into the conflict. We would therefore be more than happy to refer the demarcation line question to the International Court of Justice in The Hague for a decision. In Sweden we are used to the idea of individuals being able to take their personal disputes to court.

When it comes to disputes between states things are not so easy. For a legal judgment to be obtained it is necessary for both states to be prepared to submit to such a judgment. The Russians' position is that referring border disputes for legal judgments is in conflict with Soviet principles. So long as the Soviet Union adheres to this position the avenue of legal settlement is closed.

This leaves two alternatives — either to make attempts to reach a negotiated settlement or to make the dispute permanent. If we want a negotiated settlement it is clear that we cannot count on the whole of the disputed area falling to Sweden.

After consulting the Foreign Affairs Committee the government authorized its negotiating delegation to investigate the possibility of a negotiated solution. To this end our negotiating delegation was also empowered to discuss certain alterations to the Swedish position of principle. This does not amount to our having abandoned our principles.

We will now decide how future negotiations will be conducted on the Swedish side. Prior to this decision a debate would be useful. It would give valuable guidance. If there is no settlement this would be to Sweden's disadvantage. This would not affect our ability to keep foreign naval vessels at a distance. The negotiations are not about our territorial waters. These were fixed long ago. The fact that they are not always respected is another matter.

The negotiations are not about giving up any territory which is Swedish today, but about determining how far out from our coast our rights to the continental shelf and to fishing will stretch. Only when it has been decided that the whole of the disputed area or the major part of it is Swedish can we begin to exploit the existing resources on the sea bed. Only then would the area become Swedish fishing waters.

The people of Gotland and everyone else can be confident. We are not going to sell out any Swedish interests.

CAGATAY ADDRESSES NORTH OFFICIALS' FIRST MEETING

TA181345 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] The prime minister, Mr Cagatay, has said that a Cyprus settlement would be easier if the Greek Cypriots abandoned their prejudices and sinister aims at the conference table. Speaking this morning at the first meeting of the new Council of Ministers formed by him earlier this week, Mr Cagatay said the fact which should have been observed so far was that the Greek Cypriot side has been trying to use the intercommunal talks as a stepping-stone to achieve its aims which run counter to the realities in Cyprus. The Greek Cypriot side, he said, had deliberately obstructed every progress at the talks to justify its (?claim) that the talks had been unsuccessful and to seek other alternatives for a settlement.

The prime minister repeated the Turkish Cypriot view that the best solution would be the establishment of a bicommunal, bizonal, independent and nonaligned federal state in Cyprus. Mr Cagatay said that the Greek and Greek Cypriot side has been pursuing a policy based on the internationalization of the Cyprus problem with a view to eliminating the communal and ethnic rights of the Turkish Cypriot people.

Referring to the Greek Cypriot allegation that the Turkish Army was in Cyprus to partition the island, he said that the Greek Cypriot leader, Mr Kiprianou, had been making unfounded allegations in order to justify his proposal for the internationalization of the problem. The prime minister stressed that the Turkish Army was in Cyprus not to create the conditions for partitioning the island but to secure a lasting and peaceful solution. The Turkish Army, he said, has brought peace to our island and will stay here until peace has been guaranteed by a peaceful and lasting settlement.

Referring to the intercommunal talks again, Mr Cagatay said that they had not made much progress because of the biased attitude of the Greek Cypriot leadership and incitements by Athens. The prime minister recalled that the talks had not been successful and a lasting and peaceful solution had not been achieved even before 1974, when there was no Turkish military presence in Cyprus. He said that if the Greek Cypriot attitude at the talks had been well intentioned and consistent as well as (?if) effective steps had been taken for a peaceful and lasting solution, there would have been no junta-inspired coup in Cyprus aimed at achieving enosis and Turkey would not have been obliged to use, under international treaties, its right to intervene in Cyprus.

STRESS ON TWIN ASPECTS OF CYPRUS SOLUTION NEEDED

[Editorial: "The Cyprus Problem's Two Aspects"]

[Excerpts] For some time now all objective observers have seen that the intercommunal talks, and more generally the Cyprus problem, are essentially stagnated and immobile because of the Turkish intransigence and procrastination. The intercommunal talks, which are being held on the basis of the UN resolutions under the auspices of the UN secretary general and the presence of his special representative, are internationalized to a great degree. Therefore, despite the fact that the intercommunal negotiations are being held between the two communities and are concerned with finding a solution to the Cyprus problem's internal aspect, they have since long been linked with both the Cyprus problem's international aspect and the possibilities for its broader internationalization.

We should prove both to the Turkish Cypriot community and to international opinion and the United Nations that we have exerted every effort for the intercommunal dialogue's advancement and the achievement of an agreement. We should prove beyond any doubt that it is the intransigence of Ankara and Denktas that is deliberately impeding progress toward the Cyprus problem's solution; otherwise how can we guarantee greater international support and especially pressures on Turkey to compel it to make concessions and comply with UN resolutions?

Certain circles which have always underestimated the procedure of the intercommunal negotiations, even for the solution of the Cyprus problem's internal aspect by the Cypriots themselves, currently are seeking vindication by putting forth the timeliness of the proposal for an international conference and the Cyprus problem's greater internationalization. However, it is well known that the supporters of the intercommunal talks never underestimated the Cyprus problem's international aspect and internationalization. They did not underestimate the UN resolutions or cease the struggle for their implementation. The supporters of the intercommunal talks are those who worked indefatigably at the international level for the Cyprus problem's internationalization and for guaranteeing international support for Cyprus. Their stance has been constructive and positive in both the internal and the international field.

Without our persistence, patience, flexibility and frankness in the intercommunal talks, Ankara's intransigence and bad faith would not have been exposed and conditions would not have ripened for further internationalization and for new pressures on Ankara and its protectors, the NATO leadership.

We are surprised that after the serious experience that has been acquired in promoting the Cyprus problem in the international sector and through the United Nations, some people want to look lopsidedly at the Cyprus problem, forgetting that it has two aspects -- the internal and the international aspects -- that are linked and that negotiations for the promotion of a solution to one of the aspects, especially within the UN framework, cannot harm the promotion of a solution to the Cyprus problem in its entirety as an issue of violation of the Cyprus Republic's independence and sovereignty.

PAPANDREOU LAUDS BREZHNEV STATEMENT ON MISSILES

NC181943 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] The termination of the struggle for supremacy in nuclear armaments by the two blocs should be examined urgently not only for the sake of the future of Europe but for all mankind as well, and East and West must proceed with negotiations at the soonest possible moment in order to deescalate nuclear armaments. Indisputably, the zero option constitutes the basic goal of the negotiations. This statement was made tonight by Prime Minister Papandreou, who described as very positive the gesture by Soviet leader Brezhnev to put an end to the installation of new SS-20 missiles in the European area.

More analytically, the prime minister stated: It has been and still is the permanent stance of the PASOK government to press — not only for the future of Europe but also for mankind — for the termination of the arms race for supremacy in nuclear armaments by the two blocs. And it is also pressing both the East and the West to proceed at the soonest possible moment with substantive negotiations in order to deescalate nuclear arming and to establish a balance at continuously lower levels. Indisputably, the zero option constitutes for Europe — East and West alike — the basic goal of negotiations. But it is clear that the attainment of the zero option, that is the withdrawal of all nuclear weapons from Europe, requires long and difficult negotiations because it must include the independent nuclear capability of France and Britain as well as the advanced bases — from which nuclear attacks can be launched either against the East or the West.

For these reasons we consider President Brezhnev's gesture to put an end to the establishment of new SS-20 missiles in the European area as a very positive action to which, we hope, there will also be positive response from the West.

PORTUGAL'S BALSEMAO ARRIVES 18 MAR ON VISIT

NC181521 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Aris Xipolitidhis report]

[Text] Portuguese Prime Minister Pinto Balsamao is in Athens on a 2-day official visit, during which he will have talks with Prime Minister Papandreou dealing mainly with Portugal's entry into the EEC. Mr Balsemao arrived at Ellinikon Airport shortly after 1300. He was received by Prime Minister Papandreou, who said:

[Begin recording] We welcome Portuguese Prime Minister Balsemao and Mrs Balsemao, as well as the accompanying ministers, with great joy. Both our countries belong to southern Europe, and we face, to a great extent, common problems. We consider that close cooperation between the two countries will allow the south to play the role we anticipate in Europe. Welcome, Mr Prime Minister. [end recording]

The Portuguese prime minister stated: I am happy to be in Greece once again. This is the fourth time I have visited your country, but it is my first official visit.

Our countries have common experiences stemming from being in southern Europe. Our populations are almost equal; we belong to the same alliance; Portugal is a prospective member of the Common Market, while Greece has just become a member. Thus I believe our joint experiences in Europe — in connection with a joint view of world problems — are very positive, and I am certain this will make our cooperation even stronger and closer.

The Portuguese prime minister was also received at Ellinikon Airport by Deputy Minister to the Prime Minister Maroudhas; Deputy Foreign Minister on EEC Matters Varthis; Greek Ambassador to Lisbon Siekeris, and Portuguese Ambassador to Athens de Veiga. The two prime ministers will hold talks at the Foreign Ministry this afternoon. Mr Balsemao will be received by President Karamanlis tomorrow morning.

First Talks Session

NC182104 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] The Greek and Portuguese prime ministers, Papandreou and Balsemao, had their first meeting at Maximos Palace at 1800 today. At the same time, the delegations of the two countries met at the Foreign Ministry. Taking part in the meeting on the Greek side were Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos, Deputy Foreign Minister Varthis and Deputy Coordination Minister Pottakis. The two prime ministers later joined the meeting.

Replying to questions from Greek Radio and Television after the meeting, Prime Minister Papandreou made the following statement:

[Begin recording] I would like once again to express my particular pleasure in welcoming to our country the prime minister of Portugal and his ministerial aides. I have already had the opportunity this afternoon, during a private meeting, to converse with him on a series of problems, among which, naturally, a prominent position is held by Portugal's request for entrance into the European Community. I assured Prime Minister Balsemao that as far as our country is concerned, regardless of any problems we may be faced with in our own relations with the EC, we are prepared to support his application.

We see Portugal as a southern European country which will contribute to the common struggle within the framework of the community for dealing with the well known North-South problem. This is because the problems our country faces within the community are exactly the same, and the presence of other voices which will promote the interests of the peoples of southern Europe will, we believe, promote those radical changes which are imperative if Greece is to remain within the EC or whether the community itself is to survive.

I thank you once again for the opportunity you have given us to exchange views and thoughts on a series of useful issues. [end recording]

Portuguese Prime Minister Balsemao stated:

[Begin recording, in Portuguese with Greek summary] The Portuguese delegation is extremely pleased with the welcome accorded to it, and the Portuguese prime minister is specially pleased by his personal contact with Prime Minister Papandreou and the talks the delegation has had with the Greek delegation, and expresses thanks for the Greek interest and the understanding of the Greek Government for a speedy Portuguese entrance into the EC and over the fact that the Greek side agrees that Portugal must not be punished by a possible delay in the entrance of Spain.

The Portuguese prime minister also emphasized that relations between the two countries are excellent and continually progress, and that he hopes to see Prime Minister Papandreou visit Portugal in the near future. [end recording]

IGNORE PAPANDREOU IF NECESSARY FOR PEACE MOVE

NC190723 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 16 Mar 82 pp 1, 9

["Observation" column by Ugur Mumcu: "Papandreou's Dilemma"]

[Text] Honorable Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu, at his recent press conference, gave Pan-Hellenic Greek Prime Minister Papandreou the answer he deserved.

Ever since its inception, the Turkish Republic has devoted itself to the "peace at home, peace in the world" principle propounded by the great Ataturk and has tried to maintain friendly relations with its neighbors. Soon after the war of liberation Ataturk extended a friendly hand to the Greek people and sought to lay the foundations of Turkish-Greek friendship from the very first day.

This had a meaning: The Turkish people netered into a hand-to-hand fight with the Greek Army, which attempted to invade Anatolia as the "stooge" of capitalist imperialism, and inflicted the greatest defeat in its history on it. And then, forgetting the past completely, Turkey turned to the state which it fought and vanquished and offered friendship to it. Our Greek friends have not grasped adequately the significance of this noble gesture.

If the Pan-Hellenic Greek prime minister identifies himself with the word "socialism" inscribed on his party emblem and with the historic materialistic concept of socialism, he has to admit -- even if very sorrowfully -- that the Greek armed forces set foot on Anatolian soil in 1919 as a kind of "hired murderer" of the "monopoly capitalism" for the purpose of serving the "interests of the international bourgeoisie."

The Pan-Hellenic prime minister, who lived several years in the United States, the fortress of capitalism, and who possesses U.S. citizenship, is intelligent enough to understand the kind of roles the "international financial capital" deems fit for Greece today. Undoubtedly this former U.S. citizen is in a position to know who stands to gain from a not war in this region.

Those who know that Cypriot fascist Sampson acted on instructions from the Greek junta, particularly from General Ioannidhis, in his adventure in July 1974 have absolutely no difficulty in understanding why Turkey had to intervene in Cyprus. The aim of this intervention was to prevent mass killings on the island, and it was carried out in accordance with international agreements. Through this intervention, lunacies planned by fascist generals like Ioannidhis have been countered, and it was due to the Cyprus peace operation that the Greek junta was destroyed.

The Pan-Hellenic prime minister owes his present "career" and power largely to the Cyprus peace operation. Following this operation, the junta was toppled and the Greek people thus achieved a regime of freedom. This is unforgettable determinism.

Like all fascist and chauvinist governments that wish to camouflage their domestic failures, Papandreou may choose to create an artificial "outside danger" in order to cover up his failures in accordance with this traditional fascist tactic. If the Pan-Hellenic government, whose political power is inadequate for his own bourgeoisie, is planning to stage adventures again concerning Cyprus and the Aegean which it inherited from the Greek junta, we remind Papandreou and his people of the 1919 and 1974 events, which are full of moral lessons for them.

We desire peace. We favor a peace that will cover all our domestic and external problems.

We must push Papandreou aside and establish the internal peace which managed to exterminate the ruthless terror staged by multilateral instigations. We must reinforce national unity and establish and intensify a dialogue based on mutual tolerance among individuals and associations during this period of transition to democracy.

We are aware that the most undefeatable force is based on national unity and that this national unity gathers momentum and becomes deep-rooted in an atmosphere of peace.

The Greek Government decided to nationalize these agricultural lands, which have been worked by the Western Thrace Turks since Ottoman times, on the grounds that they are state property. The landowners went to court over it. A group of Turks living in Ilhanli, a village in Iskece in Western Thrace, said they are concerned about the course of the court case and began a hunger strike in the city. Our correspondent in Athens reports that the next session of the court is to be held next week.

ULUSU REMARKS SEEN SOFT ON WEST, HARD ON GREECE

NC160752 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 14 Mar 82 pp 1, 14

[Commentary by Prof Fahir Armaoglu: "Turkey's Determined Attitude"]

[Text] What Honorable Prime Minister Ulusu said at his press conference yesterday is focused on two issues, though in varying degrees. One, Europe's reaction to the development of the new Turkish democracy, and the other, Turkish-Greek relations. Let us stress immediately that the prime minister's statement reflects Turkey's determination on both issues. It appears that after our head of state's statement on 30 January, which demolished the stories by the Council of Europe, some of our West European allies began to bring their reactions -- which are in the form of intervention -- to the NATO conference table for the purpose of annoying Turkey there. Even in matters concerning Turkey's existence and survival, Turkey is encountering adverse attitudes from some of its allies, and this damages solidarity with NATO and shakes "the unity of partnership and interests." However, none of this will be able to prevent Turkey from marching resolutely on its way toward the future democracy it has determined for itself.

But we wish to point out that in expressing these complaints this time, the prime minister used extremely soft language. It is impossible not to discern a desire in this to preserve Turkey's relations with Western Europe within a soft framework. In contrast to this, the prime minister's expressions and statements about Greece have hardened substantially, completely contrary to the previous ones. While previous official statements by the Turkish Government used to describe Greece's attitude generally as disappointing, for the first time now it has been characterized as hostile [hasmane]. As is known, hostile is not as strong as acting with enmity [dusmanca]. Again, the prime minister used the term tension for the first time regarding Turkish-Greek relations. In other words, he meant Greece's "hostile" attitude has created "tension" in Turkish-Greek relations. This is the picture he has drawn.

Within this picture, he described the behavior of Greece toward the Turks in Western Thrace as a racist policy. Thus the prime minister expresses Turkey's attitude and determination as follows: "Turkey will not accept faits accomplis which may affect its rights and interests in the Aegean. If these rights and interests are attacked, Turkey will not hesitate to reciprocate in kind."

Two points are important in this statement: One, the prime minister has not defined the nature and limits of the "attack." Two, he said Turkey's reaction will be strong not only if its "rights" but also its "interests" are attacked. The nature and limit of the "rights" is known, but it is not possible to say the same thing for the "interests." Therefore a very grave warning is being given to Greece. From now on, "attack on interests" will be the basic element in Turkey's policy toward Greece. Finally, Turkey's offer and policy are clear: "Bilateral negotiations" in Turkish-Greek relations and "intercommunal talks" in the Cyprus dispute.

MINISTER HINTS AT POSSIBILITY OF ELECTIONS

PM181009 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 13 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] The Hague, 13 Mar -- If the cabinet does not arrive at the necessary decisions in the next few weeks in order to be able to present the spring finance bill, this can only lead to new Second Chamber elections. The same would be the case if the cabinet did not succeed this summer in drawing up the 1983 budget in good time. This is the view of Democrats '66 Economic Affairs Minister Terlous. In an interview with this newspaper he reacted negatively to the proposal, described as "not inconceivable" by Prime Minister van Agt, to give an extraparliamentary cabinet the country's problems to solve. "If this cabinet is not in a position to overcome the hurdles of the spring finance bill and the 1983 budget, we should not start trifling with cabinets of experts, Terlous said. "We would then have to ask the voters for their judgment. There are quite enough problems for us to be able to do this."

WHITEHALL WELCOMES REAGAN STATEMENT ON IRELAND

LD181512 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1432 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] Britain was not told in advance that Irish Premier Mr Charles Haughey proposed to ask for American intervention in the Northern Ireland problem, the Foreign Office said today. But President Reagan's statement indicating that the United States did not intend to intervene in Irish affairs was warmly welcomed today in Whitehall. Mr Haughey, in Washington for St Patrick's Day yesterday, urged the Reagan administration to support the unification of Ireland as a foreign policy objective.

His appeal was regarded as the strongest made for a united Ireland by an Irish Prime Minister visiting the United States.

A Foreign Office spokesman said: "We welcome Mr Reagan's statement on the occasion of St Patrick's Day -- the statement as a whole, not least his renewal of the proposition that continued violence even by a misguided few can only frustrate the desire for peace of the overwhelming majority of the entire community in Northern Ireland." Asked if the British Government regarded Mr Haughey's request as an unfriendly act, chief Foreign Office spokesman Mr Nicholas Fenn replies: "We have no comment."

[Report on KURIER interview with Interior Minister Lanc in Vienna on 16 March]

[Text] In an interview with KURIER, Interior Minister Lanc on Tuesday commented on what the Austrian People's Party [OeVP] called his "anti-American statements" [in the Austrian Nationalrat on 11 March]

Lanc says he would not have broached the whole issue in parliament had it not been for the OeVP criticism of Libyan revolution leader Colonel al-Qadhdhafi during the debate on the Austrian security situation.

Lanc: "I am very much an anglophile, and in the early 1970's I made a study trip to the United States. I was deeply impressed by this country. I admire this country's economic dynamics. Naturally, there are also negative things. But that is precisely what makes democracies so attractive, that one can also see these things."

But how is that compatible with what Lanc said in parliament? The interior minister replies: "There are certain phenomena on which I hold certain views; for example, on the policy of high interest rates. But I am against vilifying [verteufelung] the U.S. President, although his economic policy is not uncontroversial."

Lanc adds that he can understand that the United States feels the need "to demonstrate its presence in the Mediterranean" -- especially after the American hostage affair in Iran and the abortive attempt to liberate those hostages. Lanc: "This stimulates a demonstration of strength."

PAHR BACKS PROCESS AS 300TH MBFR SESSION OPENS

AU181046 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 18 Mar 82 p 2

[Text] "As the host country, Austria takes special interest in a productive course of the force reduction talks, and in this capacity it will continue to make available its good offices so as to ensure optimal conditions for the negotiations as far as atmosphere is concerned." This was stated by Foreign Minister Willibald Pahr on the occasion of the 300th session of the Vienna talks on mutual reduction of troops and armaments in Central Europe, scheduled for today. Participating in these negotiations, which started in October 1973, are 12 NATO countreis as well as 7 Warsaw Pact member countries.

The foreign minister went on to say that Austria also considers these negotiations an important contribution toward preventing a military conflict in Europe and its uncontrollable consequences. The patient dialogue between the military alliances existing in Europe, irrespective of direct results, leads to mutually becoming better acquainted and thus to a better understanding of the other side's viewpoints, misgivings and expectations, especially at a time when the dialogue in East-West relations has become difficult, and the sectors where arms control and disarmament are being negotiated have been reduced. The Vienna talks have an importance that must not be underrated. They are a demonstration of political reason vis-a-vis the European peoples, who are watching with the greatest attention and anxiety the question of preserving peace. Let us hope that the talks will soon also bring an effective contribution toward reducing the arms arsenal, Pahr said.

Plenary Session Ends

AU1S1551 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 19 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] The 300th plenary session of the Vienna negotiations on a troop reduction in Central Europe again ended on Thursday without the East and West using the opportunity of this anniversary for a rapprochement, let alone for proposing a toast with champagne to possible future progress.

At the plenary session the "compromise proposal" submitted by the Warsaw Pact countries on 18 February -- which, as seen by the East, in various sectors takes into consideration the Western positions -- again was an essential element in the speech of the Bulgarian People's Republic's chief delegate, Ambassador L. Shopov. In this context, a Western spokesman declared after the session that the NATO countries were studying the Eastern proposal and at this time were not in a position to take any stance on it.

In his speech, Shopov pointed out that the stipulations of the draft proposal on a limitation of the numerical strength of air force personnel was particularly important, "because the modern air forces possess a high mobility as well as the ability to carry out sudden attacks both with conventional and nuclear weapons over large distances from the place of their permanent deployment. The limitation of air forces would constitute a certain obstacle to the arms race, a factor to check the expansion of one of the most important force components."

A spokesman of the West again declared that progress at these talks was hardly conceivable unless agreement were reached on the controversial troop strength figures, as well as on accompanying control measures. The NATO countries continue to hold the view that the Warsaw Pact armed forces in Central Europe possess a numerical superiority of about 100,000 men.

PAHR PRESENTS 1981 FOREIGN POLICY REPORT

AU191412 [Editorial Report] Most Vienna dailies in German on 19 March cover Foreign Minister Pahr's Vienna press conference on 18 March on the occasion of the presentation of the 1981 foreign policy report.

According to WIENER ZEITUNG [pp 1-2] Pahr declared that Austria had "good relations with all countries" although there had been "some ups and downs" in relations with the CSSR, and the situation in South Tirol "continues to be unsatisfactory for Austria without, however, affecting Austrian relations with Italy." Pahr described Austrian relations with the GDR as "very, very good and capable of being expanded," and those with Yugoslavia as "marked by mutual trust and close cooperation." He announced his intention to visit the PRC in May and Vietnam "presumably this summer," and referred to Brezhnev's proposal on a missile moratorium as a "highly interesting contribution to the endeavors not only to check the arms race but also to achieve a balance at the lowest possible level." He added that "A mere unilateral freeze (of existing potentials) would not be enough, however," WIENER ZEITUNG reports.

DIE PRESSE (p 2) quotes Pahr as having said that an exchange of opinions on all unresolved questions with the CSSR was currently underway, and that the next step was going to be a visit to Vienna by CSSR Foreign Minister Chnoupek. A date for this visit had already been fixed but the visit had to be postponed because Chnoupek was taken ill. Chnoupek's talks in Vienna are to serve the preparation for the visit to Vienna by President Husak, Pahr said according to DIE PRESSE.

According to ARBEITER-ZEITUNG (p 5) Pahr declared in comment on the U.S. reaction to the Al-Qadhdhafi visit that his recent talks at the U.S. State Department had confirmed that the "relations between Austria and the United States are not at all impaired."

He added that "there had certainly been no U.S. protest against the visit -- Ambassador Klestil was not summoned to the Washington State Department, but he was merely asked to call. On this occasion he was informed of the U.S. astonishment at certain remarks made by Al-Qadhdhafi in Austria, and the matter was settled by a reference to Austria's good relations with the United States," Pahr said. Regarding the possibility of a U.S. visit by Chancellor Kreisky, Pahr declared that there were "good reasons for such an invitation to be issued this year." "Such a trip would be an expression of Austria's endeavors to maintain good relations with all states, especially with the state treaty signatory powers," Pahr said, according to the paper.

KURIER (p 3) cites Pahr as having said: "A trip by Kreisky to the United States would be necessary." The paper also highlights Pahr's statements on Austrian relations with Iran and Israel: Regarding Iran Pahr said that at present no moves were planned to improve relations with Khomeyni nor was any mediating action under consideration -- "But, if we consider it expedient, we will not hesitate to make this contribution too." Regarding relations with Israel, he said that Foreign Minister Shamir would be welcome in Austria, and added: "Then I would very much like to pay him a return visit."

KURIER QUESTIONS U.S. POLICY TOWARD LIBYA

AU181436 Vienna KURIER in German 18 Mar 82 p 3

[Heinz Nussbaumer commentary: "The Austrians and a U.S. Maneuver"]

[Text] The Austrians may continue not to trust the Libyan Al-Qadhdhafi completely. But there is one thing they did hear a few days ago with their own ears: How this Al-Qadhdhafi struggled in Vienna for a dialogue with the West, how he even made an offer to his main enemy America to settle the pending conflicts. The Austrians have read that their own Foreign Minister Pahr took this message with him to Washington last weekend -- including Al-Qadhdhafi's offer to take the question of his arbitrary expansion of Libyan territorial waters in the Gulf of Sidra to the International Court, so as to solve the problem peacefully.

Mr and Mrs Austria therefore perhaps listened a little more attentively than usual when the great America now, of all times, announced navy maneuvers in the controversial region. Perhaps some citizens have wondered if this muscle-flexing of the Reagan government at this particular time is necessary and prudent, and if the intransigent Libyan was not perhaps right to some degree when he criticized the U.S. President's policy as "childish" and "dangerous."

Some Austrians may also have felt some doubts about whether Reagan's experts are really experts in the handling of oriental hotheads, and whether America's most eager protagonists of a "policy of strength" actually want, or are able to achieve anything other than proving to themselves and to the world the correctness of their theory -- regardless of whether the outcome is good or harmful.

VOEST-ALPINE TO BUILD STEEL WORKS IN BELORUSSIA

AU191413 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1100 GMT 19 Mar 82

[Text] Voest Corporation Director General Apfalter has signed a contract in Moscow for the building of a compact metallurgical plant in Belorussia. The order is worth more than 9 billion schillings. For the Voest-Alpine Corporation this order, after the building of the first LD [Linz-Donawitz process] steel plant in the mid-1960's, constitutes the second biggest contract with the Soviet Union in that sector. In a construction time of 33 months the Austrian enterprise is to erect an electric steel plant with two high-performance furnaces with an annual capacity of 750,000 tons of raw steel. Several other processing plants such as continuous casting plants and a rod and wire rolling mill will be attached to the steel works.

LAMBSDORFF CONFERS WITH EAST GERMAN OFFICIALS

LD172126 Hamburg DPA in German 1910 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Excerpts] East Berlin, 17 Mar (DPA) -- Among the subjects discussed by Federal Economics Minister Count Otto Lambsdorff and Guenter Mittag, member of the SED Politburo in charge of economic questions, in a 90-minute talk today were the problems of the minimum currency exchange requirement and the interest-free overdraft facility (swing) in intra-German trade. After the talk Lambsdorff told journalists in East Berlin tonight: "We have talked about all problems which have a bearing on our relations." He refused to disclose any details, as he intends to continue his exchange of views with Mittag at a dinner and will talk to GDR Foreign Trade Minister Solle in Leipzig tomorrow.

Lambsdorff once again drew attention to the overall political connection, as repeatedly stressed by the Federal Government, between the question of the swing and the drastic increase in the minimum currency exchange requirement for Western visitors to the GDR introduced by the GDR in October 1980. Asked whether there were any signs of a GDR concession over the exchange requirement, Lambsdorff said that a final judgement on this will only be possible "24 hours from now." One should not talk about this matter too soon just because it is so important and affects many people.

Concerning the swing, whose current terms expire at the end of June, he hoped that agreement could be reached. It is his impression that the GDR is also interested in coming to an agreement.

Other subjects of the discussion, Lambsdorff said, included the project for electrifying the rail link between West Berlin and Lower Saxony and the prevention of water pollution.

Today's talk was attended on the FRG side by State Secretary Dieter von Wuerzen of the Economics Ministry; Franz Roesch, head of the Trustee Office for Industry and Trade, which handles trade with the GDR; and Klaus Boelling, head of the Federal Republic's permanent mission in East Berlin. The representatives of the GDR side included state secretary Gerhard Beil of the Foreign Trade Ministry.

FRG, GDR REPRESENTATIVES MEET IN EAST BERLIN

LD181530 Hamburg DPA in German 1404 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] East Berlin, 18 Mar (DPA) -- Twelve members of the Bavarian SPD Land Group in the Lower House met for the first time with deputies of the GDR People's Chamber for an official talk in East Berlin today. The chairman of the Land Group, Manfred Schmidt, described the 2-hour talk on questions of disarmament, environmental protection and stronger contacts between the two German states as "very successful." Both sides agreed that a war should never again be started from German soil and that there is no sensible alternative to the policy of detente and peaceful coexistence. The head of the five-member People's Chamber delegation, Prof Wolfgang Weichelt (SED), called the meeting business-like and constructive and said that a possible return invitation from the President of the Lower House would be accepted with pleasure. Up to now meetings between deputies of the Federal Republic and the GDR had taken place only in an international setting.

Schmidt said that despite differing political attitudes they should continue along the path of normalization between the two states. He welcomed the Soviet decision not to deploy any more SS-20 missiles west of the Urals and the offer to reduce the number of medium-range missiles as a "good signal" that ought not to be dismissed out of hand. Weichelt agreed with him and said it would be deplorable to dismiss the decision as a political trick.

Regarding the wish of the SPD Lower House deputies for a reduction in the minimum currency exchange amount for visits to the GDR and the elimination of other obstacles in mutual trade, Paul Eberle, People's Chamber deputy and member of the Foreign Policy Committee said that more contacts are desirable and that "fear of contacts simply does not exist," but the question of recognition of GDR citizenship is still open. This question is extremely important, even if it is not "the determining factor for everything."

He said that Chancellor Helmut Schmidt had spoken several times of "citizens of the Federal Republic" and of "citizens of the GDR." The permanent representations in Bonn and East Berlin "ought really to be embassies." Manfred Schmidt replied that practical matters could be settled, but the Basic Law and the Federal Constitutional Court set limits, however, "which we cannot overstep."

NIGERIAN PRESIDENT COURTS BONN INVESTORS

AB181249 Lagos NAN in English 1140 GMT 18 Mar 82

[By N. Mgbemena, W. Maida, and F. Adesegha]

[Text] Bonn, 18 Mar (NAN) -- President Shehu Shagari yesterday in Bonn reassured businessmen in the Federal Republic of Germany that there was no official policy to delay the repatriation of funds by foreign companies in Nigeria. He told representatives of the German Chambers of Commerce and Industry that his administration had tried to remove all obstacles in the way of genuine investors.

President Shagari, who is currently on a state visit to the Federal Republic of Germany, said that as far as Nigeria was concerned, there was a favorable climate for foreign investments, including full repatriation of profits and payment of technical services. Other incentives to attract foreign investors, the president said, included tax holiday for pioneer industries and accelerated depreciation of capital investment as well as exemption from import duty on raw materials.

President Shagari declared: "There is now room for any and every genuine investor and I invite you to these almost unlimited opportunities." Earlier, the president of the German Chambers of Commerce and Industry, Wolff Amerongen, said that his country had taken the second position among Nigeria's trading partners.

He, however, said that the preshipment inspection by Societe Generalle du Surveillance for goods meant for Nigeria was creating problems for memoers of the chambers. Mr Amerongen said that the preshipment inspection should be undertaken within a predetermined framework and not subject companies to "a great many checks before being awarded contracts."

Press Conference With Schmidt

AB191230 Lagos NAN in English 1150 GMT 19 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 19 Mar (NAN) -- Nigeria and the Federal Republic of Germany have agreed to increase the volume of trade between them and to expand various areas of bilateral cooperation.

President Shehu Shagari told newsmen after talks with the chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany, Helmut Schmidt, yesterday in Bonn that he had discussed the possibility of increased German participation in the Nigerian economy.

The president said that they also examined the possibility of German assistance to Nigeria in implementing some major development programs such as the liquified natural gas project and the development of coal reserves.

He said that the current 5-year development plan contained areas, such as agriculture, where German expertise and equipment could be of assistance in realizing "our national goals."

On policies, President Shagari said Nigeria and the Federal Republic of Germany had reiterated their abhorrence of apartheid in South Africa and their commitment to Namibia's independence on the basis of UN Resolution 435.

Answering a question, the president said that the federal government's budget would stand the current fluctuation in oil prices because Nigeria was credit-worthy and would turn to the international money market to borrow.

Speaking at the same news conference, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt said that his discussion with President Shagari was the continuation of the Nigerian-German dialogue begun four years ago. He said that his country considered Nigeria a vital link between the Western industrialized countries and African nations.

The chancellor said that his country would be willing to participate in the liquified natural gas project in Nigeria and to buy the gas if it was sold at competitive prices.

On German economic investment in South Africa, the chancellor said that the Federal Republic of Germany did not believe in economic sanctions as a weapon against apartheid.

STRAUSS REJECTS CRITICISM, DEFENDS POSITION

DW191203 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 2000 GMT 18 Mar 82

["Excerpts" from reporter Dieter Kronzucker interview with Franz Josef Strauss, CSU chairman and minister-president of Bavaria, in Washington 18 March -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] What do you say to the reproach that you are fanning prejudice here?

[Answer] This reproach is so idiotic that I must repeatedly ask myself whether the Bonn agitators are still living in this world or in a self-made dreamworld. Are they unaware of the U.S. press reaction during the past few months? Are they unaware of the cartoons? Are they unaware that every second, if not every, American is asking: What is really happening in Europe or in Germany? Do you want to abandon NATO, do you want to be Finlandized? It is almost frightening to hear such reproaches.

[Question] Are you on this trip more or less on your own, or do you want to also outline German positions here?

[Answer] I am here to represent the CDU/CSU position and to make it clear to the Americans that a minority, although a dangerous one, is pursuing a course away from America and into neutralization, and that the SPD is unfortunately very split over this matter.

You cant't ignore that fact -- and the people here have also noticed it -- that a lot of SPD regional conferences have supported a moratoroum a la Brezhnev or a nuclear-free zone, or have favored noncompliance with or abandonment of the December 1979 NATO decision.

I am not here to malign the Federal Government or the coalition parties. However, just describing the actual situation in Germany and the antogonisms between the government and the opposition -- and they really exist -- is criticism in itself.

[Question] You have been asked about this?

[Answer] Yes, and how.

Criticism Renewed

LD201616 Hamburg DPA in German 1437 GMT 20 Mar 82

[Text] Siegen, 20 Mar (DPA) -- Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP) has renewed his criticism of CSU Chairman Franz Josef Strauss' conduct in the United States. Addressing the regional party congress of the North Rhine Westphalian Liberals in Siegen on Saturday, the FDP national chairman said that Strauss had not gone to America to remove errors and misunderstandings, "but to denigrate his own country's government." To the applause of the 400 delegates, Genscher exclaimed "It's just not done. Any antagonism must be settled at home."

Genscher appealed to the citizens to make the basis of trust between the FRG and the United States visible during U.S. President Ronald Reagan's visit to Germany, and not to endanger it. The Federal foreign minister, who resolutely rejected a trade war between East and West, said there would be no sense for the Europeans to run about like a flock of chickens between the great powers. If Europe wants to be taken seriously it will have to be able to define its own security interests and get them jointly accepted within the alliance.

The foreign minister called Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev's announcement to not deploy any more medium-range missiles west of the Ural Mountains for the time being a "step whose significance we do not intend to underestimate." But, alas, it was "not more than a step." Once it is possible to remove a strong threat from both sides at the Geneva negotiations on medium-range missiles, this will not be a "full stop" but the start of a new chapter in the negotiations.

GENSCHER WANTS 'NO SOVIET MISSILES WHATEVER'

LD201200 Hamburg DPA in German 1120 GMT 20 Mar 82

[Text] Osnabrueck, 20 Mar (DPA) -- FDP Chairman and Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has clearly dissociated himself from SPD Presidium member Erhard Eppler concerning arms policy questions.

In an interview for NEUE OSNABRUECKER ZEITUNG (Saturday edition) the FDP chief accused the SPD politician of making light of the nuclear threat to our country. "Eppler is making light of the matter by seemingly asking for Soviet missiles only to be reduced: We, in contrast, want no Soviet missiles whatever," Genscher said. He referred to Eppler's statement which had been a positive reaction to Brezhnev's announcement to stop the deployment of more SS-20 missiles.

The FDP chief stressed that he "clearly opposes" Eppler "who advocates only that the West renounce medium-range missiles but who obviously does not mind if a considerable number of Soviet missiles continue to be targeted on us."

Bahr Welcomes Brezhnev Offer

LD201234 Hamburg DPA in German 1156 GMT 20 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 20 Mar (DPA) -- SPD disarmament expert Egon Bahr has once again positively reacted to the unilateral missile moratorium announced by Moscow and has stressed that this step could favorably influence the Geneva disarmament negotiations. The situation is now clear until the fall of 1983, when American medium-range missiles are to be deployed if the negotiations fail, and that "specific figures are available, not merely figures which constantly change in favor of the Soviet Union," Bahr said in an interview for Radio Free Berlin.

In this connection he advocated agreement to a moratorium within time limits between East and West if it transpires in the fall of 1983 that "a bit more time" is needed during the advanced stage of the Geneva negotiations.

In Bahr's view the unilateral moratorium announced by Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev does have a number of question marks attached to it. This includes the fact that Brezhnev spoke only about the European part of the Soviet Union. Hence it is conceivable for the deployment of SS-20 missiles to continue immediately behind the Urals from where they can still reach West Europe. Also, a unilateral act can also obviously be rescinded unilaterally. For that reason there is nothing to take the place of a true agreement by two sides, and he deems it proper for the Federal Government to insist on the substance of negotiations.

CDU LEADS IN 'PROVISIONAL' ELECTION RESULTS

LD212254 Hamburg DPA in German 2125 GMT 21 Mar 82

[Text] Hanover, 21 Mar (DPA) -- According to the Lower Saxony electoral officer, in the provisional final result the 171 seats of the new Lower Saxony Landtag will be distributed as follows:

CDU 87 (all direct)
SPD 63 (including 13 direct)
FDP 10
Greens 11

In the 1978 Landtag elections 99 of the 155 seats were direct. The CDU had 83 (61 direct), SPD 72 (38), FDP and Greens were not represented.

'DEMOCRATIC SOCIALISTS' PARTY TO BE ESTABLISHED

LD201910 Hamburg DPA in German 1713 GMT 20 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Recklinghausen, 20 Mar (DPA) -- Former SPD members and other leftists in Recklinghausen today decided to set up a new party 'left of the SPD' to be called 'Democratic Socialists' [Demokratische Sozialisten].

The meeting in Recklinghausen was opened by Bundestag Deputy Manfred Coppik, who recently resigned from the SPD. He fiercely attacked what he called the 'supposedly social-liberal' government in Bonn and said: "We are no longer prepared to live without political resistance in a country where the government is pursuing an active arms build-up." He called for a solid demonstration during the NATO meeting and Reagan's visit to Bonn to show that the people in the FRG want an alternative policy.

Uta Ranke-Heinemann, the Essen professor of theology and daughter of the late Federal president, accused the SPD of being more 'degenerate' than the CDU. While CDU supporters might still believe in the missile policy, she said, many SPD members know that their party's "clamor for arms" is wrong. "They are selling the truth for a mess of pottage."

In their manifesto, the Democratic Socialists seek partnership and cooperation with all 'left and progressive forces' in trade unions, churches, the peace movement and the women's movement. Regional meetings are to be held shortly in all states of the Federal Republic.

TECHNICAL REASONS POSTPONE 'ARIANE' LAUNCHING

PA190151 Madrid EFE in Spanish 1114 GMT 17 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 17 Mar (EFE) -- The fourth launching of the European rocket "Ariane" has been postponed for technical reasons. This rocket is used to put satellites into geostationary orbit.

Those who are responsible for the project said today in Paris that the launching was planned for 23 April from the Kourou Base, French Guiana, site of the "Ariane's" three previous experimental launchings.

According to the European Space Agency, the delay in the launching is due to the need for further research of the "Marecs-8" satellite that the "Ariane" must put into geostationary orbit at an altitude of 36,000 km.

Ten European countries, including Spain, take part in this space program, which is intended to provide Europe with its own means for launching and orbiting satellites.

LE MATIN ON REVIVAL OF NEUTRON BOMB DEBATE

PM181507 Paris LE MATIN in French 4 Mar 82 p 2

[Editorial: "The Logic of Deterrence"]

[Text] Everything seems to indicate that the government is preparing to make a decision to produce the neutron bomb. The magazine DEFENSE NATIONALE devotes its March issue to that subject, and the editorial written by the publication's editor leaves little doubt about the government's intentions: At the French level, in taking the neutron weapon into consideration there is reason to think that it will be very important not to be seen by the public to be calling into question our concept of deterrence."

Of course, DEFENSE NATIONALE is an independent monthly; nonetheless there is reason to think that such an important article on such a burning issue received the approval of [Defense Minister] Charles Hernu, the minister concerned, especially since several recent Defense Council meetings -- which are held at the Elysee under Francois Mitterrand's direct authority -- apparently discussed the neutron bomb.

The PS had not officially established its doctrine on the subject. Francois Mitterrand and the majority group took a middle position, thinking that it was appropriate to master the neutron technology, to continue research without, however, deciding to deploy the weapon. Jean-Pierre Chevenement and the leaders of the Center of Socialist Studies, Research and Education at the time thought, however, that the neutron bomb was inconsistent with the deterrence doctrine and that it was likely to commit France to a "strategy of tension." The Rocardian faction, however, had unambiguously demonstrated its support for that type of bomb. Back in June 1980 Jean-Pierre Cot stated: "France cannot deprive itself of a weapon which could possibly be significant in the future."

As for the PCF, although it has observed a noteworthy silence on this question for months, it reaffirmed its position during its 24th congress: "It is urgent that decisive steps be taken toward disarmament....the neutron bomb must be banned in all countries," Georges Marchais stated.

Indeed the production of the neutron bomb followed the logic of a process started in 1975 by Valery Giscard d'Estaing. Back at that time the former president of the republic had moved away from classical deterrence based on the postulate of not using nuclear weapons. The foundation of deterrence is generalized war or peace, hence "all or nothing."

In other words the neutron bomb -- which makes it possible to destroy human beings without seriously damaging industrial installations or buildings -- introduces the possibility of a graduated war into this "all or nothing" concept. It makes is possible to use nuclear technology without necessarily sparking off the apocalypse.

Consequently, deciding to produce it is a choice which affects the very future of deterrence; hitherto the constant deterrence dialogue was regarded as the best guarantee of our security and of peace. Can that dialogue be shaken without running the risk of upsetting the balance of terror? Moreover in his face-to-face debate with Valery Giscard d'Estaing in May 1981, while asserting that he was not favorably disposed toward the neutron bomb, Francois Mitterrand has specified that the weapon would require a change of strategy.

LE MONDE VIEWS TURN IN FRENCH-TUNISIAN RELATIONS

PM181539 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Mar 82 p 4

[Michel Deure dispatch: "Tunisia: Press Regrets That Mauroy's Tunis Visit Failed To Fulfill Promises"]

[Text] Tunis -- French-Tunisian relations are at present experiencing a phase of disenchantment which contrasts with the "exemplary and special" character which they have been acknowledged to display for years. Apart from matters concerning economic, social and cultural cooperation and the traditional exchange of political viewpoints, the French-Tunisian mixed Grand Commission, which meets Wednesday 17 March in Paris under the chairmanship of the two foreign ministers, should therefore concern itself primarily with remedying an atmosphere which paradoxically deteriorated somewhat following [French premier] Pierre Mauroy's Tunis visit last month, though Tunisian leaders have refrained from making any public comments on it.

The tone of the press is unmistakable: "When one considers that the French prime minister had no sooner arrived on his official visit to Tunisia than he received opponents of the present regime and that the French interlocutors' concerns at the official meetings centered almost entirely on such important matters as the second channel (France should be involved in the introduction of a second, basically French-speaking, channel on Tunisian television -- LE MONDE editor's note); 'the French People's Fondouk' (a French cultural center is to be established in one of the old Medina buildings called 'the French People's Fondouk,' the first French public building in Tunisia since the 18th century -- LE MONDE editor's note); and the Carnot School (Tunis' Carnot School is to be transformed into a bilingual Tunisian school at the start of the 1983 academic year), one is entitled to ask oneself certain questions....!" This was stated Friday [12 March] by the government paper LA PRESSE. The article was reprinted 3 days later by the Destourian Socialist Party weekly DIALOGUE.

The Tunisians had already been disagreeably surprised by the fact that Mr Mauroy brought with him only the ministers of leisure and national solidarity (Alain Savary, who was also a member of the party, was viewed primarily as a personal friend of Mr Bourguiba's) despite the fact that they were expecting in-depth discussions on the prospects for French participation in their development activities.

Though all the documents concerned had long been prepared on both sides and only needed a political decision for specific action to be ensured, the talks were essentially restricted to declarations of intent.

The bitterness increased again when the delegation accompanying Tunisian Prime Minister Mohamed Mzali on his recent visit to the Gulf learned in Doha that two French treasury experts had preceded them there to try to persuade Qatar to reduce the capital of the future Tunisian-French-Qatari investment bank, for whose creation Mr Mauroy nevertheless confirmed his agreement in Tunis. The Tunisian press gave extensive coverage to this fact, which it judges discourteous and which Paris has not denied.

Be that as it may, on 3 March in Doha Tunis and Qatar pledged Fr700 million to the bank thus created, still leaving the way open to French participation, expected to be Fr300 million. "But," financial circles in Tunis point out, "even if it is not France, we will easily find a third partner." This observation reflects Tunisia's desire to dissociate itself considerably from traditional economic partners who do not always come up to its expectations (as evinced by the important agreements Mr Mzali has just signed in the Gulf country) or at least to treat them all equally so as to exploit the advantages of competition, as the results of the Tunisian economy minister's recent FRG visit could soon demonstrate.

This new strategy, moreover, is encouraged by the newspapers, both opposition and otherwise. Thus AS-SABAH stated recently that the time had come "for the withdrawal of all priority from relations with Europe and more particularly with France, since attempts in this direction over the past two decades to promote intensive cooperation with those countries have revealed the narrowness of the horizons of that cooperation and its restriction to the exclusive interests of the advanced and wealthy states."

A few days later the same paper urged Tunisia to "progress from the stage of monopolization imposed by the French language...to a real openness to the various cultures, and primarily to British culture."

Mr Mitterrand's recent visit to Israel will not stem these feelings. Even if they adopt moderate stances, the Tunisians, who host the headquarters of the Arab League in their capital, are nevertheless very sensitive to anything to do with the Near East conflict. The newspaper LA PRESSE has nevertheless revealed that the Tunisian media have been less aggressive than the media of other Arab states and pointed out that Mr Mzali even made a point, on his visit to the Gulf, to mention the "good intentions displayed by Mr Mitterrand with regard to the Palestinians" at their meeting in Paris. He also said, not without regret, with regard to the stagnation in French-Tunisian cooperation: "Our French partners have not pulled their weight."

PARLIAMENT OKAYS SINAI FORCE; COMMUNISTS OPPOSE

[Excerpts] Rome, 22 Mar (ANSA) -- Italy's participation in the Multilateral Peacekeeping Force in the Sinai was given a green light at the weekend by joint sessions of the Foreign Affairs and Defense commissions in the Senate and in the House. The Italian decision to join ten other nations in the MLF, created for the final phase of the Israeli evacuation of the Sinai Peninsula slated for April 25, was outlined in the document approved by the joint session of the Senate commissions, in a meeting the Communist members chose not to attend.

The Communist Party decision to not endorse the resolution was based on considerations connected to international law and those of a political nature, senators from the opposition party sitting on the commissions explained. In their statement, these Communist senators said that Italian participation in the multilateral force implies "a limitation on sovereignty by putting Italian armed forces under the command of foreign officers outside the conditions provided for by Italian participation in the United Nations and NATO."

Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio addressed the two joint sessions on the duties of the MLF and the mission of the Italian contingent. The foreign minister, Emilio Colombo, told the Senate and House commissions that "the overwhelming majority" of the Arab states understand the significance of the European presence in the region," and recalled the "total understanding" of the issues voiced by Faruq Qaddumi, the Palestine Liberation Organization foreign relations spokesman on visit to Rome since last Tuesday.

Referring again to Italian participationin the MLF alongside three other European Community nations, France, Great Britain and the Netherlands, Colombo noted that Israel "has, for the time being, at least, been forced to renounce its plans" to oppose the Europeans' move into the Sinai force. The foreign minister also disclosed his intention to visit Israel in mid-May.

PLO'S QUADDUMI 'PLEASED' WITH TALKS IN ROME

AU191950 Rome ANSA in English 1940 GMT 19 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 19 Mar (ANSA) -- The Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) had "hoped for more" from the Rome government but was nonetheless pleased with the progress Italy has made in its views about the Palestinian cause, PLO spokesman Faruq Qaddumi said today while assessing his talks with Italian officials in Rome this week. What the organization really hoped for, Qaddumi told a press conference, was full diplomatic recognition from the Rome government.

According to the PLO foreign relations chief, the organization's president, Yasir 'Arafat, will visit Italy only after this country has fully recognized the rights of the Palestinian people and the liberation organization.

Qaddumi voiced disappointment that Pope John Paul II did not grant him an audience, saying "We waited in vain for a response" from the Catholic Church leader. "It seems as though the Holy See thinks it has to put a meeting off indefinitely," he complained, saying that the PLO still hoped the pope will grant an audience to one of its spokesman just like he did with [the] Israeli foreign minister to "serve the cause of peace."

The PLO envoy singled out three points in the communique issued by the Rome government after his meeting with Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo Wednesday showing the "progress" Italy has made. First there was an unprecedented reference to the PLO's office in Rome as an "information and liaison office," the name the office goes by. He also liked the fact that the Foreign Ministry described the PLO as an organization "largely representative of the Palestinian people" in the official statement. The third reference was to the 1974 Arab summit in Rabat, where the PLO was recognized by the Arab World as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

In his remarks to reporters here today, Qaddumi contrasted the Rome government's "progress" with the "retreat" the European Ten's Middle East policy was showing in deference to American pressures. The multinational peace-keeping force which will be patrolling the Sinai with Italian help after Israel pulls out of the peninsula was said to stem from an idea that the late Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat had about associating himself with the NATO alliance. "Our fear," Qaddumi said, "is that the stationing of the MPF will serve to cover the United States' growing military presence in the Sinai and the Middle East."

Qaddumi told reporters today that Italian Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni had assured him during their meetings this week that neither police nor secret service investigators had come up with any evidence to show links between the PLO and terrorist organizations operating in Italy. The PLO spokesman said he had no notion of the whereabouts of Graziella de Paolo and Italo Toni, two journalists who disappeared from sight over a year and a half ago in Lebanon. "The two were friends of the Palestinian cause and we are most interested in finding them," he told the press conference, adding that the PLO had left no stone unturned in its search for the missing journalists and its contacts with authorities and political parties.

COMMUNISTS ADMIT ERROR IN CIRILLO CASE ARTICLE

AU220910 Rome ANSA in English 0835 GMT 22 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 22 Mar (ANSA) -- Communist Party allegations that two Christian Democrat members of government bargained with an imprisoned underworld boss for the release of a Christian Democrat kidnap victim last summer are on the agenda for debate in the lower house tomorrow. At the weekend, a note released by the Communist Party headquarters described the accusations as resulting from "an error in evaluation."

The statement issued by the opposition mainstay also declared, "The communists do not hesitate to recognize (the mistake) for public opinion." Charges and countercharges began flying between Italy's big two parties Wednesday with the publication in the Communist Daily, L'UNITA, of charges that Culture Minister Vincenzo Scotti and Merchant Marine Under Secretary Francesco Patriarca opened a parlay with convicted crime boss Raffaele Cutolo for the release of a Christian Democrat assemblyman for the southern Campania region, Ciro Cirillo, from his Red Brigade abductors. Cirillo was kidnapped by terrorists April 27 last year and freed on the following July 24.

The Communist allegations that the pair of Christian Democrats negotiated with Cutolo, serving a life sentence on homicide convictions in a maximum security institution in north-central Italy, were based on a document described as having originated in the Interior Ministry. "It now turns out that the documents, and other factors which appeared to support them, do not correspond, in whole or in part, to the truth," the opposition party admitted in its note.

The party also referred to the possibility that it may have been the victim of a plant or an unwilling part of a coverup attempt: "We cannot exclude the idea of a plot against the Communist Party, aimed at hiding the truth." The party note concluded by urging a full judiciary probe of the entire affair so that "there will be no propaganda campaign mounted to erase the need to cast light into the dark corners of the Cirillo case and on all aspects of the disturbing prospect of bargaining with brigade terrorists."

Another note released by the party leadership at the weekend pointed out that the resignations tendered over the incident by the managing editor of L'UNITA, Claudio Petruccioli, and his deputy were not ordered by the Secretariat. In another development, the reporter who wrote the original story, Marina Maresca, has been arrested and charged with perjury and failure to disclose her source or sources.

DC-PCI Break

AU191104 Rome ANSA in English 0815 GMT 19 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Rome, 19 Mar (ANSA) -- Premier Giovanni Spadolini holds another round of talks here today with the leaders of Italy's major trade union organizations in an effort to bring down the cost of labor in the country. But the political issue grabbing the nation's attention at present is the dispute, the worst in recent memory, between the Christian Democrats (DC) and the Communists (PCI), the two biggest parties in Italy, over a series of articles published in recent days in the PCI newspaper, L'UNITA'.

According to the Communist daily, two Christian Democrat members of the present government negotiated with an imprisoned crime boss for the release of their fellow party member Ciro Cirillo from the hands of the Red Brigades last spring. The paper printed a document, said to come from the Interior Ministry, describing a visit Culture Minister Vincenzo Scotti and Merchant Marine Under Secretary Francesco Patriarca allegedly paid to crime boss Raffaele Cutolo in the maximum security jail at Ascoli Piceno, where he is serving a life term, on March 30, 1981.

The implication was that the two government officials negotiated the release of Cirillo, the urban planning councilman in the Campania regional government kidnapped March 29 and released in July. Cutolo is the boss of Neapolitan Camorra, the local equivalent of the Sicilian mafia. He is believed to have offered [as received] ransom of over a million dollars for Cirillo's release.

The document published Wednesday in L'UNITA' was dismissed as fake by Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni and confiscated by the magistrates in Naples investigating the Cirillo kidnap and Red Brigades activity in general in and around the southern Italian port city.

Scotti and Patriarca have sued the newspaper for libel and the Culture Ministry announced Thursday that the 750,000 dollars demanded in damages will be turned over to the relatives of terrorism victims.

The first major after-effect of the political squabble was the announcement yesterday that the Christian Democrats will withdraw the abstention support they have been offering Naples' Communist Mayor Maurizio Valenzi at city hall. Valenzi, who complained Thursday that the "affair broke out at the wrong time," confirmed that Scotti was with him in Naples until noon on the day the culture minister was said to have visited the Ascoli Piceno jail. Now the Christian Democrats have resumed their campaign against all the leftist administrations in power in many of Italy's big cities.

For its part, L'UNITA' insisted today that it was its editorial duty to help expose "the mysteries" of Italian political affairs. But the articles published in the paper, it stressed, do not necessarily reflect the policies of the Italian Communist Party.

POPE ASKS PRAYERS OF WORLD FOR CHURCH IN CHINA

LD211242 Vatican City in Italian to Italy 1100 GMT 21 Mar 82

["Excerpt" of address by Pope John Paul II in St Peter's Square 21 March -- recorded]

[Excerpt] Dearest brothers and sisters, last January I sent a letter to bishops throughout the world calling on the Catholic communities to pray for and with the church in China. In St Peter's Basilica this morning, we offered the sacrifice of the Eucharist for this intention which is so close to everyone's heart. Meeting for the Angelus today, as we do every Sunday, let us entrust our prayers to the powerful intercession of the most holy Mary, who is invoked with fervor and with so much faith by the Chinese faithful under the name of Queen of China. Let us pray to the mother of God and our mother so that she may obtain from divine mercy the necessary gifts, enlightenment and spiritual strength so that, as I wrote in the above-mentioned letter, the church in China may be provided with the necessary conditions to enjoy visible union with the church of Jesus Christ, which is one, holy, catholic and apostolic.

Dear brothers and sisters in China, we are all at one with you in our thoughts, in our affections and above all in our prayers. Through the prayers of the whole church, though you may be far away, you never cease to be in the very heart of our great Catholic family in which Christ is ceaselessly present, as he himself promised. His name (?liberates). I say that from the bottom of my heart. I am thus delighted to restate my affections and high esteem for all the Chinese people, to whom we send sincere wishes for prosperity, progress and peace.

BUFALINI ONLY PCI LEADER IN FAVOR WITH MOSCOW

PM191449 Rome L'ESPRESSO in Italian 14 Mar 82 p 14

[Unattributed report under "Confidential" rubric: "Moscow Spares Only Bufalini"]

[Text] Moscow -- The PCI leader with whom the Soviets are willing to resume a dialogue is Paolo Bufalini. This has been disclosed in Moscow by the officials who most closely follow relations with the PCI. "We are in favor of dialogue," they maintain, "but not with all representatives of the PCI." The Italian leaders considered unworthy even of a "dialogue" are the ones cited by PRAVDA and KOMMUNIST: Ingrao, Napolitano, Reichlin and Macaluso. "It is still possible to talk with Bufalini, however." The reason for the discrimination is this: For days on end Radio Free Europe in Russian cited whole sections from statements by the four PCI leaders, which classified them as anti-Soviet in the eyes of the public at large. As for the almost unanimous majority gained by Berlinguer at the Central Committee plenum, the Soviets do not seem surprised. "Since it is a Soviet-type party," they say somewhat derisively, "it was a foregone conclusion that the apparatus and the nomenklatura would follow the secretary." The Russians' only disappointment was [Directorate member] Gianni Cervetti, whom they regard as virtually one of their own sons following his education of the CPSU party school.

L'UNITA TEXT OF 1981 CPSU POLAND LETTER TO PCI

PM221055 Venice L'UNITA in Italian 17 Mar 82 p 14

[Text of ADN-KRONOS version of CPSU Central Committee December 1981 letter to PCI Central Committee: "Text of CPSU Central Committee Letter to PCI Central Committee Released"]

[Text] [L'UNITA introduction] We publish below the full text of the CPSU Central Committee letter as released by ADN-KRONOS. This version, compared to the one in the PCI's possession, displays several inaccuracies and is in parts incomplete or imprecise. [end introduction]

Comrades, the CPSU Central Committee has been informed of the statements made by PCI leaders in connection with the introduction of martial law in Poland (the interview granted by Enrico Berlinguer to Italian television, the speeches delivered by Pietro Ingrao and the interview granted by Giorgio Napolitano to the "bourgeois" newspaper IL MESSAGERO).

First, the CPSU Central Committee draws the PCI Central Committee's attention to the fact that the insinuations concerning "the CPSU leadership group" as expressed particularly by Giorgio Napolitano are unfounded. Such statements violate the rules of relations between communist parties and seriously harm CPSU-PCI relations.

Giorgio Napolitano refers to so-called "pressures exerted by the Soviet Union's leadership group" on Poland and to an unclear Soviet stance on the process of the democratization of life in Poland. All this is pure fabrication.

It is well known and, above all, it has been repeatedly confirmed by the Polish leadership group [classe dirigente] that what has happened in that country is solely and exclusively Poland's concern. The Soviet Union considers these events from precisely such a viewpoint. This concept has been stressed in authoritative statements by TASS, and the Italian comrades are undoubtedly acquainted with them.

Representatives of the Polish leadership group, at a meeting with journalists on 21 December 1981, particularly stressed the various arbitrary references made in Western circles to hypothetical "Soviet pressure" or "Soviet interference," confirming that this was nothing but a big lie.

The fact is that the PCI leaders fail entirely to take into account the position of the party concerned -- the Polish party -- in connection with such an important issue, preferring to follow in the footsteps of imperialist propaganda.

First, U.S. propaganda has no proof of past or present forms of interference by the Soviet Union in the internal affairs of the Polish People's Republic. U.S. Secretary of Defense Weinberger has categorically declared that he has no proof, but that he is "certain" that such interference does in fact exist.

President Reagan has gone even further, stating that "no communist party can take any action without the CPSU's approval." The Italian comrades know very well that such a statement is untrue.

Equally untrue is the idea that the CPSU is opposed to a further development of socialist democracy in this or that country, that it opposes this or that progressive-type change that could occur in those countries. Since the CPSU believes that every measure and change must be considered an internal affair of the socialist countries and their people, it has always worked to support those initiatives aimed at improving socialist democracy and to give its support in involving the masses in administrative matters, within respect for the opinions and interests of the working class. This was clearly confirmed by Comrade L.I. Brezhnev at the 26th CPSU Congress.

With regard to the actual substance of the events in Poland, we have always considered it opportune to follow the assessment of them provided to us by the Polish comrades themselves. There is no need to add that this assessment is well known to the PCI's leadership group.

Nevertheless, the PCI leaders continue to believe that the events in Poland are nothing short of a military coup d'etat that has halted, if not indeed imparted a retrograde thrust to, the development of socialism in Poland. In fact the situation is entirely different.

Martial law in Poland was decided on primarily and legitimately by the Polish party, on account of that country's conditions.

The Military Council for National Salvation is headed by the first secretary of the Polish Communist Party Central Committee, Prime Minister Jaruzelski, who was elected to the post under democratic laws. The decree introducing martial law was issued in accordance with the laws of constitutional procedure by the State Council of the Polish People's Republic, in other words, by that country's highest government body. Therefore it was not a "coup d'etat" but an action carried out by legitimate Polish bodies in accordance with the rights conferred on them by the constitution.

What is the purpose of martial law in Poland?

This law was introduced precisely to save the social system desired by that country's people, to guarantee and strengthen the existence of the socialist order, to avert the threat of a revolutionary coup d'etat desired by internal forces opposed to the state backed by external reactionaries, primarily the Americans. This coup d'etat was scheduled for the end of December 1981. In fact it was a matter of protecting socialism in Poland. It was a matter of preserving and strengthening socialism and therefore the interests of its people, of the working class, and this is why the Polish Communist Party leaders took the decision to introduce martial law. In other words, the measures adopted by the Polish leadership group were in fact the only possible thing to do to avoid bloodshed, a national disaster, and to prevent Poland from falling into the imperialists' hands.

The PCI leadership group should remember the appeals issued by W. Jaruzelski to the Polish people and the statements made by the Military Council for Poland's National Salvation. Such statements clearly show that the measures taken will remain in force only temporarily. They do not signify any changes in the institutions in Poland, the banning or the end of legal organizations. The Polish leaders have stressed repeatedly following the introduction of martial law that the question of a return to the old order does not arise at all and that the democratization of public life based on socialism will continue.

According to information from Poland, which should be known to the Italian comrades too, since the Polish news agencies give it ample coverage, the situation in the country as a whole is improving. Life and work are returning to normal and supplies to the people of food and essential commodities are being distributed in greater quantities. The Polish people intelligently accept the emergency measures that have been adopted.

One would have thought that the Italian Communists, like the communists of other parties, would have welcomed the fact that the plans of imperialist agencies concerning a socialist country have been thwarted, that a blow has been dealt to the counterrevolutionary plans and that a fratricidal war has been averted. But the reactions manifested by the PCI demonstrate precisely the opposite.

All the latest statements released by the PCI leaders are permeated by violent criticisms of the Polish leadership group, the Polish Communists and, frankly, the Soviet Union too.

These statements are not very different from the ones issued by the bourgeois press with regard to Poland, and by all kinds of reactionaries.

There is another aspect to the issue that must not be ignored. If the antisocialist reactionary forces, which have never concealed their intentions, had succeeded in establishing a capitalist system in Poland, thus achieving their objective, the matter would not have concerned the Polish people's tragedy alone. Indeed, the consequences of such a tragic occurrence would have assumed characteristics on the international plane. There would have been a serious exacerbation of the military threat in Europe, first and foremost.

But the present course of events deals a blow to the aggressive forces' plans, prevents a further deterioration of the international situation and helps to strengthen peace both in Europe and throughout the world. You will doubtless be aware of the antisocialist campaign desired by the most aggressive and imperialist U.S. circles. President Reagan is trying to dictate the law to Poland, coarsely but with impunity; he is trying to impose a particular system on its people and its government. This stance is backed by the same people who joyfully accepted the introduction of martial law in Chile and who believed that the fascist coup d'etat that took place in that country was in fact a good thing. They are the same forces that are openly interfering in the internal affairs of dozens of others countries and that justify it as being for the good of mankind. It is the same forces that are organizing mass killings of patriots in El Salvador and in other countries. It can therefore be stated without a shadow of a doubt that the present campaign of international reaction is simply a confirmation of its failure. Essentially it amounts to bitter regrets that the antisocialist coup d'etat in Poland has failed completely.

The attitude taken by the PCI leader only plays into the hands of this reactionary campaign. Indeed, whom do you support in Poland? Solely and exclusively the forces whose aim was to eliminate socialism and to give the go-ahead to a civil war. Is all this not enough to make you reflect? In 1981 the PCI's press stressed several times that the Polish crisis had to be resolved by the Poles themselves. We too are of the same opinion. So why have you now adopted a hostile stance toward the Polish comrades, who are committed to pursuing this line?

And are your demands that the measures adopted by the Polish leadership class be revoked not similar to the ones made by America's Eagleburger on his recent visit to Italy and to those of the Italian leaders who support the U.S. stance?

In essence the statements made by the Italian authorities are nothing but an incitement to the Polish antisocialist forces to combat the Polish leadership group and Poland itself.

As far as the actions taken by the Military Council for National Salvation are concerned, every impartial observer acknowledges that they are designed in the interests of the working class, that they are working for Poland's economic independence so as to extricate the country from the present difficult economic situation. What the Polish leadership group is doing is strengthening socialism and the aim of peace and thus dealing with the Polish people's most pressing needs and interests.

The attempts to anathematize Poland and its leadership group and the excommunication attempts, as they emerge in particular from your party's documents, move in entirely the opposite direction to these objectives. If there is now a desire to show concern for socialist Poland and for the democratic future of its people, we resolutely believe that it is necessary actively to support the country's socialist forces, primarily the Polish Workers Party and its leadership group.

FOREIGN MINISTRY NOTE MARKS AFGHANISTAN DAY

AU220854 Rome ANSA in English 0808 GMT 22 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 22 Mar (ANSA) -- The Italian Government intends to "persevere in efforts aimed at a political solution for the (Afghan) crisis based on the withdrawal of Soviet troops from the country and the Afghan people's right to self-determination," a Foreign Ministry note released Sunday to mark the International Day of Afghanistan declared. The communique issued for the occasion, observed throughout the European Economic Community and in Japan and the United States, opened with a reference to the "struggle the Afghan people have been conducting for over two years against Soviet military occupation," following the December 1979 invasion of the neighboring country.

The current state of affairs for the nation, the ministry note continued, contains "no prospects for positive development." After indicating the negative repercussions the situation in Afghanistan has had on East-West detente, the document affirmed that these relations "have suffered new blows from the declaration of a state of siege in Poland last December." Soviet acts in Afghanistan have led directly to "the violation of the identity of a Third World country, once free, non-aligned and neutral," according to the Italian Foreign Ministry.

Events in this country, linked with developments in Poland -- provoked by "hidden interference" -- represent a "serious threat to peace and stability," the note insisted. The note said that "in both cases, the associated factors of tension are serious because of the systematic violations of international pacts which have been freely subscribed to, such as the Universal Declaration of the Rights of Man and the Helsinki Final Act, violating through forms of violence condemned by Italy wherever they are manifested."

The document concluded with the statement that, "The Italian Government will continue to work for improving the tenor of life of the three million Afghan refugees through participation in the aid granted by the European Community and through direct contributions which will total ten billion lire this year," a sum equal to 7.7 million dollars.

PCP ANGRY OVER EAST BLOC EMBASSY REDUCTIONS

PM220853 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 11 Mar 82 p 2

[Apparent text of PCP Information and Propaganda Section 5 March communique: "Act of Subordination to Imperialism"]

[Text] 1. The "Democratic Alliance" government's decision to reduce the number of USSR, GDR and Polish People's Republic diplomats in Portugal demonstrates again that Portuguese foreign policy has been transformed into an instrument of the provocative operations and aggressive policy of the Reagan administration and of NATO's most militarist circles.

2. In fact only contempt for the constitution's imperatives regarding foreign policy, only a stance of subordination to U.S. imperialism's plans and orders can explain why the "Democratic Alliance" government is seeking with this further unjustifiable measure to deal Portugal's relations with the socialist countries a new blow.

3. Moreover, it is full awareness that the "Democratic Alliance" government views itself as a mere servant of the provocative and adventurist U.S. strategy which encourages the Reagan administration to treat Portugal as a protectorate or colonial territory, as was clearly demonstrated in public statements made by Alexander Haig at the time of his recent visit to Portugal, which constituted a resounding act of interference in Portuguese internal affairs.

4. It is obvious and indisputable that the "Democratic Alliance" government, offending the Portuguese people's patriotic feelings, is anxiously seeking in the Reagan administration the support it increasingly lacks in Portugal.

However, since the Portuguese people are not prepared to renounce their inalienable right to decide what does or does not suit Portugal, not even the greatest record of services by the "Democratic Alliance" government to the Reagan administration will be able to save this government of national capitulation and subordination from the just consequences of the Portuguese people's sovereign will.

5. The "Democratic Alliance" government's dismissal, which is necessary and imperative for many other reasons, is so, too, because of the direct need to safeguard national dignity, sovereignty and independence.

GOVERNMENT SHELVES GREENLAND INVESTMENT PLAN

PM191617 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 13 Mar 82 p 1

[Text] The government has withdrawn the state plan for its investments in Greenland for the years 1985 and 1986 in the light of the economic uncertainly which has arisen after the Greenland decision to withdraw from the EEC.

Members of the joint Danish-Greenland National Planning Committee were informed of the government's decision in Godthaab on Friday [12 March]. The decision is a direct result of the outcome of last month's EEC referendum. The Greenland Landsting, which will meet next week, will adopt the formal decision to initiate the withdrawal procedure as recommended by the consultative referendum.

The government's reasons for the withdrawal of the investment program are that there is now such uncertainly surrounding what funds will be available once Greenland has left the EEC -- probably beginning 1 January 1984 -- that it wants to review the plans. According to the government's calculations, there will be a shortfall of 100 million kroner from the EEC Regional Aid Fund as well as uncertainty surrounding a further 20 million kroner from the European Investment Bank.

LATVIAN REFUSED VISA IS 'PROPAGANDA OFFICER'

LD181316 Stockholm International Service in Swedish 1000 GMT 18 Mar 82

[Text] The Board of Immigration refused an entry visa to Sweden for deputy foreign minister of the Latvian SSR Nikolay Neyland, following recommendations by the Swedish Security Police [SAPO], SVENSKA DAGBLADET reports. Neyland was due to arrive in Sweden in February as leader of the Soviet Davis Cup tennis team, but his application for an entry visa was rejected.

According to SVENSKA DAGBLADET sources, Neyland is a so-called propaganda officer whose duty it is to make contacts with key persons in Swedish society. Sources within the Foreign Ministry, SAPO and the Board of Immigration say Neyland is not suspected of any crimes, but he was in Sweden earlier.

KIPRIANOU SAYS PARTY WILL COOPERATE FOR NATION

NC220824 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 22 Mar 82 pp 1, 10

[Excerpts] There is no dissolution, no panic and no confusion within the Democratic Party, DIKO, as reported in the Democratic Rally press yesterday, which reveals its own concern. On the contrary, DIKO is on an upward trend. It is attracting increasing numbers of followers and is expanding rapidly, having already become a very strong force in the country. This was the message given by yesterday's enthusiastic mass gathering of DIKO cadres and committees from the districts of Limassol, Famagusta, Morphou and Kyrenia held in Limassol.

Addressing the gathering, President Kiprianou stated, among other things: "Yesterday and today I have had the opportunity to draw the conclusion that despite the difficulties we had to face we did manage, in a very short period of time after the elections to the House of Representatives, to expand the Democratic Party and to attract more basic cadres to it."

"The Democratic Party is in an excellent position today and very soon it will cover the entire area it is entitled to cover. Whether the polemics about DIKO's procommunist policy continues or not, the center and the democratic right will be taken over by our party." Kiprianou said that if today's conditions dictate cooperation with parties with which DIKO differs ideologically, the party will not hesitate to cooperate with these parties in the national interest.

"However," he said, "this does not mean that as a party we will abandon our entity, identity or philosophy. It is a fact that we seek to expand democratic cooperation because we firmly believe we must block the road against those who want authority in order to serve foreign or personal interests. We will announce our final decisions very soon."

'RADICAL' DIFFERENCES WRECKING COMMUNAL TALKS

NC220841 Nicosia O ANEXARTITOS in Greek 22 Mar 82 pp 1, 10

[Excerpt] The existence of radical differences on vital issues and the continued intransigence and negative position of the Turkish side portends an early final deadlock and wrecking of the already "clinically dead" inter-Cypriot talks, whose current phase commenced last 18 November with the presentation of the "Waldheim ideas." The radical differences concern — as revealed by an excellently informed source — even points described as "points of coincidence" in the "ideas" document. The source pointed out some of the differences in the following "points of coincidence":

1. Point 1, which provides that the federal republic of Cyprus will be an independent, sovereign and nonaligned republic. The Turkish Cypriot side insists on the addition of the term "bizonal."

2. Point 4, which states that "the republic will have an international identity." The Turkish Cypriot side opposes the Greek Cypriot position that this should be defined exclusively as a limitation that, for example, only the republic will have an international character.

3. There are also differing evaluations on points 5, 16 and 18, which refer to the population of the republic, the chairman of the Federal Council (the Greek Cypriot position is that there should be a president of the federal republic) and to the jurisdiction of the Federal Council.

Over and above all this, the Turkish Cypriot position remains totally negative on the three principles of free settlement, movement and right to property, which are described as "points of equal distance." In relation to the above, the Turkish Cypriot side is avoiding entering into a fundamental discussion, citing abstract references to practical difficulties within the Turkish Cypriot community.

PAPANDREOU ANNOUNCES NEW 10-YEAR DEFENSE PLAN

NC201358 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 20 Mar 82

[Text] Prime Minister and Minister of National Defense Andreas Papandreou, speaking at Larissa today to 700 army and air force officers, announced a 10-year plan for 1981-91 for strengthening and arming the armed forces -- a plan on which the government has been working since December -- so that the armed forces might always be prepared to deal with any threat. The plan provides that the armed forces budgets will have the necessary capability to guarantee the territorial integrity and independence of Greece.

Addressing the officers, the prime minister said he felt particular happiness at being with them and that he would be briefed by the staffs of the tactical air force and the army, which occupy a primary position in the country's defense.

Papandreou emphasized that for many years we have been going through a phrase which fosters many dangers, both on a worldwide scale as well as, unfortunately, in our own area. He underlined that the developments of 1974, the invasion and occupation of a large portion of Cyprus by Turkish armed forces, changed the situation in our own area.

The prime minister also referred to the Cyprus issue and to his recent visit to the island. He emphasized that dialogue between the two communities in Cyprus will not be able to solve more general issues because it is a dialogue between Ankara and Nicosia. The intercommunal differences, he said, are most certainly an internal affair of the two communities, but the presence of foreign troops on the island and the occupation of 36.3 percent of Cyprus most certainly cannot promote the solution of the more general problem.

My visit to Cyprus, Papandreou underlined, was an active assurance of the alignment of Athens which, at this moment, is the metropolis of Hellenism, and we consider Cyprus Hellenism as an extension of our nation. Cyprus most certainly is an independent state and member of the United Nations, but it does not cease to be an extension of Hellenism, the prime minister stressed, and emphasized we must never forget that Greece is a guarantor power.

The prime minister then referred to the Greek diplomatic campaign toward internationalization of the Cyprus issue and to the letters sent to NATO and EEC member states, as well as to the interest demonstrated by the chairman of the ruling Social Democratic Party of the FRG, Willy Brandt.

Continuing, the prime minister stated that the repositioning of the Cyprus issue as well as the position of our country toward Ankara started in Brussels. On Aegean issues he emphasized that since 1973 Turkey has continually appeared with claims which are expressed either in words or in actions. He referred to the violations of the continental shelf in 1976 and to the continued violations of Greek airspace. Papandreou said the statements by Turkish leaders make it clear there is a strategy aimed at the shrinkage of Greek territory.

The prime minister then referred to the government's policy toward the Turkish Government as defined in the recent statement in reply to the statements by Turkish Prime Minister Ulusu last Saturday. Among other things the prime minister referred to portions of this reply, stressing that Greece claims nothing but will cede none of what belongs to it.

The prime minister emphasized that negotiations cannot deal with what Greece can cede and proclaimed there can be no framework for negotiation on concessions. He added that Greek-Turkish affairs have acquired a new mantle and referred to the Rogers agreement and the well known positions taken by the Greek Government, stressing that the NATO Larissa headquarters was never established as foreseen by the Rogers agreement, which deals with the controversial issue of Aegean control, in other words the defense and protection of the Greek islands by the Greek Air Force.

The actions of the Greek Government on an international scale, he added, are aimed at creating the prerequisites for detente in our area and more generally in the European area.

In reference to Greek-Turkish affairs and to the Aegean, Papandreou stated it is the duty as well as the responsibility of both the people and the government and, of course of the armed forces, to be absolutely prepared to deal with any intrigue.

Concluding, Papandreou stressed that the political views of members of the armed forces are fully respected, but that any party intervention within the armed forces is impermissible. This is a rule, he added, which the government will observe without exception. The government, he concluded, is fully aware of and wants to provide solutions to the problems of our conscripted sons.

Papandreou arrived in Larissa accompaned by Minister of the Interior Yennimatas, Minister of Agriculture Simitis and the Deputy Minister for Press Affairs Maroudhas. At 1230 Papandreou visited Larissa Airforce Base, where he was received by the corps commander, General Kourkafas. After inspecting aircraft and personnel, the prime minister visited the headquarters of the Army I Corps, where he was briefed by the staff. He then attended a luncheon in his honor given by the corps commander at the Larissa Officers Club.

TURKISH AIRCRAFT VIOLATE AIRSPACE NEAR RHODES

NC191949 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 19 Mar 82

[Text] Four Turkish aircraft today violated Greek airspace in the areas of Khios and Rhodes. The Turkish aircraft were intercepted by aircraft of our air force. Our ambassador in Ankara, Mr Papoulias, has made a very strong demarche to Ankara.

Commenting on the new Turkish violations, a government spokesman observed that they are taking place at a time when, for the past 3 days, both the Turkish press and a Turkish Foreign Ministry spokesman have been talking about an improvement of the atmosphere in Greek-Turkish relations.

OFFICIAL SAYS NO CONCERN OVER TURKISH SUBMARINE

[Text] A Turkish submarine appeared off Rhodes yesterday and sailed on the surface for a half-hour without any Greek warship making an appearance on the scene. Referring to this new provocation, the deputy defense minister stated last night that the submarine was on a "harmless passage."

As our correspondent on Rhodes reported, the Turkish submarine surfaced a short distance off shore around noon near Trianda. Many residents converged on the shore and watched the submarine sail by inside Greek territorial waters without any interference. The submarine submerged around 1215.

Deputy Defense Minister Dhrosoyiannis made the following statement:

"It is true that during the early afternoon hours yesterday a Turkish submarine was observed sailing between the islands of Rhodes and Simi together with other Turkish ships taking part in the well-known 'Sea Wolf' maneuvers. There is no reason for concern; this is a harmless and permitted passage and not a violation of our territorial waters."

PAPANDREOU COMMENT ON USSR MISSILES CRITICIZED

NC221130 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 22 Mar 82 p 9

[Editorial: "The Value of a Proposal"]

[Excerpts] Is Brezhnev's proposal for a USSR "exchange" of noninstallation of U.S. medium-range missiles in Europe for a numerical "freeze" of its own (300 already installed) missiles aimed at our aging continent truly a "very positive act" in the direction of nuclear disarmament, as Prime Minister Papandreou argued?

If it is, then why did all the European governments, with only a very few exceptions, have a different opinion? Are these governments, socialist or conservative, against nuclear disarmament? Or is it that they fear that a "disarmed" Europe will become an unprofitable environment for the solution of their difficult economic problems?

The only certain method for evaluating whether the Soviet proposal does or does not serve the need for disarmament is to explore the reasons that dictated it. Is it its sincere desire -- as the Greek prime minister appears to believe -- for a denuclearization of Europe? If so, then why doesn't the Soviet leadership accept the U.S. proposal for withdrawal of all nuclear weapons from Europe? Is it because in such a case the negotiations would be very protracted, as Papandreou again argues?

There is only one logical explanation for the negative Soviet position toward the peaceful Reagan gesture? That it is against, that it undermines, Russian interests in Europe. Would the other European governments have accepted the U.S. missiles if the reason for their installation was not related to the Soviet refusal of total disarmament and its insistence on keeping the SS-20 missiles?

It is acceptable to attempt the conditional defense of national interests through diplomatic actions which, supposedly, are the most profitable. As such, one could accept Papandreou's emphasis on the importance of Brezhnev's proposal. It is true that at this very moment Greece has absolutely no reason to laud U.S. rather than Soviet verbal fireworks at a time when, as a result of U.S. policy, it is forced to spend huge sums on defense due to Turkish expansionism. From this point on, however, nobody, apart from the organized extollers of every Soviet gesture, could accept that the proposal for the "freeze" is sincere, that it is a "positive act in the direction of nuclear disarmament." Today's fearsome nuclear arsenal is nothing more than the exclusive sequel to the numberless proposals -- from the end of the last war to date -- for... disarmament!

PORTUGAL'S BALSEMAO HOLDS PRESS CONFERENCE 19 MAR

NC191314 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1230 GMT 19 Mar 82

[Text] Portuguese Prime Minister Balsemao was received by President Karamanlis today to discuss questions that concern the interests between the two countries and general European issues. The Portuguese prime minister also visited the Acropolis and the archaelogical museum. At 1200 the Portuguese prime minister and Portuguese Foreign Minister Pereira and Finance Minister Salguerio held a press conference on their visit to Athens.

The Portuguese prime minister described the results of his visit as positive and said that both President Karamanlis and Prime Minister Papandreou promised during their meetings to back Portugal's effort to join the EEC. He added that the governments of Portugal and Greece have agreed to exchange information regarding Greece's experience from its participation in the EEC as a full member.

Mr Balsemao also said that during his Athens talks it was agreed that the question of Portugal's entry into the EEC be separated from that of Spain. The Portuguese prime minister also said that the date for his country's integration in the Common Market, that has already been fixed, will not be changed.

Answering questions by newsmen in connection with NATO, the Portuguese officials said the Portuguese side understands the Greek demands and that they hope a solution will be found within the framework of the alliance -- a solution favorable for both sides.

In connection with the Cyprus problem, Mr Balsemao said Portugal hopes that the initiatives on the international level will be fruitful. On the question of Turkey, he said Portugal has expressed its opposition repeatedly to the Turkish military regime.

At noon Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos gave a luncheon at the Foreign Ministry in honor of the Portuguese prime minister and the members of his delegation.

Further Details

NC192159 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 19 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Greece supports and will continue to support by every means Portugal's accession to the EEC. This assurance was given to Portuguese Prime Minister Papandreou. The experiences of Greece, which recently became the latest member of the EEC, are so useful to Portugal that it was agreed to maintain contacts between Lisbon and Athens at high level.

The Portuguese prime minister said the accession of his country to the EEC also has, apart from everything else, a political significance, since it will contribute toward strengthening the democratic regime in Portugal, which is now at the end of the transition phase that began with the restoration of democracy in 1974. Balsemao stressed that apart from the Portuguese Communist Party and certain economic interests related politically to the extreme rightwing, all political and social forces in his country favor its accession to the EEC, an accession which the communities must deal with separately from the accession of Spain. In any eventuality, Portugal must not be punished by a possible delay of the Spanish accession.

Replying to questions, Balsemao said his country follows with great interest and attention the developments of the Cyprus issue, which were examined here in Athens during the talks he has had, and particularly the recent initiative for internationalization of the problem undertaken by the Greek Government. He hopes these new initiatives will be successful. He also stressed that his country's concern over the abolition of democracy in Turkey and the violation of human rights there is well known.

In reference to Greece's positions toward NATO, Balsemao said these positions were also examined during the talks he had, together with the differences between Greece and Turkey. He emphasized that the Portuguese Government understands the Greek position and hopes that there will be favorable solutions both for Greece and for the alliance more generally.

Answering a question of whether the Portuguese Government agrees with Papandreou's view as personally expressed by him yesterday considering the Brezhnev proposal as constructive and useful, Portuguese Foreign Minister Pereira, who also attended the press conference, said that on this issue Portugal does not agree fully with Greece. Mr Pereira does not think the Brezhnev proposal is useful because it contributes toward the perpetuation of the current status quo with respect to the nuclear forces in Europe. The SS-20 missiles and other Soviet missiles already installed in Europe, he said, could strike at Portugal. A simple freezing of their further installation is not sufficient; what is needed is their total withdrawal.

EEC'S TINDEMANS DEPARTS AFTER MEETING OFFICIALS

[Text] Ankara, 20 Mar (AA) -- EEC Commission President Leo Tindemans left Ankara Friday night following talks with Turkish officials. In a departure statement, he expressed his personal hope that relations between Turkey and EEC will always be good. His talks proved fruitful and he obtained all the information he sought, Tindemans said, adding that talks were held on all problems in an atmosphere of frankness. He would present a report to his colleagues to be discussed Monday and Tuesday.

Tindemans refused to comment on the future of Turkey's relations with the community and on whether political questions were also discussed or not.

TURKMEN SAYS NO PRESSURE TO SEVER ISRAEL TIES

TA211605 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1535 GMT 21 Mar 82

[Text] Kuwait, 21 Mar (AA) -- Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, accompanying head of state Gen Kenan Evren, said here that Kuwait did not officially ask Turkey to sever relations with Israel or insist on this point. "They have only expressed a wish to this effect," he said.

Turkey's relations with Israel were not made a bargaining point, he noted, adding that the two sides made their stances explicit. During the talks, Turkey expressed her views concerning the Gulf war, relations with Greece and Cyprus and explained the role Turkey plays in the Islamic conference good offices committee efforts to end the Gulf war.

Turkish officials added that the two delegations agreed that Israel should withdraw from the occupied Arab land, recognition of Palestinians' right to establish their own state and the need not to turn the Gulf into a zone of international rivalry.

Everen Returning From Kuwait

TA221144 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 22 Mar 82

[Text] Head of state Kenan Evren is returning home after concluding his official visit to Kuwait. Evren held a press conference prior to his departure from Kuwait and said very beneficial results were reached during his visit, adding that he had the opportunity to conduct an exchange of views on bilateral as well as international issues. Recalling the common religious, cultural and historic ties existing between Kuwait and Turkey, Evren expressed his conviction that relations based on these foundations would be lasting and fruitful. Evren noted that projects discussed with Amir Jabir al-Ahmad as-Sabah during his visit to Turkey last year were already in the stage of being implemented, and said his visit had created the opportunity of taking new strides forward in cooperation between the two countries.

Evren continued: Turkey is a country with a national industry that has achieved important development as well as with a progressing technology and potential. Thousands of Turkish engineers, businessmen and workers are active currently in various friendly and brotherly countries. Turkish businessmen and contractors have proved their ability to compete in their fields with other firms in the world. During my discussions with senior officials of Kuwait, we have determined various fruitful areas of cooperation. Our technicians will exert the necessary efforts in a bid to transform these projects from theory into action.

I am convinced that the friendship between Turkey and Kuwait will contribute not only to the interests of our two countries but of our region as well.

Referring to the Middle East issue, Evren pointed out that the greatest source of instability in the region was Israel, which increased tension through its continuous faits accomplis. He recalled that Turkey had reacted immediately against the Israeli moves of declaring Jerusalem its capital, of bombing the Iraqi nuclear reactor and annexing the Golan Heights. Evren added that Turkey was witnessing with regret and concern the Israeli moves in Lebanon which exacerbate the situation.

In connection with the war between Iran and Iraq, Evren said he hoped for the early ending of this war, which has caused bloodshed and damage in two neighborly and friendly countries.

Evren said that Turkey was observing developments in Afghanistan. He noted that some of the Afghan refugees would be absorbed into Turkey in a bid to help heal the wounds of the Afghan refugees and provide them with a new home.

On the problems of the Gulf region, the head of state said this was a problem which concerned only the Gulf countries.

After making his statement, head of state Evren replied to questions by journalists. In reply to a question on relations between Turkey and Israel, Evren said: Turkey is completely aware of the Israeli policies based on faits accomplis which undermine seriously the peace efforts in the region. Turkey believes the Palestinian problem constitutes the core of the Middle East issue. The intransigent Israeli stand, which denies the national rights of the Palestinian people and which is based on aggressive and expansionist policies, is the main source of instability in the region. We believe the solution of the problem depends on granting the Palestinian people their undeniable rights, including self-determination, and on Israeli withdrawal from Jerusalem and territories occupied in 1967. It is our belief that a genuine and lasting peace in the Middle East will not be realized without the participation of the PLO -- the only legal representative of the Palestinian people -- in the negotiation on this subject. Evren recalled that Turkey lowered its diplomatic representation in Israel to its lowest level and added: The fact that relations between Turkey and Israel have been reduced is proof of Turkey's continuous and unshakable support of the Palestinian and Arab cause and of its growing cooperation with Arabic and Islamic countries in all fields.

Replying to another question, Evren said Turkey was pursuing a policy of complete impartiality in the war between Iran and Iraq. He added that his country was determined to continue its efforts for the achievement of a cease-fire between the two countries. In reply to a journalist who recalled allegations that some groups opposed to the present Iranian administration were based in Turkey, Evren said: Turkey's foreign policy is based on avoiding interference in the internal affairs of other countures. To permit the activity of such groups would be in contradiction with this basic tenet of our foreign policy. He added that such allegations were leveled by circles which hoped to benefit from harming the good relations between Turkey and Iran.

Following his press conference in Kuwait, Evren and his delegation departed for Turkey. The plane bringing the Turkish delegation home is expected to land in Ankara at 1400.

TA211035 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 21 Mar 82

[Text] Deputy Prime Minister and State Minister Turgut Ozal and the delegation accompanying him left for Syria today at 1015. In a statement at Esenboga Airport, Ozal recalled that relations between Turkey and Syria were centuries-old, adding that Turkey's longest border was with its neighbor Syria. Ozal noted that both Turkish and Syrian citizens had claims on land located on opposite sides of the border. Ozal said the removal of the mines in the border region during the last few years had been to the benefit of both countries.

Ozal said the purpose of the visit was to promote the friendly relations between the two neighboring countries and to improve cooperation in the fields of trade, economy, infrastructural work, transportation and air transport. The deputy prime minister pointed out that the volume of trade between the two countries had developed during the last 2 years, expressing his belief that the present visit would serve to increase the trade volume further between Turkey and Syria.

In Turkey's relations with the Islamic countries, Ozal said, big developments were realized in this field during the last few years. The further development of these relations would contribute to peace and security in the region.

Officials of the Trade Ministry, Transportation Ministry, Agriculture and Forestry Ministry, Customs and Monopolies Ministry, the State Planning Organization, the Turkish Central Bank and businessmen are accompanying Ozal on his visit. Ozal and his delegation are expected to return home on Wednesday.

DIRECTIVE ORDERS RENAMING OF PUBLIC PLACES

TA211730 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 21 Mar 82

[Text] Interior Minister Selahattin Cetiner has sent a directive to all governors asking them to ensure that all street, avenue, square and park names designated before 12 September 1980 and which are incompatible with national unity and integrity are changed immediately.

In his directive, Cetiner pointed out that some avenues, streets, squares and parks in certain cities, although few, were still named after extremists or after slogans which reflected their ideological views. Cetiner stressed that the state was determined to erase the bad and dark traces left in the minds by the period preceding 12 September 1980.

In his directive, the interior minister said: Names of public properties such as avenues, streets, squares or parks given before 12 September 1980 and which are incompatible with our national unity and integrity must be changed immediately by the concerned bodies of the municipalities by considering Article 2 of Law 1,003 dated 10 April 1927 on the numbering of buildings and naming of streets.

COURT TO SETTLE CONTINENTAL SHELF DISPUTE

NC202100 Paris AFP in English 2031 GMT 20 Mar 82

[Text] Valletta, 20 Mar (AFP) -- Malta and Libya today exchanged the instruments of ratification of a 1976 agreement referring their continental shelf dispute to the International Court of Justice at The Hague.

The exchange was made in the Maltese capital, Valletta, between Foreign Minister Alex Sceberra Trigona and Libyan Secretary for Foreign Liaison 'Abd al-Ati al-'Ubaydi after two days of talks, which followed last week's visit to Malta by Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi.

A joint communique said both ministers expressed their deep conviction that this normalization of relations between the two countries would enable the improvement of their political and economic relations. It was also agreed that trade relations would return to normal as from today and that the position of Libyan-Maltese joint ventures be strengthened.

A joint commission headed by the respective ministers for foreign affairs was set up and will meet within a month to implement a co-operation in the industrial, commercial, agricultural, tourist, cultural and information fields. Today's exchange of instruments patches the differences between the two countries which exploded in August 1980, when a Libyan armed vessel threatened a rig drilling under a Maltese license on the Medina Bank.

GREECE SUBMITS POSITIONS ON COMMUNITY RELATIONS

NC222201 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 22 Mar 82

[Text] Deputy Foreign Minister Varthis, who is in Brussels, today handed the EEC Council chairman the text of the Greek Government's positions on Greece's relations with the EEC. The peculiarities of the Greek economy and the Greek Government's choices for short-term and long-term policy are mentioned in this text. These choices, on which the government remains firm, were made with national interests as the only yardstick. The talks that will follow will explore possibilities for the formulation of a special status within the EEC that will promote our country's economic and social development program.

As the text of the Greek positions mentions, the basic prerequisite for this is recognition of the peculiarity of Greek problems, whose solution requires not only exceptions from certain community rules but also changes in certain sectors of the community's policy whose implementation has unfavorable consequences on our country. It is worth noting that the Greek Government's positions are being submitted in Brussels at a time when the community itself is passing through a period of difficult problems connected with its future after the recognition by increasingly more member countries of the need to revise the philosophy of the community's operation and policies.

These problems are linked with the more general issue of relations between the north and the south and the procedure that will allow developing countries to rid themselves of bonds of dependence and follow an independent development course. It is obvious that the position the community will take toward the Greek problem will show its ability to respond successfully to the challenge of the era. It will become apparent, that is, whether it is ready to outgrow the phase of the common agricultural policy for northern products and advance to a policy that will promote the essential coincidence of the economies of its member states and bridge the gap between the northern and Mediterranean areas. It is clear, the announcement says, that the government is nor prepared to sacrifice its development goals chosen on the basis of the popular mandate of 18 October and which constitute the only reference point.

The text of the Greek Government's position is composed of 14 points. These mention the current state of the Greek economy and the degree of development and note that the regulations and positions of the EC, as they currently operate, intensify certain of the country's problems or make their solution difficult. The Greek Government, it is stressed, believes in the need for special arrangements with the community and is ready to examine solutions that will be compatible with the economic and social program of the country and contribute to the implementation of its development goals.

Then the text refers to specific problems faced by Greek regions, the agricultural sector and industry, especially small and medium businesses, and to the need for special attention to these isues. Specific ideas follow on how it will be possible to deal with these problems within the framework of the new relations with the community and to the contribution the community's financing institutions may make. The text concludes by stressing that the Greek Government expects from the council recognition of the peculiarity of Greek problems, and as a practical manifestation of this recognition the government asks the council to entrust the EEC committee with the study of these problems and asks it to suggest the special arrangements required. The government believes that recognition by the community of the need for dealing with the Greek problems along with progress for a more general reform of the community's policies constitute the minimum possible steps for the creation of a status for Greece's accession to the European Communities which will not conflict with basic national interests.

GENSCHER BACKS FRG-GDR DISARMAMENT INITIATIVE

LD191418 Hamburg DPA in German 1303 GMT 19 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 19 Mar (DPA) -- Hans-Dietrich Genscher, FDP chairman and federal foreign minister, has once again advocated a joint disarmament initiative by the Federal Republic and the GDR at the second special United Nations General Assembly starting in the summer. In an article published in Bonn on Friday for NORDSEE-ZEITUNG (Saturday edition) Genscher writes that it is also worthwhile for the two German states "to work toward progress concerning confidence-building which is especially important today."

Confidence-building and the three other principles for disarmament negotiations -- balance, openness and monitorability -- are preconditions for success, Genscher stressed. He proposed to the GDR foreign minister to speak on these principles. An exchange of views has begun in the meantime. "It would be fitting for the two German states to make a joint contribution for successful disarmament negotiations in the central area of confidence-building," the foreign minister writes. Improved East-West relations are particularly beneficial for the German people.

JURISTS DISCUSS SS-20 WITH SOVIET EXPERTS

[Correspondent's report signed AGA]

[Text] Frankfurt/Main, 22 Mar -- Even if you do not share the Federal Government's or NATO's wrong attitude regarding public misinformation on medium-range arms and if you aim for a more differentiated approach, a number of "Democratic Jurists Association" members (VDJ) maintain that the Soviet SS-20 missiles represent a threat for Western Europe. That has been pointed out repeatedly at the VDJ conference in Frankfurt this weekend. The numerous Soviet representatives present were confronted with the thesis that the SS-20, as well as the planned U.S. medium-range weapons Pershing-II and cruise missiles, are first strike and even Eurostrategic arms. It was said that the military function of the SS-20 missiles was to eliminate the strategic threat to the Soviet Union emanating from U.S. arms already deployed or to be deployed in Europe. This threat could be eliminated only if the Soviet Union were the first to attack European U.S. bases without waiting for the Americans to launch their arms; in such a case the SS-20 would be useless and not even retaliatory because the Soviet Union would have been destroyed by U.S. missiles solely and not by European missiles. Moscow's military and political leadership, however, cannot accept this risk.

The Soviet experts pointed out that they consider the SS-20 a defenseive weapon, a counter-balance against the existing medium-range weapons of the United States, England and France which are constantly being improved with regard to quality and quantity even without NATO's dual decision. Despite the acute threat, the Soviet Union is determined not to be the first to use nuclear arms.

IMBALANCE OF TRADE WITH JAPAN SUBJECT OF TALKS

NC222107 Paris AFP in English 2042 GMT 22 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 22 Mar (AFP) -- Masumi Esaki, president of the ruling Japanese Liberal Democratic Party, hailed French President Francois Mitterrand's resolve today to solve commercial differences and reinforce scientific and technical cooperation between Paris and Tokyo.

Mr Esaki made this statement upon emerging form the Elysee Palace here after an hour-long talk with the French president on the imbalance of trade between the two countries and how to overcome it.

The Japanese leader said: "We hope to be able to modify what can be modified. The president of the republic emphasized his conviction of establishing closer cooperation between French and Japanese advanced technology."

"Rather than protectionist measures," Mr Esaki said, "the French president referred to the necessity of remedying current difficulties while at the same time entering into a more fruitful cooperation on the scientific and technological plane."

The Japanese leader, who heads a delegation from his party on the visit here, said he had "complete confidence" in French External Trade Minister Michel Jobert and hoped "that the French-Japanese trade problem can be solved."

Mr Esaki added that Mr Mitterrand had also expressed concern with increasing cultural cooperation between the two countries.

"In that respect," he specified, "Mr Mitterrand insisted on the need for a house of Japanese culture in Paris and a house of French culture in Tokyo."

Earlier in the day, Mr Esaki had conferred with the French foreign trade minister, who returned from a visit to Japan only last week. According to French sources, Mr Jobert repeated to his Japanese visitor the complaints he had expressed in Tokyo and said again that France expects from Japan "significant gestures" towards balancing Franco-Japanese exchanges.

L'HUMANITE ATTACKS U.S. ATTITUDE TOWARD DETENTE

PM220937 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 13 Mar 82 pp 1, 8

[Max Leon article: "Time Wasted for Detente"]

[Text] The decisions taken in Madrid yesterday by the 35 government delegations to the European meeting can clearly not satisfy those who had placed their hope in the Helsinki conference and the 1975 detente charter.

The fact that discussions which are more necessary than ever in time of tension have been postponed until the fall is not a good sign. The Madrid meeting which met for the first time in Novemeber 1980 is, in fact, the only place of permanent contacts in which you can find the world's two greatest powers and all the European countries belonging to the East and West blocs or neutral or nonaligned.

The adjournment is, therefore, regrettable. However, it does maintain some possibilities for detente since it involves the pledge to meet again on 9 November with a specific objective. It will be remembered that American diplomacy intended simply to scuttle the meeting even before the delegations reached Madrid at the beginning of February for this latest session.

Mr Reagan had to take a softer line when he became aware of the stir his plan was making in Western Europe. In order to avoid isolation, his representative gave up the idea of an abrupt break in the Helsinki process, while trying to turn the conference hall into a court to "judge" Poland and the USSR.

The American delegate did not obtain much support on that either, even from the other Atlantic alliance representatives who could clearly not be taken in by the White House's sudden love for Warsaw's working class.

Indeed, the Polish "pretext" only represents one episode in the history of East-West relations. Another 10 bad reasons had been used since 1980 to sterilize the Madrid meeting and they were used by the same American delegate who was already in office under the Carter administration.

International detente is not a paradise lost and found in which "everybody is nice." It is the result of a difficult battle whose first requirement is not resorting to arms, then settling conflict situations by negotiation and, finally, seeking mutually profitable cooperation to solve the major problems of the present time.

Although they have been pushed to one side, the advocates of confrontation are nonetheless not abandoning their strategy, using each historical incident as you use uneven ground to lay ambushes.

That has been the case in Madrid for more than a year. This is the case in Vienna where the 299th meeting of the East-West negotiations on armed forces reductions in Central Europe was held last Thursday. For more than 7 years the American delegates have been rejecting all the East bloc's proposals, saying that they do not agree with the exact figure of the forces present, to within a few tens of thousands... even though around 2 million men are facing each other in the zone in question.

In addition, in Geneva where preliminary negotiations on Eurostrategic weapons started again 30 November, the U.S. experts are pretending not to know that the two alliances have equivalent potentials in Europe (each has around 1,000 medium-range nuclear delivery vehicles) and are trying to exchange the destruction of the existing Soviet systems for a U.S. plan to deploy new American missiles in future.

What is the reason for these time-wasting maneuvers?

American diplomacy -- and that of the Atlantic bloc in general -- is the tool of a waning imperialism which no longer controls the balance of forces, which sees its sphere shrinking like a shagreen skin [reference to Balzac's "La Peau de Chagrin"] and whose leadership is being underminded even in the general staffs it heads. Iran has escaped its control after Cuba and Vietnam; its favorite dictators are in shaky positions in Central America and in Asia; the NATO councils are not following the directives for an economic war on Poland....

In these new conditions, Washington is having to abandon, at least temporarily, the tactics of "linkage" (of all or nothing) and to accept negotiations now which it previously rejected.

Thus, Mr Reagan's government is using a backing-down maneuver to play for time. In this changing world Washington would like to win back a strategic supremacy which it lost more than 10 years ago. In order to impose its conditions, the White House chief has thus decided in the space of a few months to launch the mass production of neutron bombs and chemical weapons, to build 100 B1 superbombers and deploy 100 giant MX missiles, allocate $1,500 billion to the military budgets in 5 years and so forth. The American President reaffirmed his doctrine again yesterday: "Rearm to negotiate better," which is the very principle of the policy of diktat. For today, in the conditions of East-West parity, the American military potential would be enough to destroy several planets like the earth.

By seeking a return to the past imperialism it is likely to draw the whole world into an increasingly uncontrollable arms race. It must therefore be forced -- and experience shows that this is possible -- not only to sit down at the negotiating table but also to negotiate there, without preconditions and without jeopardizing anybody's security, in order to achieve results.

The sword of Damocles is now a nuclear one and all man's cities are threatened with Hiroshoma's fate.

HERNU SAYS NO DECISION MADE ON NEUTRON BOMB

WA231530 Paris LE MONDE in French 6-7 March 82 p 6

[Text] "There is no decision, at the moment, regarding construction and deployment of an enhanced radiation weapon," otherwise called the neutron bomb. This declaration was made by the minister of defense on 5 March at Pau in response to questions from journalists who asked him to deny or confirm rumors which a Paris morning daily has noted, in its editions dated Thursday 4 March, following the publication in the monthly DEFENSE NATIONALE of extracts of a colloquium on the neutron bomb.

"The review DEFENSE NATIONALE is private," Chalres Hernu explained further, "and does not commit the government. We are continuing study and research, and tests have occurred. There is no decision, at the moment, regarding construction and deployment of an enhanced radiation weapon. I know of no new decision on this matter. If there is a decision to be made one day, it is -- positive or negative -- at the level of the chief of state, commander of the armed forces."

PCI EXPLAINS HANDLING OF CPSU DECEMBER LETTER

PM221445 Venice L'UNITA in Italian 17 Mar 82 p 14

[Text] A communique issued by the PCI's press bureau states in connection with the report issued by ADN-KRONOS concerning a CPSU letter to the PCI, the text of which has been published, that with regard to the Polish situation and its developments, starting with the crisis in August 1980, there have been between the PCI and the CPSU, as between other parties, including of course the Polish United Workers Party, repeated exchanges of assessment and opinions both through meetings and through written notes.

The PCI, though deciding not to publish the written communications with other parties, has always expressed, even in these cases, the opinions and supported the stances that emerge from the known documents of the leadership bodies and from commentaries in our press.

The letter now published by ADN-KRONOS, from sources entirely separate from the PCI, reached the PCI Secretariat on 2 January and was conveyed to and disussed by the Directorate at its 6 January meeting in preparation for the 11-13 January Central Committee plenum which broached the set of issues that arose following the proclamation of martial law in Poland.

The PCI Directorate decided that it did not need to reply with a written note because the CPSU letter was clearly drafted before our 29 December 1981 resolution and because a further and timely specification of our stances, partly in response to the CPSU's theses, was to be made public, as happened at the Central Committee meeting.

PCI STATEMENT DEMANDS 'DEMOCRATIC ALTERNATIVE'

PM221003 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 13 Mar 82 pp 1, 18

[Text] At the end of its Thursday session the PCI Directorate released the following document:

We are witnessing a serious exacerbation of the country's situation. Major sectors of production and public services (from the chemical industry to the automobile industry, from welfare to the hospital system to braodcasting and transport) are contending with a crisis to which there is no apparent solution. The tragedy of lay-offs is hitting not only the South but also the most highly industrialized regions; there are over 2 million unemployed, including a large proportion of young people. The state's debts amount to nearly 200 trillion lire, while the inflation rate, though it has fallen, is still very high, adding its damage to that caused by a recessionary policy. But the most worrying thing is that the government is incapable of pursuing a persistent program and approach with respect to this situation. It is paralyzed continually by disputes among the parties that should be supporting it. Some of these conflicts concern essental foreign and economic policy options. But very often electoral and power considerations take the place of quest for proper and responsible solutions to the country's problems. It has even been declared that secretaries of the ruling parties are entitled to share the state corporations among themselves. The harm is obvious. The damage this is causing to political conduct, to public morality and to the strength of the apparatus and institutions is serious.

It must be acknowledged that the so-called governability policy has failed. It must be recognized that this government has not served the country, Italian democracy or the left. The principal blame quite clearly lies with the DC. But the PCI's grave error was to have believed that Italy's problems could be resolved by excluding the PCI and by competing with the DC within a power system that constitutes the main obstacle to any possibility of reform and renewal.

There is a pressing need for change. The dissolution of Parliament and early elections, far from facilitating the solution of the problems assailing the country, would exacerbate them and impart another blow to the citizens' confidence in the party system and in the democratic institutions. It would be all the more unacceptable and rash to resort to elections if the aim were a contest for a certain redistribution of power and roles within an alliance with the DC. It is unrealistic to believe that rotation in government leadership is enough to resolve the problems of the Italian crisis, to reform the economy and to restore morality to public life. Nor is there now any justification for any ideological discrimination against the PCI -- the excuse which has been used to justify the policy of recent years.

The country's need is for a real change in political and program approaches, in government methods and in the conception of relations between parties and the state, a change in the political leadership. The PCI, which has long been aware of this need, is determined to translate it into a political initiative capable of mobilizing the necessary forces.

There is a possible alternative. A clear option in this direction can open the way immediately to a new development of the situation. Indeed, the objection that there is a numerical shortage for a parliamentary majority is not valid. The left is already a major force. France's example is illuminating. It shows that in Italy too, by indicating clear prospects, it is possible to mobilize new forces, revive new energies, discourage the bosses' reactionary plans, confiscate the DC's weapon of splitting the left and stimulate the initiative of the Catholic people's forces.

To this end the PCI sets itself the task of promoting a democratic alternative that centers on the left and that addresses the democratic forces, young people, women and the world of labor, production and culture. This means initiating a joint quest and a comparison of different experiences. Above all it means defining, by means of major people's movements of struggle for peace, work and development, the program options around which the nonconfessional and Catholic progressive forces can be organized and new energies, centers of unitary initiative and original forms of involvement in the field of civil, social and political activity can be created.

The PCI Directorate takes this initiative without any exclusivity, without any hegemonic claims, with a most open mind, in the belief that the Communists alone are not enough to create the alternative programs and forces that the country needs. But the PCI is the left's major force, a party with a rich heritage of ideas, proposals, capacity for struggle, political morality, sense of national responsibility and representation among the people. In past months it has taken bold decisions of extraordinary value to peace and democracy, to the political and ideological strengthening of the leftwing forces in Italy and Europe and in making it possible to start a new phase in the struggle for socialism in our country too. The PCI must undertake to rediscuss not individual problems, limiting itself to seeking partial covergences on the left (which we too consider positive and which we seek seriously and with a unitary approach) but the general political approach, the future. It is essential that it work openly for an alternative, starting right away. The PCI in any case is determined to carry out, in the spirit of the most open dialogue, its unitary initiative on the basis of a clear program and to offer itself as a reference point for the broadest forces for reform, for all those who wish to counter the threat of the country's economic, political and moral decline. The PCI is a sure ally of these forces, determined to set above an individual interest the more general interests of the workers and the nation.

MINISTRY DENIES QADDUMI REMARK ON TERRORISM LINK

AU221634 Rome ANSA in English 1555 GMT 22 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 22 Mar (ANSA) -- A statement attributed to Interior Minister Virginio Rognoni to the effect that "there are no links between the Palestine Liberation Organization and Italian terrorism was never delivered," according to a ministry note issued at the weekend.

The ministry response to remarks attributed to Rognoni was circulated following a press conference in Rome last Friday in which the head of the PLO political department, Faruq Qaddumi, said, "Minister Rognoni assured me that investigations conducted up to the present by Italian police and the secret service indicate that there are no ties between the PLO and the terrorist organizations operating in Italy."

The ministry communique reported that "The minister asked the PLO official, on a four-day visit to Rome, for explanations for accounts provided by captured terrorist suspects turned states evidence who have spoken of arms trafficking between the nation's Red Brigades and the PLO and other elements of the Palestinian resistance." The ministry note said, "This is the truth and it is equally true that Qaddumi reiterated for the minister the PLO position of having no ties with Italian terrorism."

GREEK PRESIDENT KARAMANLIS TO VISIT 5-7 APR

AU221654 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 22 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 22 Mar (ANSA) -- Greek President Konstandinos Karamanlis will conduct a state visit to Italy on April 5 to 7 on the invitation of head of state Sandro Pertini, it was announced here today. Karamanlis' upcoming visit will follow Pertini's trip to Athens in November 1980 and come as a confirmation of the personal friendship between the two heads of state and their nations, a note released by the president's office here said.

The visit is also expected to provide a forum for a further exchange of views on the pending enlargement of the European Economic Community with the entry of Spain and Portugal. Consultations the Greek president will conduct in Rome, and talks to be held by the foreign minister accompanying him, will also cover strained relations between Greece and the European Community.

Karamanlis will be received by Pope John Paul II on the last day of his visit here, it was reported in the Vatican. The Greek head of state's encounter with the pope will mark the first official contact between a president of the Greek Republic and the Holy See. Diplomatic relations between Greece and the Holy See were established on July 14, 1979, and Karamanlis travelled to the Vatican as prime minister in 1975 and 1979.

EXPORTS THREATENED BY SANCTIONS AGAINST USSR

[Lars Dyrskjot report: "Major Danish Exports Threatened by Sanctions Against Soviet Union"]

[Text] The government's promise to the EEC to limit imports from the Soviet Union by 15 million kroner -- out of total imports worth 2 billion kroner -- could cost Danish industry up to 300 million kroner in lost export orders. The reduction in imports is part of the sanctions against the Soviet Union because of developments in Poland.

"Industry is opposed to any form of trade restrictions," Erik Windfeld-Lund, deputy director of the Industry Council, told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE. "Foreign policy disagreements whould be solved through political channels and not through trading channels. These symbolic sanctions could give rise to reactions in the Soviet Union and this would not be in the interests of exporters. There are competitors outside the EEC who are also interested in winning orders."

Last month 25 firms took part in the "Danish Technical Days" in Moscow, and at present several Danish firms are negotiating for orders worth from 200 to 300 million kroner in the Soviet Union. Helsinger and Aalborg shipyards have the possibility of winning orders for eight ferries, De Danske Sukkerfabrikker are negotiating the modernization of a number of sugar refineries and Pasilac has made great progress with plans for a major meat and dairy project in the Soviet Union.

FALLDIN TIGHTENS MEASURES AGAINST INCURSIONS

PM190847 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 10 Mar 82 p 8

[Erick Liden report: "Tightening Up in Submarine Wake"]

[Text] Swedish Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin has announced tougher measures for foreign submarines which violate Swedish waters.

In a statement he said: "So that the integrity and neutrality of Swedish territory will be respected in peacetime we have to have the capacity to discover and repulse violations. If such violations occur we must firmly assert our rights as a sovereign state.

"A number of gross violations by foreign submarines show the necessity of committing further resources in order to be able to prevent and intervene against such violations. In this connection the regulations covering procedures for asserting the nation's sovereignty will be reviewed. The armed forces commander in chief is look into this question at present.

"In a time of unrest it is particularly important to underline the firmness and continuity of, as well as the broad popular support for, Swedish security and defense policy. "Our security policy has the aim of preventing Sweden from being drawn into international conflicts and of defending our democratic freedoms and rights in an independent state. It also aims at mitigating the effects in our country of crises and wars in other parts of the world.

"International developments mean that it is not possible to lessen the demands we must make on our total defense capacity at present," Prime Minister Falldin said.

SOVIET'S QUESTIONING OF DEFENSE BRINGS RESPONSE

PM221225 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 13 Mar 82 p 40

[Bengt Lindstroem report: "Our Defenses Are Good"]

[Text] Sweden cannot afford to prepare adequately for nor has it any chance of surviving, a nuclear attack. Nor can it prevent its territory, airspace or territorial waters being used in an attack on the Soviet Union or its allies.

This was the slap in the face delivered by Soviet scientist Lev Voronkov in a "Debate" article published in Friday's DAGENS NYHETER. Voronkov was writing as a private individual and a researcher at the Soviet Academy of Sciences World Economics and International Relations Institute. But according to Swedish Foreign Ministry officials, there can be no doubt that his ideas and views reflect the official Kremlin view and that the article was scrutinized carefully before being approved for publication.

There will not be any official reaction from the Swedish Foreign Ministry or from the Armed Forces General Staff in Stockholm. "We are not taking this article particularly seriously," Foreign Ministry political chief, Ambassador Lennart Eckerberg said. "It contained views which the Russians have put forward on many previous occasions."

"Of course we do not agree with the Russians that our defenses are hopeless when it comes to surviving various types of armed conflict. The government has given a detailed account of its view of security questions in the recent draft defense legislation, and this makes it clear what attitude we have regarding the questions surrounding a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area, which Voronkov discussed in his article.

"I have not given any thought to why the Russians should want to bring this up at the present time, but as I have said, there is a continuing debate on the nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area. At any rate, no reply from the Foreign Ministry has been planned," Eckerberg said.

The Defence Ministry is also taking the Russian assertions very calmly. "It was a "Debate" article written by a Soviet journalist -- nothing more. Therefore there is no reason for an official comment," Defense Ministry Under Secretary Sven Hirdman said.

"My personal comment is that Voronkov was putting forward quite well-known views. It is obvious that we could not withstand an isolated nuclear attack. We have never pretended to be able to. There is not a country in the world which could.

"However, I do not think it probable that Sweden would run the risk of being the target of a nuclear attack. As far as being able to prevent an attack on the Soviet Union by high-flying aircraft or missiles, these have nothing to do with us. They are so high that they are beyond Swedish airspace.

"If however, low-flying aircraft or so-called cruise missiles were to be used, the Swedish armed forces are well prepared to deal with them. We have an excellent system of hunter aircraft, missiles and radar systems to combat that type of intruder. I would even say that this system is far superior to those in most other countries.

"I think Voronkov is battering at open doors," Sven Hirdman said. "We in Sweden do not need any pointers from the Soviet Union."

GREEK, T KISH CYPRIOTS' TRIPOLI MEETING ENDS

NC230832 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0430 GMT 23 Mar 82

[Text] A statement was released in connection with the joint meeting in Tripoli, Libya, among the delegations of four Cypriot parties — two Greek and two Turkish Cypriot parties. The statement says the meeting was held in a spirit of understanding and covered the Cyprus problem. It was agreed that these meetings should be continued and broadened with the participation of more parties. The meeting was attended by delegations from AKEL under party Secretary General Papaioannou, EDEK under party Chairman Lissaridhis, the Communal Liberation Party under its chairman, Mr Durduran and the Republican Turkish Party under its chairman, Mr Ozgur.

The meeting took place at the invitation of the permanent secretariat of the socialist progressive parties and organizations of the Mediterranean. Mr (Shihatah), secretary general of the secretariat, made a statement on the joint meeting, stressing that the contacts between Greek and Turkish Cypriot progressive parties must be continued and broadened because, he said, this is the sole way to create a suitable climate that would lead to a reduction in tension and help find a solution to the Cyprus problem. The party leaders who attended the meeting also made statements.

Mr Papaioannou stated that the discussions were in good faith and friendly. He added: The fact that we have agreed to meet again -- with the participation of more parties as well -- proves that there is a desire to find the points of contact for a Cyprus solution. Mr Papaioannou said: Of course we are not the ones to find the solution. However, we will create the atmosphere that will help the negotiations find a good solution for the benefit of the Cypriot people.

Mr Lissaridhis stated: No one came here with illusions. With this meeting we got to know each other better. This is the first time such a contact has taken place. He added: There have been differences, but what is important is our getting to know one other and exchanging views. Mr Lissaridhis concluded: Now we know each other's views and we hope the secretariat will provide us with the possibility of meeting again.

Mr Durduran stressed that with the meeting a number of questions were cleared up and added that if the discussions are continued this would help toward a solution. Mr Ozgur said the meeting was a positive step and expressed the certainty that the contacts will continue.

INTERLOCUTORS MEET TO DISCUSS BASIC FREEDOMS

NC221655 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1600 GMT 22 Mar 82

[Excerpts] A meeting is taking place at the Ledra Palace Hotel within the framework of the intercommunal talks. It is expected that during this afternoon's meeting the discussion of the three basic freedoms will continue.

The Greek Cypriot side's representative Ioannidhis, said that during today's meeting he expects the Turkish Cypriot side to put forth its views on any practical difficulties it may possibly have and submit its suggestions for overcoming all these difficulties. After listening to the practical difficulties the Turkish Cypriot side may possibly have, the Greek Cypriot side, he said, will put forth its own views. Turkish Cypriot interlocutor Onan expressed hope that common ground would be found in the discussion. Onan said he will continue putting forth his views on the three basic freedoms. Onan added that the discussion is taking place on the basis of point 3 of the four guidelines, which says practical difficulties for the Turkish Cypriot side should be taken into consideration. Onan said an effort will be made to find a compromise solution.

TCP URGES SUPPORT OF BREZHNEV MISSILE PROPOSALS

TA200850 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 20 Mar 82

[Statement by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen -- recorded]

[Text] All the world's peoples and all peace-loving forces are pleased and enthusiastic about the new peace proposals announced by the chairman of the USSR Supreme Soviet Presidium, Leonid Ilich Brezhnev, during the 17th congress of the All-Union Central Council of Trade Unions. Turkey is among those countries whose people and national riches would be eliminated first in case of a nuclear war. These proposals have great and vital importance for us. Leonid Ilich Brezhnev is showing us they way of protecting peace and detente in our region as well. With these proposals, the Soviet Union is taking a new step in unilaterally reducing nuclear arms. This proves once again that the Soviet Union does what it says and shows its invincible power.

In a speech immediately after the 12 September coup, National Security Council President Evren stressed the Soviet Union's immense responsibility in protecting world and regional peace. However, the junta administration now seems dumbstruck before the new proposals made to the NATO countries by the Soviet Union -- a step showing the latter's deep responsibility. On the contrary, the junta administration is now proud of making Turkey a country that receives the third most aid and which is most dependent on the United States.

Today, the U.S. administration is the greatest danger to world peace. Reagan is increasing aid to Turkey in order to drag our country into adventures into the Middle East. The junta generals proclaim lies about violation of human rights in Poland -- lies continually proclaimed by the United States -- on the one hand, and arrest the [word indistinct] leaders of the Turkish peace committee on the other.

During his visit to Bulgaria, Evren frequently talked about peace and disarmament. Had these remarks been sincere, the junta administration would not have agreed to the United States' and NATO's pressures and it would have reacted positively to the recent Soviet proposals. These proposals include concrete steps which concern the future of our country very closely, such as the mutual withdrawal of the U.S. and Soviet fleets from the Mediterranean.

For years, our people have been wanting the elimination of the U.S. and NATO bases, annulment of the bilateral military agreements and and end to the dirtying of our territorial waters by the U.S. war fleets. Our people have been waging a constant struggle for this. The collaborationist ruling circles are helping the United States turn our country into a nuclear springboard. They are trying to show this as necessary under the pretext that the Soviet Union threatens our country. Those who continue to utter such lies in the face of Brezhnev's recent proposals -- which go as far as saying that all nuclear weapons be eliminated -- go beyond insolence.

It is in our national interest to reply to the Soviet Union's constructive peace proposals. This is essential to prevent our country from being dragged into war adventures and from being turned into a nuclear cemetery. The Turkish Communist Party calls on all our people, all the progressive forces and all our sensible persons who do not want to be annihilated in a nuclear hell to support the Soviet proposals.

UNITED KINGDOM

SUNDAY TELEGRAPH HITS BREZHNEV'S ARMS PROPOSAL

PM221739 London THE SUNDAY TELEGRAPH in English 21 Mar 82 p 16

[Editorial: "Mr Brezhnev's Nuclear Nonsense"]

[Text] It is hard to decide which aspect of Mr Brezhnev's propaganda ploy over nuclear missiles is the worse -- the impudence of the Soviet move itself or the wide-eyed innocence with which it was received by the more gullible in the West. "America Rejects Soviet Offer." It even seemed at times that the desires of a peace-loving Kremlin were being frustrated by a White House hell-bent on Armageddon.

What are the facts? More than two years ago, in response to the understandable jitters of her European NATO partners, notably West Germany, the United States proposed to station 572 Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Western Europe to counter the nuclear threat which the Soviet Union was mounting. That threat consisted primarily of its new SS 20 missiles, each with three independent warheads, which were designed, stationed and targeted with nothing but Western Europe in mind. At that time the number of SS 20s in place was around 200. Now it is 300, as Mr Brezhnev has been adding to his armoury at the rate of one a week.

So, in a situation one-third worse for the West than when NATO's counter-measures were announced, the Soviet leader proposes a freeze -- to stop the West taking any counter-measures at all: In this Mr Brezhnev resembles not so much the apostle of peace as an ageing con-man, trying his three-card trick for what may well be the last time in his long and deceitful career.

The economic cooperation agreement signed with Kuwait provided for regular meetings of a joint committee, he noted. Turkey's trade minister, who accompanied him to Kuwait, would be visiting Jordan on 27 March to discuss economic cooperation.

A joint press release by Turkey and Kuwait on Gen Kenan Evren's visit summed up the points discussed as follows: The two heads of state reiterated their belief in the peaceful settlement of disputes on the bases of mutual respect for sovereignty and independence, and non-intervention in internal affairs of other states.

They expressed their concern over Israel's aggressive and expansionist policy against Arab peoples and lands, called for Israeli withdrawal from occupied Arab lands, recognition of the national rights of the Palestinian people, and inclusion of the PLO in all peace efforts as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. They condemned the Israeli decision concerning the Golan Heights and aggression against Lebanon, stressing their support of Lebanon's territorial and national integrity.

Kuwait expressed appreciation of Turkish support for the Arab and Palestinian cause, while both sides expressed their wish to see the Islamic conference organization strengthened. The two heads of state expressed their concern over the armed conflict between Iraq and Iran, hoping a settlement could be reached soon and expressing their support of the Islamic peace committee.

They expressed their concern over the situation in Afghanistan, hoping a political settlement could be reached on the basis of the independence and sovereignty of Afghanistan. They reiterated the view that "preservation of the security and stability of the Gulf region was the responsibility of the Gulf countries alone," and expressed "satisfaction with the progress recorded by the Gulf cooperation council."

The two sides marked the potential for bilateral economic cooperation and the step taken toward this end since the amir's visit to Turkey. Emphasis was placed on the joint project for a fertilizer plant and for petrochemicals production. Satisfaction was expressed with the contributions made by the Kuwaiti fund to several infrastructure projects in Turkey, with increased contact between business, industrial and banking circles. An economic, industrial and technical cooperation agreement signed set up a joint economic committee which will meet annually to review progress.

Cooperation Agreement

TA221622 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1605 GMT 22 Mar 82

[Text] Ankara, 22 Mar (AA) -- A joint Turkish-Kuwaiti committee, set up under the framework agreement for economic cooperation signed during Turkish head of state Gen Kenan Evren's just-completed visit to Kuwait, will probably hold its first session in September, Foreign Ministry sources said. A first step toward implementation of the agreement will be a visit to Kuwait by a delegation from the Turkish Transport and Communications Ministry. Turkish Airlines will resume its regular flights to Kuwait under the agreement.

The 7-article framework agreement lists among fields for possible cooperation through financial support, joint investment and contracts: Trade, banking, industry, tourism, transport, agriculture, public works, navigation, shipbuilding, and fisheries. It also provides for training of technicians and encouragement of free trade. The joint committee may be convened upon the call of either party to the agreement, and may establish subcommittees. It will meet alternately in Ankara and Kuwait. The agreement is valid for 5 years, and will be automatically extended for another 5 years unless one of the parties wishes to end it.

Members of the Turkish delegation which accompanied General Evren to Kuwait state they had reached an understanding on financing of several projects in Turkey in their talks with the president of the Kuwaiti fund. The projects included the Akdeniz fertilizer industry, operating fund for the Aliaga petrochemical plant and the Gemlik ammonia plant. A team of Kuwaiti contractors are expected in Turkey in April or May to hold further discussions on joint projects. The agreement was signed by Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk on behalf of Turkey.

DER SPIEGEL INTERVIEWS STRAUSS ON U.S. VISIT

DW231012 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 22 Mar 82 pp 22-26

[SPIEGEL editors Klaus Wirtgen and Dirk Koch interview with Franz Josef Strauss, CSU chairman and Bavarian minister-president, in Washington]

[Text] SPIEGEL: Mr Strauss, have you been received in Washington as the Bavarian minister-president making a courtesy call or as an important representative of a future CDU/CSU-led Federal Government?

Strauss: The Americans are not so familiar with our constitutional structure that they would place a minister-president in that capacity on the VIP list of those visitors who are received by all prominent personages of the Washington political scene. Hence, had I been nothing but a Bavarian minister-president, my visit here surely would have caused less sensation.

SPIEGEL: Have you been accepted here already as the future finance minister and your companion Zimmermann as the future defense minister?

Strauss: Even in earlier election campaigns I have always come out against being announced by the introductory speakers as the future chancellor or the future federal finance minister. You should not divvy up the candy before you have it.

SPIEGEL: Did you give this answer to your American interlocutors as well?

Strauss: When I was asked by a senator whether I would be a member of a future Federal Government, I told him truthfully that this is quite undecided, also with respect to the particular post. Besides, my political influence does not necessarily depend on my membership in a Federal Government. But I did say that Fritz Zimmermann will definitely be a member of a CDU/CSU cabinet.

SPIEGEL: Did you, in this dialogue, also develop any outlook as to when this may happen?

Strauss: So far I have not learned how to tell the future from coffee grounds or the liver. I probably would have to learn to do that from the ancient Etruscans, because this was a great art with them. But I have made no bones about my view that the incumbent government is at the end of its tether and actually lingers and decays because it is too weak to walk.

SPIEGEL: Did your interlocutors share this assessment? After all, they have been cooperating with Social Democratic chancellors for nearly 13 years now.

Strauss: The American interlocutors, and in particular the secretaries, make a point of not being dragged into internal German politics nor giving the impression they have any special preference for people or parties. But they are quite outspoken in stating what kind of German policy would be suited for eliminating the disturbance in friendship, and what they expect of Bonn...

SPIEGEL: ...and by that they mean the CDU/CSU.

Strauss: Whoever lives up to this expectation is not a matter for the Americans to decide.

SPIEGEL: Have you found any evidence that would substantiate what the Bonn government believes it hears from Washington, namely that the destabilization of the Social-Liberal coalition is being pursued by the United States?

Strauss: Washington definitely does not pursue any destabilization of the Bonn Social-Liberal coalition. The coalition does that itself. There are, by the way, no notary public certified records made of the talk of the town.

SPIEGEL: Where is this town?

Strauss: There are many towns in this world.

SPIEGEL: And what about this talk? Is it about a conservative Bonn-Washington axis?

Strauss: I need not go on at length to tell which policy line I represent. I stand for a policy such as the one pursued in the period between 1949 and 1969. I also stand for the warnings which I have been expressing since the fall of 1969 against a perversion of detente policy. All I need do is recall those scenes of tumult in the Bundestag, shortly after Willy Brandt's election as chancellor, when the paper BAYERNKURIER was the center of the parliamentary debate, as it were, because my aide Marcel Hepp, since deceased, had published an article headed "Brandt as the Chancellor of Sellout."

SPIEGEL: And this is the policy the Americans want again?

Strauss: This is your conclusion, which has nothing to do with my visit but which also emerges from innumerable articles, commentaries, cartoons, speeches and interviews of U.S. publicists and politicians. It seems in the overall picture that the CDU/CSU seems the most reliable factor to the Americans for a predictable Atlantic partnership.

SPIEGEL: Who told you that?

Strauss: The Americans were so reserved here in expressing their views that the name of the Christian Democratic and Christian Social Union has hardly been mentioned in our talks.

SPIEGEL: Can you explain why the Americans talked in such a cryptic way with you?

Strauss: There is no such thing as concealment here; but there is no need for long talks with me about the policy which the CDU/CSU has always pursued, and would pursue in the future as well, especially with respect to the Atlantic partnership. What the Americans want is a German policy which does not show this high degree of instability and timidity. Just think of Helmut Schmidt's rapidly deteriorating prestige.

SPIEGEL: Who has told you that?

Strauss: That is also common knowledge. It is not changed by visits and meetings with ensuing communiques in now pompous and yet noncommittal language. So much has been messed up in this respect that it is necessary in the common interest of Germany to put German-American relations on a solid and trusting basis again.

SPIEGEL: You have sharply attacked the Federal Government from Washington, announcing an end of the Social-Liberal coalition prior to 1983. Willy Brandt has termed this statement as "undignified."

Strauss: I have read it with great pleasure because Wehner's past statements in Moscow, Warsaw, Prague and Budapest were extremely dignified: I have expressed common concern here among friends. Wehner was hitched by the communist propaganda machinery to the Jaruzelski regime like a greenhorn.

I have said that the Liberal-Socialist coalition is at its wit's end. Just follow what was carried in the FRG media in past months. There is no need for inside information. Hardly any other organ has contributed so much to confirming my opinion as your SPIEGEL.

SPIEGEL: You have your experience regarding the influence of DER SPIEGEL. Did you feel concern in Washington that a CDU/CSU government could cause domestic-political unrest in the Federal Republic because of polarization through aggressive trade unions and a militant peace and protest movement?

Strauss: I have asked the Americans exactly this question and it has been answered with a clear and unmistakable "no" by Secretary of State Haig and Secretary of Defense Weinberger among others. Moreover, it would be evil and purposeful propaganda to maintain that the trade unions would protest and march against a legitimate and democratic change of power. It would mean pushing Mr Vetter into the camp of the illegals. The trade unions have never left any doubt that they would accept every democratic election result and every democratic coalition change as an absolutely normal event in accordance with the constitution.

In addition, we would not ask the trade unions because we consider them a constitutional part of our social life, and it would be outrageous if even a very big organization would say that this coalition is acceptable and that not. I clearly gathered from my last talk with DGB Chairman Vetter that Mr Vetter would naturally accept every democratic majority decision.

SPIEGEL: Involved is the question whether an SPD or CDU/CSU government would be in a better position to preserve social peace.

Strauss: I hope you realize that your question is almost a joke. It is unclear not just to me but to all who can halfway think how Helmut Schmidt, who has built up unemployment and decreased the state of employment, who has thrown dust in peoples' eyes with unmatched ignorance regarding economic matters, how he should be a guarantee for social peace.

SPIEGEL: Has concern been expressed in the United States regarding a growing peace movement?

Strauss: Naturally I was asked as are all discussion partners: "What is going on in your country? Why is it that deployed Russian nuclear arms covering all of Europe are being generally ignored, while planned U.S. nuclear arms, still in a state of development, which are supposed to be a counterbalance are being termed as a deadly danger? We do not understand you any more."

SPIEGEL: Do people here fear that this criticism could grow under a CDU/CSU government?

Strauss: This is certainly not feared because — and I have explained this also -- we would make our contribution to the spiritual leadership of the nation, a contribution Helmut Schmidt has clearly renounced in his position as a hostage within his party.

SPIEGEL: Egon Bahr has said: "There will be no counterarmament against the declared will of the SPD."

Strauss: This means that Mr Bahr is setting the course of the SPD -- against Helmut Schmidt. It means that Mr Bahr, with his "no," wants to eliminate the opinion of the parliamentary majority which is for counterarmament. It means that Mr Bahr can terminate the Atlantic solidarity which the majority of our citizens want to continue. Mr Bahr will be surprised by what he has conjured up for the SPD if he should try to implement these words.

SPIEGEL: It can also be interpreted as Bahr making himself the advocate of a growing number of people who are against the deployment of missiles in the Federal Republic.

Strauss: There is not much room for interpretation. If in these negotiations equality or at least a balance of these arms on the European continent will not be achieved -- I do not mean zero solution, you can only be sarcastic with regard to the possible implementation of this idea -- the future of the Atlantic alliance will depend on whether these U.S. arms can be deployed as NATO arms on European territory. Helmut Schmidt has given his word of honor on it.

SPIEGEL: We are talking about the eventuality that a CDU/CSU Federal Government would like to give green light to counterarmament in 1983 or 1984 and that, in contrast, an SPD being in opposition wants to prevent counterarming.

Strauss: Helmut Schmidt has stated to the Bundestag, and the SPD has also said in the Bundestag: The decision will be carried out unless the Russians dismantle their medium-range missiles. That is to say, unless a satisfactory result of the negotiations is reached on the basis of mutual equality. If this is called into question again now, you yourself will regard Helmut Schmidt as a windbag, an easy boy [term in English], a cross-country opportunist who, for the sake of overcoming monetary difficulties, makes promises which he does not seriously intend to keep. What this amounts to, then, is the Balkanization of German policy, and the Balkan does not even deserve being referred to this way.

SPIEGEL: Aside from Helmut Schmidt, some other forces also exert influence on the SPD. And you, as the spokesman of the CDU/CSU cannot guarantee that you will eventually get the peace movement under control. Quite a few actions for blocking the deployment of the missiles are conceivable.

Strauss: I am a convinced advocate of the democratic state of justice, of parliamentary and representative democracy. If it suffices to mobilize minorities with God knows what pretext in order to unhinge parliamentary decisions, then Germany has ceased being a state of justice.

SPIEGEL: What matters is not violence but the attempt to exert influence on policies. The peace movement is growing in the United States as well.

Strauss: I do not have the right to intrude in internal U.S. developments.

SPIEGEL: But you have the right to do so in German affairs. If the CDU/CSU formed a coalition with the FDP it would have a partner who likewise does not cohesively back counterarmament.

Strauss: The NATO decision is being supported by all three parties of the Bundestag. The difference is, however, that in this respect Helmut Schmidt is being made to oscillate rather than enjoying the support of his party; that Mr Genscher, too, in this case has lost the approval of one-third of his party; and that we, the CDU and the CSU, are cohesive in the elementary security issues of our state and of Europe.

SPIEGEL: But you are not sticking to the NATO decision so firmly, at least not as far as the negotiating offer is concerned. To quote you, the Russians are aware of risks and ignore them; consequently we must show the Soviet Union greater risks and set up the new missiles in Europe.

Strauss: The West is inferior by a long shot in the field of conventional armed forces. The West has practically nothing to put up against the Russians in the way of European medium-range missiles, and the Russians capability of eliminating intercontinental targets in the United States, meaning the U.S. missile positions, with maximum precision has increased to a point where, by 1984/85, the entire strategic situation will have shifted to the disadvantage of the Europeans. On the other hand, the Americans are not prepared to stick their necks out for us all alone: They laboriously struggle for military balance and would not dream of achieving military superiority over the Soviet Union.

SPIEGEL: Plenty of statements from Washington prove you wrong. If you so unequivocally propose to deploy the missiles in the Federal Republic you become prone to the charge that you carry out U.S. big-power policy and that our own national interests do not count as far as you are concerned.

Strauss: Germany's national interests boil down to being able to lead a life in peace and freedom and maintaining for those unable to do so the hope that they also will, some day.

You must not denounce me as the marshal for the enforcement of U.S. interests if I merely stick to what the German Government has promised to bona fide partners. After all, we must not make the breach of one's word the principle of German policy. In that case nobody would even give us the time of day anymore. The Soviets, too, no longer consider us credible.

SPIEGEL: What matters is not just the missiles. In the event the CDU/CSU takes charge of the government you have predicted changes which would increase rather than decrease tensions in Europe: You propose not to grant any credits to the East anymore, you demand harsher sanctions because of Poland, you are against the natural-gaspipe deal on principle, you advocate a policy toward Moscow which Willy Brandt calls "economic arms buildup to death."

Strauss: In that field Willy Brandt has been talking sheer nonsense for quite some time anyway. There is hardly any use in concerning oneself with his fantasies in his intervals of brooding [dunkele intervalle]. I may be allowed to draw your attention to the fact that the deployment of these weapons systems, which merely constitute the counterarming to the Soviet advance armament, involves a joint decision by all NATO states. It is simply and absolutely wrong to talk of U.S. interests in that context. The Americans could still go on living well and safely in freedom for a long time after we cannot do so anymore. After all, I am no American lackey. I consider the deployment objectively necessary.

SPIEGEL: Including economic sanctions?

Strauss: I have said clearly here that the Federal Republic under CDU/CSU leadership will not be the pioneer or leader with regard to economic measures or common measures vis-a-vis the Warsaw Pact or the Soviet Union.

SPIEGEL: What did you think when Hans-Dietrich Genscher said that the CDU/CSU Union was about to follow his Ostpolitik?

Strauss: Mr Genscher made a number of interesting statements last week which certainly indicate psychological preparation for a coalition change. I see this statement in line with a number of similar statements.

SPIEGEL: Without justification?

Strauss: Maybe Mr Genscher has gradually eliminated the detente policy illusion which was first also supported by Walter Scheel. In such a case there would be some rapprochement.

SPIEGEL: Genscher's attitude toward sanctions and credits for the East is more flexible than yours.

Strauss: I do not believe that the Federal Republic of Germany should alone initiate another NATO policy. But after many years of the Soviet Union's expansion in Africa, the Middle East, Angola, Mozambique, Ethiopia and South Yemen, after the creation of more and more hotbeds of crisis in Latin America, after the Soviet Union's activity in the Far East, after the Afghanistan invasion and after the enforced military putsch in Poland, the West must consider whether it has a counterstrategy to offer. This counterstrategy must give the Americans some assurance that not all the allies will follow their alleged own interests. One marching to the left, the other to the right, the third forward and the next backward. In such a case the West would be what the Soviet Union wants it to be, namely a bunch of bigmouthed dwarfs with a world power behind them who can't pursue a policy any more within this system. The Americans could pursue their policy much more easily if they did it independently, without concern for the Europeans...

SPIEGEL: ...or if they had a government in Bonn following their wishes.

Strauss: Without wanting to answer another question in this connection, I would like to stress that NATO is a protective shield for the European countries against the Soviet Union, and also against America. It protects us against becoming a mere territory, considered by one party as possible prey and by the other as a possible buffer zone.

SPIEGEL: If Genscher would remain foreign minister of a CDU/CSU government, as you said, would he then support your foreign policy aimed against Moscow?

Strauss: I was never a member of an astrological club for the research of Mr Genscher's thoughts. But I think he is at least as intelligent as I am. Every Western politician must consider how to keep the Soviet Union from further expansion. I think that I am very much in the same boat with Genscher in this respect.

SPIEGEL: Some 18 months ago you were still the great bogeyman for Genscher and the FDP. If a change were to take place, Genscher would sit in the new coalition and you would be the main figure. How do you feel in view of such changing assessments by the gentlemen of the FDP?

Strauss: Certainly easier, thank you.

SPIEGEL: Mr Strauss, we thank you for this talk.

SCHMIDT SEES ELECTION LOSSES AS PARTY'S, NOT HIS

DW241049 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1900 GMT 23 Mar 82

[Reporter Lehmann interview with FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Wiesbaden on 23 March — videotaped]

[Text] [Question] How seriously do you take the statements by leading CDU politicians that a change will take place this year in Bonn?

[Answer] Actually, they have been saying this for quite some time, but so far it has not taken place. I do not think it will take place in the future either.

[Question] So you don't take it seriously?

[Answer] Oh, you must take everything the opposition says seriously. I also take what Mr Strauss says seriously. I think that everybody should take it seriously. However, this doesn't mean that developments in the world will take place the way the opposition wants them to.

[Question] How seriously do you take your defeat in Lower Saxony? Do you want to draw conclusions from it?

[Answer] I do not believe that it was my defeat.

[Question] You don't?

[Answer] No.

[Question] People are saying after this catastrophic defeat that the chancellor's influence did not have an effect in Lower Saxony.

[Answer] I don't understand what that has to do with the federal chancellor. The chancellor's influence in Lower Saxony? I did not run for election there. It was a defeat for the Social Democratic Party.

[Question] How do you assess this defeat?

[Answer] I consider it to be serious.

[Question] Weren't you surprised by the many votes cast for the environmentalists?

[Answer] No, I wasn't surprised by that. You could see that accurately from earlier opinion polls.

Bad Sign for Bonn

[Herbert Kremp commentary: "Signal From Hannover"]

[Text] The first of this year's four Landtag elections has been clearly won by CDU. Albrecht achieved an absolute majority in competition with three other parties which will enter the Hannover Landtag. Two of them are new: the FDP, which has managed to take the 5-percent hurdle, and the environmentalists, who have entered the fourth land parliament after those in Baden-Wuerttemberg, Bremen and Berlin.

As remarkable as the CDU victory may be, the SPD losses are equally characteristic. One does not know whether to call them the first or the second sensation of these elections. The land party organization is not so insignificant that it could have warranted such a defeat. It became the victim of the SPD policy in Bonn, of the decline of this party everywhere in the country. The inner erosion of German Social Democracy in the first test elections after the 1980 Bundestag elections and the foreboding Schleswig-Holstein communal elections result has been publicly demonstrated in an almost dramatic way. A decline of more than 5 percent -- that is the result of Bonn. This will irritate Bonn.

The not-yet analyzed results permit some judgment. The SPD has lost votes to the environmentalists and probably also the FDP; to the environmentalists from the leftwing and to the FDP probably from the rightwing which could not make up its mind to change over to the CDU. After this depressing result, the Social Democrats are facing the problem of which side they ought to turn to politically -- to the integration of the left, as Brandt suggests because of the youth which is running away, or to the center, as recommended by the chancellor whose followers are full of doubts. How the party will decide is more uncertain today than it ever was.

The CDU, a clear victor and not just a winner, is experiencing a strong upsurge from this result scored under difficult conditions. Optimism is gaining groundwith regard to a change. The FDP can be content in Hannover, although it is the fourth party behind the environmentalists. Bonn, however, must consider the result a test on federal level, making Genscher ponder.

GOVERNMENT MAY SLOW NICARAGUAN ARMS DELIVERIES

NC231914 Paris AFP in English 1904 GMT 23 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 23 Mar (AFP) -- France plans to slow down the delivery of certain weapons that it has contracted to supply to Nicaragua, sources close to the government said here today. Principally affected, it was suggested, will be two Alouette-3 helicopters.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman, however, said he knew nothing of any such decision. The arms contract with Nicaragua will be respected, he said, but delays were [words indistinct] between the signing of a contract and its implementation.

The contract, concluded last December, provides for about 85,000,000 francs (about 14,000,000 dollars) worth of weapons, including the two Alouette-3's, two patrol boats, a number of trucks, (?and rockets).

The contract was attacked by Washington, and according to the U.S. newsweekly NEWSWEEK, France's decision to delay delivery was obtained by President Ronald Reagan during President Francois Mitterrand's recent visit to the United States.

AFGHAN RESISTANCE GROUP MEETS WITH OFFICIALS

NC221721 Paris AFP in English 1658 GMT 23 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 23 Mar (AFP) -- Five Afghan rebel leaders and an official from "Radio Free Kabul" met ranking French officials here today on a European tour to seek funds for their anti-Soviet resistance movement.

After an hour-long talk with the Afghans, Robert Lion, who heads Premier Pierre Mauroy's staff, reitereated French opposition to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan which, he said, was "a violation of the sovereignty and the right to self-determination of the Afghan nation."

At a press conference earlier today, the six men said the Soviets were incapable of controlling the whole of Afghanistan. The Soviets have been organising regular search missions and police operations, mainly in the cities, they said.

They added that the Soviets were also trying to rebuild the Soviet Army by drafting all able-bodied men without consideration of age. The Afghan Army, which was 80,000-strong in 1978, now only numbers some 25,000 to 30,000 men, the rebels said.

Their European tour will continue with an international conference on Afghanistan in Florence, Italy, between March 26 and 28, and a meeting next month with officials of the European Parliament.

48TH NUCLEAR TEST CARRIED OUT ON 21 MAR

[Text] France carried out a nuclear test on Sunday in Mururoa Atoll in the South Pacific. New Zealand seismologists recorded the explosion: According to them, it had a power of 15 kilotons. This is the 28th French nuclear explosion since the beginning of underground tests in 1975.

COLOMBO WARNS AGAINST 'RENATIONALIZATION' IN EEC

AU230858 Rome ANSA in English 0843 GMT 23 Mar 82

[Text] Brussels, 22 Mar (ANSA) -- Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo has urged the European Ten to take steps to ease tensions in Central America and suggested that the United States and Western Europe both show greater consideration for the other's "sensitivity" and "responsibility" in foreign affairs.

Addressing a debate in the Belgian capital organized Monday by the European Economic and Financial Press Association, the Italian diplomatic chief came to the defense of the European Economic Community (EEC) and denied that it was falling apart as a community of nations. "The European Community is not dying," he said. "We don't have the spirit we had at the start, our problems are bigger now, but I believe that all member states are convinced of the fact that the differences of opinion that emerge are still better than not having a community at all."

Colombo was asked if a power triangle between Rome, Paris and Bonn was the answer to European unification. "It is exaggerated to attribute an absolute value to the fact that there is a certain capacity for agreement," was his answer. The EEC does not need to make an institution of a group within the groups, he added.

According to the Italian Government official, Europe would do well to take economic steps that could help eliminate the cause of tension in Central America, both in San Salvador and in Nicaragua.

Colombo also reminded his listeners that the United States and Europe do not always meet eye to eye in their reactions to international crises, citing Afghanistan, Iran and Poland as cases in point. "Greater consideration should be paid to respective sensitivities and responsibilities," he said.

The Italian speaker went on to warn that the community's survival would be endangered if members "re-nationalized" their individual policies. The warning came in reference to Britain's role in impeding the Ten from putting a joint farm policy into effect because of its budget dispute with the community. "The EEC cannot make progress without increasing its resources," Colombo insisted. "Farm policy has to be reformed to take Mediterranean agricultural problems into due account, just like the European monetary system has to push ahead even if the technical means for doing so are not ready."

The institutional reforms promoted by Colombo and his West German counterpart Hans Dietrich Genscher were meant, he said, to bolster the EEC treaties, not to provide an institutional alternative to economic unification or a distraction from the Ten's inability to achieve greater cooperation between their individual economies. "If there is [a] government that has a better proposal to advance, let it do so," he concluded.

JOURNALIST REVEALS SOURCE OF L'UNITA DOCUMENT

AU232115 Rome ANSA in English 1950 GMT 23 Mar 82

[Text] Naples, 23 Mar (ANSA) -- Italian journalist Marina Maresca, interrogated in a Naples jail cell today with regard to a false document published by the Italian Communist Party paper L'UNITA some days ago, admitted that she got the information from Luigo Felice Rotondi, a free lance publicist friend of hers.

The name of Rotondi, 47 years old, had been bandied about over the last few hours as a possible source of the false document which has caused an uproar in Italian political circles. Rotondi dropped out of sight some time ago. He has a history of perjury, swindling and theft.

The false document had to do with the kidnap case of a regional Christian Democrat official Ciro Cirillo.

MINISTER TRANSITS MADRID, COMMENTS ON NATO

LD220044 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2300 GMT 21 Mar 82

[Manuel Lopes report from Madrid]

[Text] Speaking in Madrid today, Portuguese Defense Minister Freitas do Amaral stated, regarding Spain's entry into NATO, that the Portuguese Government will defend Portugal's interests firmly and, if necessary, intransigently. He warned that a veto might be cast if our interests are affected.

The Portuguese minister was speaking during a technical stopover in Madrid en route to the United States, where he will attend the meeting of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group. The Spanish question will not be dealt with at the meeting [as heard].

The Portuguese minister said that it was necessary to differentiate between adhering to the North Atlantic Treaty and eventually joining its military organization. Regarding the former he said that there are no problems and that bilateral talks between Portugal and Spain and between Portugal and NATO member countries have shown that no claims have been made nor concessions required which as might affect Portuguese interests.

Joining the military organization, however, is quite a different proposition and in this regard the government will intransigently defend Portugal's interests. Spain will never be allowed to join without Portugal's full assent nor against Portugal's opposition.

Freitas do Amaral said that Portugal does not want to be a passive member of NATO with a role limited to making its territory and facilities and the use of its excellent geostrategic position available. He added that it will be regarded as unacceptable if the NATO countries reduce financial and technical aid toward reequipping and modernizing the Portuguese armed forces.

Freitas do Amaral, who will have bilateral talks in the United States with the U.S. secretary of defense and the West German defense minister on immediate aid programs for the construction of new frigates, fighter planes and tanks, said that Portugal has a plan for the modernization of its armed forces but its implementation will hinge on the revision of the constitution and on the approval of the law on national defense.

DELEGATION DEPARTS FOR SESSION IN ANGOLA

LD231526 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1230 GMT 23 Mar 82

CHANGE IN POLICY TOWARD ARAB COUNTRIES ANALYZED

NC230937 Istanbul HURRIYET in Turkish 18 Mar 82 p 3

[Editorial by Oktay Eksi: "Aware of Our Surroundings"]

[Text] Has our foreign policy become more active recently, or was it that very little of it could be seen on the surface? It is difficult to say.

But one thing we do know: For the first time the government of the Turkish Republic appears to appreciate Turkey's geographic position and is implementing the kind of policy this necessitates — that of being aware that our country is a bridge between Europe and Asia and between the north and the south. It looks as if it appreciates for the first time that its neighbors are Iraq, Iran, Bulgaria and Syria, and not Britain, the United States and France. Let us clarify one point and then continue: Certainly Turkey's relations with the United States, Britain, the FRG and other influential countries are valuable in proportion to their importance to international politics, the balance of power and their present relations with Turkey. But we would be perpetuating our former erroneous policy if we regarded these countries as the only ones in the world.

This is the attitude we think has changed recently. From this viewpoint, the statement by Honorable Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu prior to his departure for Iraq is interesting. The change in approach is reflected, we feel, in Prime Minister Ulusu's words "The visit I am going to pay to Iraq must be evaluated within the framework of our Middle East policy, which emphasizes our government's intention to raise relations with the Arab and Muslim countries in the region to the highest level in a spirit of mutual confidence."

Evaluating Honorable Ulusu's words along with those of Honorable Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen in the press on 8 March, it can be said that "comprehensive" foreign policy practices are being conducted. For example, Turkmen said in his interview: "Turkey will never pursue a policy without an alternative.... It has never been, nor will it be, so naive as to pursue a policy with only one option, (such as breaking away from Europe and getting closer to the United States."

If "not being confined to one option only" is a principle, it should be valid not only where Europe and the United States are concerned but also for "East" and "West" and "Muslim" and "non-Muslim" countries. When everything is taken into consideration, Prime Minister Ulusu's visit to Iraq, Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal's visit to Iran, Honorable Kenan Evren's planned visit to Kuwait and his recent visit to Bulgaria express a collective value and meaning.

However, the results so far are inadequate. For example, the agreements on "cooperation in the military field" between Turkey and Saudi Arabia and "the sale of products from the mechanical-chemical industries to this country" have been marking time since January 1981. Our businessmen boasted that the volume of trade with that country could rise to 5 billion dollars, but not even half of this target has been reached yet. When Turgut Ozal visited Kuwait in June 1981, he said: "We have entered the Gulf. We have opened its gate and we have taken a very auspicious step." But so far nothing important has come out of this.

Our relations with Iran have been "gaining strength" for years and our friendship with Iraq is increasing daily. But somehow development of our relations is less impressive than development of our affections. Or is it that we have learned how to look after our neighbors but they have not learned how to look after us?

BOOK URGES 'DRASTIC' CHANGES IN ARMED FORCES

[Desmond Wettern report: "Air-Sea Defence Build-up Call by Nott Aide"]

[Text] A call for the cutting of the British army in Germany by half and a corresponding build-up of naval, air and volunteer reserve forces was made yesterday by Mr John Wilkinson, parliamentary private secretary to the defence secretary, Mr John Nott, and Cdr Michael Chichester, a Bow Group member.

In their joint book "The Uncertain Ally — British Defence Policy 1960-1980" the authors claim: "There is only one choice which really makes sense for the United Kingdom. That is a drastic reduction in the strength of BAOR which should be approximately halved in numbers and moved west of the Rhine to protect the clutch of three RAF airfields at Wildenrath, Laarbruch and Bruggen."

On the June 1981 defence white paper, under which Mr Nott plans to cut the navy's surface forces by a third by 1985, the book says that it was "hastily prepared" and that "the fundamental changes which have now become urgent have yet to be made" in matching the prime minister's assurances to President Reagan that Britain would assist the Americans with forces outside the NATO area with forces for the task.

Speaking at the book's launching in London Cdr Chichester pointed out that the Royal Navy would be smaller than the Rhine army by the time the Nott cuts are completed. But how could the Rhine army fight for the more than a few days without seaborne reinforcements? One of the key themes the authors have advanced is the need for the NATO allies to share the various defence tasks so that each nation contributed in those areas where it could do best, a theme put forward by the former defence secretary, Mr Francis Pym.

There was an urgent need for a greater involvement by the British in their own defence through increased volunteer reserves, a view supported by the former chief of the defence staff, Marshal of the Royal Air Force Sir Neil Cameron.

ARON VIEWS EAST-WEST BATTLE IN CENTRAL AMERICA

PM251723 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 13 Mar 82 p 5

[Raymond Aron article: "East-West Conflict in Central America"]

[Text] At the conclusion of the recent summit between France and the FRG the two governments stated that "genuine nonalignment is consistent with this aim (progress and justice -- peace -- in the world) and for this reason are opposed to transferring the East-West conflict to the Third World." This sentence certainly comes from the French delegation, since it is consistent with statements made by the minister of external relations under other circumstances: For instance, in an interview granted to NEWSWEEK in which he said: "Was there really a Soviet influence in Central America a year or two ago? I do not believe so." The [French] president's adviser, Regis Debray, could enlighten the minister on this point.

In the absence of consulting the expert, the facts are sufficient to refute this curious assertion. Was not Castroist influence transferring the East-West conflict to Central America 2 or 3 years ago? To exclude Central America -- a region of the world open to the Fidelists and to the Yankees at the same time -- from the battlefield on which East and West are confronting each other is to mislead European public opinion or to deceive oneself.

The government spokesmen would reply that it is true: That the revolutionaries of El Salvador and Guatemala are not prompted by the Marxist-Leninist faith and that they are rebelling against despotic regimes and against an oligarchy which to a greater or lesser extent monopolizes land and wealth. It is advisable first to reform the social conditions which provoke rebellions and then, supposing that the latter are successful, to move them away from the Soviet model and camp.

Any political commentator would accept the premises of this line of argument: That is, that almost all the Central American countries are being eyed in one way or another by the guerrillas.

When civil war begins, reformism is useless. To be more precise, it accelerates the fall of the threatened government. The Iran of the shah was a good demonstration of this. Khomeyni's order, judged in accordance with Western values, seems in all respects worse than that to which we rightly attributed the violation of human rights.

It could be argued that the same thing is not happening in Central America, because do not the Nicaraguan people deem Sandinism preferable to Somozism? Are not the Sandinists teaching the Nicaraguans to read and write? Have they not restored to them awareness of their dignity and their identity? Maybe so, but I will refrain from making a categorical judgment. Be that as it may, Sandinism is already committed to the path leading to a single-party system -- the Fidelist version of the Soviet regime in Latin America.

Like the Fidelists, the leaders of the revolution are hastening to organize an army at least three times larger than that of Somoza, and are also combing the country, keeping the population under surveillance and approving the Kremlin's diplomacy, whether it be a matter of Afghanistan or Poland. The French, who are hoping to restore them to the West by means of arms sales, are once more ignorant of the way of thinking of Lenin's grandchildren.

Perhaps I will be told that Nicaragua is already irrecoverable. At any rate, we must not put the cart before the horse, because the Soviet Union sends arms generously but little else. The Sandinists would preserve some freedom if they hoped to receive dollars. In fact, they have already received them and spent many of them on the army.

It may be said that in El Salvador the die has not yet been cast. Perhaps a political agreement would spare a civil war which the junta seems incapable of winning.

In this case, too, I will refrain from expressing an opinion on the various strategies open to President Ronald Reagan. The worst strategy is certainly that which is being practiced today. The support for President Napoleon Duarte is insufficient to guarantee success for the junta but sufficient to make a possible victory for the guerrillas take on the nature of a U.S. defeat. Whether useful or not, the envisaged elections will not end the civil war.

By regarding the El Salvador rebels as enemies in advance, the United States is driving them toward Sovietism. If it led the junta to negotiations with the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front perhaps it would avert the radicalization of the front and at worst would maintain tolerable relations with the new masters.

I doubt whether the Latin American countries -- Costa Rica, Honduras, Venezuela or Colombia -- where representative institutions persist, at whatever the cost, will allow themselves to be convinced by these calculations: That is, by the wager that U.S. good manners would be sufficient to convert communists or Fidelists. A generation of Fidelist revolutionaries is currently dragging Central America and the whole of Latin America toward world history, toward the East-West conflict.

Perhaps the French minister of external relations observes the spread of Fidelism in Panama, Guatemala and Mexico with indifference. The friends of the West with whom I met in Caracas a few days ago take a different view. In private statements and in interviews the French Government spokesmen disseminate the thesis that the breathless Soviet Union no longer disturbs the sleep of anybody but the fogies of the cold war. James Reston indulgently reproduced this thesis with the aim of criticizing the Reagan team.

It is a strange interpretation of the situation. The East-West conflict forgets no region of the world, and far less Central America and the Caribbean. If the revolutionary wave reaches Mexico some day, the geopolitical map of the world will experience a transformation, and the United States, forced to defend an indefensible border, will lose the privilege of insularity. Then the enemy will be within, among millions of Mexican immigrants, legal and illegal.

SCHMIDT TO SEEK CONFIRMATION OF DETENTE POLICY

LD251448 Hamburg DPA in German 1011 GMT 25 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 25 Mar (DPA) -- At the NATO summit conference in Bonn in June Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt wants to achieve confirmation of detente as an important part of Western alliance policy alongside defense capability in the face of trends in American policy aimed against the concept and content of the policy of detente in East-West relations. According to reliable sources in Bonn, the chancellor will urge that the principle of security and detente in NATO policy from the Harmel Report of 1967 be expressed in the summit conference.

Schmidt was a committed supporter of the NATO dual decision which, on one hand, provides for maintaining Western defense power by means of deterrence on the basis of military balance and, on the other, provides for detente in East-West relations by means of a balance of interests and dialogue. According to the Bonn sources, the chancellor takes the view that a confirmation both of defense and of detente in the planned NATO statement could meet with the reservations of the American Government which will be represented at the Bonn summit by President Ronald Reagan.

American policy and also the government hold the view that it has become repeatedly clear that the policy of detente in relations with the East has failed and has had to be abandoned. Schmidt does not share this view. He firmly supports the restoration of military balance, in particular by removing Soviet advance arming in nuclear medium-range weapons in Europe, but also by continuing cooperation in the economic field. It is reported that Schmidt will resolutely counter all efforts for a trade war with the Soviet Union. In his support for confirming the NATO elements of defense and detente policy, the chancellor is apparently basically counting on the support of the French president, Francois Mitterrand.

During the past few months APD Chairman Willy Brandt and other leading SPD politicians have reapetedly spoken in favor of definite adherence to this political line of the Western alliance. Indirectly, they have thus criticized and warned the United States and stressed that the line is an agreed basis of NATO policy. Anyone abandoning the link between defense and detente thus places himself outside the alliance.

The chancellor is also said to take an optimistic rather than pessimistic view of the course of the Geneva negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on European medium-range weapons. Schmidt is apparently expecting that the two super-powers will resume negotiations this year on limiting or reducing strategic arms, earlier called SALT and which Reagan would like to call START. The chancellor, it is reported, takes the view that an agreement on medium-range weapons in Geneva will bring about the beginning of START negotiations because the two spheres of arms control have to be interlocked.

PREMIER MAUROY HAS SHORT MEETING IN BONN

LD251942 Hamburg DPA in German 1723 GMT 25 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 25 Mar (DPA) -- French Premier Pierre Mauroy, talking with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Bonn today, has urged that new EC agriculture prices be fixed. Schmidt stressed that it is important for the European Community to present an image of cohesion and that for that reason alone a solution will have to be found. The question of the net contribution, still unresolved because of the British demand for a reduction, was discussed during Mauroy's flying visit lasting 2 hours. This so-called "mandate" -- the ED commission's task to reorganize the contributions -- has to date foundered on the British demands.

The talks at the chancellor's office were also attended by Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer. The weakness of the French franc, surrounded in the last few days by rumors of devaluation, was, however, not discussed, a government spokesman said. A substantial part of the talk was devoted to the preparation of the European Council in Brussels on Monday and Tuesday or next week. Schmidt and Mauroy agreed that at this European summit conference of heads of state and government a thorough analysis of all economic problems has to be carried out. But a discussion of the East-West situation will also appear on the Brussels agenda. There is already far-reaching approximation of views concerning these topics among the 10 summit partners, the government spokesman said.

GOVERNMENT, PLO SPOKESMAN VIEW ISRAELI ACTIONS

LD251808 Hamburg DPA in German 1225 GMT 25 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 25 Mar (DPA) -- In view of the escalated situation on the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip, the Federal Government on Thursday called on Israel "not to create any further faits accomplis and so anticipate the results of negotiations." The Bonn Foreign Ministry said in a statement that the government is following the increase in tensions in the occupied areas "with deep concern." Those involved in the hostilities were urged to exercise extreme restraint.

Earlier the PLO spokesman in Bonn, 'Abdallah al-Franji, called on all German politicians and parties to exert pressure on Israel to bring an end to Israeli "aggression and expansion." He also announced that the PLO is again "compelled to take more military actions" because of Israeli action against the Palestinians.

Al-Franji's press conference in the building of the "Palestine Information Office" was well attended by representatives of all the Arab embassies in Bonn, including several ambassadors and charges. Al-Franji described Israel's action in the occupied areas, where for several days there has been a general strike, curfews and bloody clashes, as a step toward the complete annexation of this region.

Al-Franji underlined the solidarity of all the Arab states with the Palestinians and accused the West of representing only Israeli interests. "The cowboy mentality of the Reagan administration knows only the law of the gun," the PLO spokesman said. "And so Israel can continue to annex land, threaten Lebanon and persecute the Palestinians without having to fear sanctions or punishment."

Al-Franji accused the West European governments of having made "one climb-down after another since their Middle East statement in Venice in 1980." "And it has come to the stage where Begin can offend and insult Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt without it being pointed out to him that this is completely unacceptable." Al-Franji does not doubt Bonn's basic desire for a balanced Middle East policy. "But the Germans have little scope because Reagan is holding the lid down."

The PLO spokesman pointed out that the presence of the Arab diplomats at his press conference proved that all the Arab governments, "from Morocco to Iraq," despite their disunity, back the Palestinians and the PLO. The Palestinians constantly rely on their financial and military aid. If the PLO has been holding back, then this was only in the interest of the search for a comprehensive peace solution. Now the PLO will no longer "passively observe."

TEST ON SUNDAY REPORTEDLY OF NEUTRON BOMB

LD260910 Paris Domestic Service in French 0700 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Is France ready to make a neutron bomb? Technically this presents no problem. It is rather a political decision. In any case, France last Sunday carried out a nuclear test on the Mururoa Atoll in the Pacific. The bomb was small one -- 2 kilotons -- that is, 10 times less powerful than the Hiroshima bomb. That is why Michel Forgit wonders whether it was a neutron bomb, or one very close to it, which was tested.

[Begin Forgit recording] It is indeed a neutron bomb which has been exploded, but this does not mean that France has decided to make this bomb and supply its army with it. The engineers merely want to prove that they have mastered the technique. [end recording]

L'HUMANITE INTERPRETS CANTON ELECTION RESULTS

PM251137 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 22 Mar 82 p 1

[Rene Andrieu editorial: "The Law of Democracy"]

[Text] The second round of canton elections, characterized by even higher participation than 1 week ago, confirmed the first round and even accentuated the trend.

The violent campaign waged by the right -- which did not stint on the means used, having no hesitation in making the dead talk and blaming the present government for the economic difficulties for which it is responsible -- succeeded in mobilizing all its voters.

The leftwing voters, on the other hand, did not show the same combativeness and did not reply fully to the appeal made to them by the Communist and Socialist leaders. It is better to face up to that fact so as to try to discover its causes.

Of course the canton elections have neither the mission nor the power to call into question the verdict of universal suffrage which last May and June clearly expressed its condemnation of the policy pursued by Mr Giscard d'Estaing and his friends. That verdict is still valid; it is the law of democracy.

Of course in the 1976 and 1979 canton elections, when the right was in the government, its parties were in the minority by a long way: 44 percent against 52 percent for the left in 1979 and 43 percent against 52 percent in 1976. It is probably useful to recall that in order to show that the local and national elections are not on exactly the same level and that the UDF and RPR leaders in any case cannot, without contradicting themselves, give yesterday's ballot, as they are already doing, the value of a glaring disavowal of the election in May and June 1981.

Nonetheless, the result of the canton elections is not without significance, and if the right has succeeded in mobilizing its voters more effectively than the left, it is for reasons which deserve to be analyzed in detail.

Some initial remarks can already be made, with reservations.

There is reason to think that the campaign aimed at spreading panic and slander waged by the leaders of the former majority succeeded not only in rallying the right but also in disturbing a section of the leftwing voters. To cite just one example, the speculation on the franc launched by high finance between the two rounds of the election was obviously aimed at creating a climate of anxiety and distrust of the government. It probably had some effect.

That campaign shows that the right, defeated last year, does not really accept alternation and that it would like to go back on the verdict of universal suffrage. That is why it has mobilized all its resources, and those resources are still considerable: It has money, powerful economic levers, and strong positions in the institutional bodies and in the media. Its objective on this occasion is not to develop regional democracy but to thwart the government's policy and break the leftwing union.

It is up to the left to learn the appropriate lessons from the election, first by strengthening its union for the implementation of the government's policy, for the pursuit of change at the rate chosen by universal suffrage in 1981.

It is true that, although it has taken a number of social measures to help the workers, the government has been unable in the space of a few months to shake off the legacy of those responsible for the crisis. Yesterday's election should urge it to keep all its promises, not cut itself off from the people's concerns and to have the will to reduce unemployment, increase purchasing power and defend the workers' rights. The Communists, for their part, are determined to make every effort to ensure that the latter are not deprived of their victory.

NICARAGUA, EL SALVADOR PAWNS IN BIG-POWER GAME

[Editorial: "The Central American 'Stake'"]

[Text] To justify his decision to convene an emergency session of the UN Security Council Nicaraguan leader Ortega invoked 19 March the "growing danger of an armed U.S. intervention." The Managua authorities can certainly report practices which are completely contrary to peoples' rights: the CIA's "destabilization plan" which the American press reported and which has not been denied, and the fact that its territory is being overflown by spy planes which have the job of assembling photographic evidence of an increase in the Sandinist revolutionaries' military effort. The increase in the number of incidents on the land and sea borders with Honduras shows that the Nicaraguans have legitimate reasons for anxiety: moreover the liberal opposition approved of the declaration of a state of emergency on the national territory 15 March.

But the decision to resort to the United Nations should be placed in a wider context. The previous day Mr Ortega had made the trip from Havana, which Mexican Foreign Minister Castaneda visited this weekend after several meetings with his American counterpart Haig. For his part, General Walters, Mr Reagan's roving ambassador for Latin America, recently had a meeting in Cuba with Mr Rodriguez, number three in the Castro regime, whom Mr Haig had already seen in Mexico in November 1981.

Therefore, you begin to think that little Nicaragua and tiny El Salvador, where hundreds of people (including how many more journalists?) are doomed to perish in the next few days with the approach of the 28 March elections, are modest stakes in the arrangement which powers greater than they are beginning to seek.

At the beginning of his term of office Mr Reagan was tempted to use strong-arm methods with his turbulent Latin neighbors, with those poor people tempted by Marxist "recipes" spurned almost everywhere else. But he was forced to bow to the evidence: Since Vietnam, American opinion, that "final argument" of the most powerful world democracy, has no longer wanted to involve its children in that type of dirty war. That leaves the path of indirect intervention (countries like Argentina, Guatemala and Honduras can have their role in that) and that of discussion. Washington is clearly keeping those two irons in the fire. But the idea of a vast bargaining is making progress.

Such a solution presupposes that the "secret" dialogue between Washington and Havana should progress toward a normalization of relations between the two capitals. That hypothesis implies a much more than bilateral examination of the outstanding problems. This is not only because of the presence of Havana's troops in Angola and of Castro's advisers in one-fourth of the world's countries but also because of the very special role played by Cuba, which is at present chairman of the nonaligned countries but is also a member of the community of socialist countries.

That would explain the ambiguities or even inconsistencies of Mr Haig on the usefulness of having a dialogue with Moscow on Central America. If there were to be a dialogue, it would be a world dialogue and Cuba and Central America, among others, would be stakes in it.

LE MONDE: EGYPTIAN-ARAB RELATIONS IMPROVING

[Editorial: "The Egyptian-Arab Thaw"]

[Text] The restoration of Sinai to Egypt in a little more than 1 month's time and the arrival in Israel of the first elements of the multinational force are reviving the debate on the most important achievement of As-Sadat's "separate peace" and, more generally, on the merits of the assassinated rais. Although the religious authorities in Israel are calling for a day "of fasting and prayer," while Jerusalem executes the obligations laid down in the Washington treaty to the letter, voices are being raised in the Arab world to rehabilitate the man who signed the peace treaty and, hence, was the target of furious attacks.

Speaking bluntly, as is his custom, Moroccan King Hassan II expressed the view that "any self-respecting Arab country ought to decree a holiday on 25 April," the day when the last Israeli soldier will leave Sinai. For his party, Bahrain Prime Minister Shaykh al-Khalifah, who, in this case, also expresses the views of his powerful Saudi ally and neighbor, stated that Egypt "will be welcomed with open arms" when it deems fit to rejoin the "Arab family."

At a time when assessments are starting to be made, the moderate Arabs -- especially through their press -- are all ardently hoping to restore relations with Egypt and even to resume the financial aid they suspended 3 years ago. They cannot praise President Mubarak too highly, and for his part he has made conciliatory statements regarding the Arab regimes, even those in the opposing camp like his turbulent Libyan neighbor. In addition, he has translated the military aid which his predecessor had given Iraq in its conflict with Iran into terms of diplomatic support. Finally, by refusing to go to Jerusalem, he has in a way made up for the pain which many Arabs had felt on seeing As-Sadat go there, even if he did pray at the Al-Aqsa Mosque.

A total Egyptian-Arab reconciliation would require much more. The Arab world's division, which is not new, is the result of many splits, and the attitude toward the Egyptian-Israeli peace was added to many other causes of disagreements. The examination of the Fahd plan -- put forward at the Fes summit and which could be placed on the agenda again -- would provide an excuse for a meeting.

The crucial problem of the Palestinian people's future -- a sphere in which As-Sadat's failure is clear -- remains in full. Until it is settled and while the Arab grievances toward Israeli policy remain, Cairo will be unable to aspire to regain a dominant position in the region. Nonetheless, the restoration of the borders of the biggest country in the Arab world is bound to be a positive event. It will lead its partners to restore to it at least part of the place in the region to which its population and history entitle it.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS' CONGRESS TO CONFIRM COALITION

AU260924 Rome ANSA in English 0837 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Text] Milan, 26 Mar (ANSA) -- The Social Democrats [PSDI], minor partners in Giovanni Spadolini's coalition government, are expected to overwhelmingly confirm the confidence in the party leadership and policies during their ongoing national congress here. The 19th PSDI congress goes into its third day today with most of the delegates convinced that there is no alternative to the current ruling arrangement in which they are partnered with the Christian Democrats (DC), the Socialist Party (PSI), the Republicans (PRI) and the Liberals (PLI).

PSDI President Giuseppe Saragat and Secretary Pietro Longo both underscored the party's firm opposition to any government crisis or early elections. The leaders of the coalition partners addressed the congress yesterday [word indistinct] the need to bolster their alliance at the national government level. However, DC Secretary Flaminio Piccoli did not share Longo's view that Italy's viable political spectrum was limited on the right by the Christian Democrats and on the left by the opposition Communists. Piccoli also sees with disfavor the alliances that some of the parties in the Spadolini administration have made with the Communists at a local government level.

Other party leaders to speak Thursday were PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi and Oddo Biasini for Spadolini's own Republican Party. Craxi continued to pressure for a clarification among the allied forces on basic policy orientations so as to better combat "electoral temptations" or attempts at heating up the political situation. Communist official Gianni Cervetti took issue with the address the PSDI secretary delivered to the congress, claiming that it fell far short of dealing adequately with the country's many serious problems.

Longo can count on the support of around 75 percent of the congress delegates. Two leftwing factions are led respectively by Labor Minister Michele di Giesi and former party Secretary Pier Luigi Romita. These minority forces are calling for an enlargement of the socialist area and espouse the leftwing alternative dear to the hearts of the Italian Communist Party (which sees a leftist coalition in which the DC is excluded).

WEST MUST TAKE ADVANTAGE OF DIVISIONS IN OPEC

PM231519 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 23 Mar 82 p 16

[Editorial: "Breaking OPEC's Grip"]

[Text] Let us not mince words. The formation of OPEC and the two oil price rise shocks of the 1970s have been disastrous, not only for the industrialised world, but to an even greater extent for developing countries. OPEC has given the West "stagflation" and unemployment; it has made insatiable and desperate debtors out of its Third World brothers.

The fact that OPEC is now in trouble -- faced with falling oil prices it can do little in the short-term to stabilise -- is largely the result of the greed and stupidity of some of its members. By pricing oil at levels the market could not bear, OPEC has driven the West into recession and has intensified the search for alternative sources of supply and conservation. It is a classic example of killing the goose that lays the golden egg.

Under these circumstances it would be utter hypocrisy not to admit to a little schadenfreude. It would also be lugubrious in the extreme not to give wholehearted thanks for the opportunity that lower oil prices and dwindling OPEC surpluses give us. It is, however, an opportunity which could easily be squandered. The last time oil prices fell, six years ago, individuals and companies quickly returned to their oil wasteful ways only to be burned in 1979 when the Iranian revolution took three million barrels a day off the market and prices doubled.

The key to reduce OPEC's influence is to understand what kind of animal it is. Above all, OPEC can only be united at a time when prices are rising as a result of market shortages. When prices go soft or start to fall because supply outstrips demand by just a couple of million barrels a day, disagreements emerge between those countries, like Nigeria and Venezuela, who are desperate to maintain revenue, and the super-rich Arabs, like the Saudis and Kuwaitis, who are more interested in price stability.

The objective for the West must be to encourage those divisions by continuing to lessen its dependence on OPEC oil. Western governments must, at the very least, maintain the real price of oil by taxing it higher as the price falls and pass back the revenue in the form of indirect tax cuts -- that is the only way to encourage greater conservation efforts. Given that even the Saudis are reaching their minimum realistic level of output (below about 6.5 million barrels a day they could start to lose wellhead pressure) and given that Iran and Iraq must restart production in the near future the industrialized world has a real chance of breaking free from OPEC's stranglehold. We must not muff it this time.

SPOKESMAN REAFFIRMS RIGHT TO AEGEAN EXPLORATION

NC252014 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1930 GMT 25 Mar 82

[Text] In reply to a question in connection with a report in a morning newspaper referring to Greek-Turkish affairs, the government spokesman has stated: 1) The report is not correct, 2) in none of its demarches has the Greek Government referred to the first page of the Bern document, 3) the Greek Government considers it to be its inalienable right to conduct exploration, drilling and mining on Greece's Aegean continental shelf; 4) the relevant programs for exploration, drilling and mining are being formulated and studied.

10 DAYS' DETENTE IN AEGEAN UPSET BY TURKS

[By Panos Loukakos]

[Text] The Greek ambassador in Ankara, Papoulias, submitted a new protest Monday to the Turkish Foreign Ministry against Turkish violations of Greek airspace. Mr Papoulias pointed out the dangers the recent violations can have for relations between the two countries. He stressed that the Greek Government is not prepared to allow a continuation of the tactics introduced by the Turkish Air Force under the pretext of the Sea Wolf exercises.

Aside from the protest, however, it is clear that the recent airspace violations -- especially those intentionally carried out after completion of the Turkish military exercises in the Aegean -- upset the temporary detente in Greek-Turkish relations that was being established in the past 10 days. This is so because 10 days ago the Turkish Government had accepted a Greek proposal not to continue creating tension between the two countries so that at some time in the future prerequisites could be created for a Greek-Turkish dialogue on a fresh basis. Nevertheless new provocations have occurred and have changed the situation.

In essence the new events upset this unwritten agreement between both sides that, for a period of time, the Greek and the Turkish Governments refrain from making any statement or launching any action against each other. It is already clear that the Turkish side has observed the part on making statements but not the one on carrying out activities. Consequently it is reasonable to suppose that, seeing this tactic being continued, the Greek Government can disassociate completely itself from the initial unwritten agreement.

Meanwhile, yesterday's New York TIMES dealt with the recent aggravation in Greek-Turkish relations. The TO VIMA New York correspondent, Evstathiadhis, reported that the U.S. paper pointed out that the Greek Government assured Ankara that it will stop its Aegean oil prospecting and will also stop any activities to limit the tension with Turkey. However, this report is strange, to say the least, given the fact that there is no such assurance from the Greek Government to Ankara. The Turkish Government was simply informed that at this stage the current prospecting program does not envisage new prospecting beyond that carried out in the open sea of Thasos between 19 and 29 January. But the Greek side did not commit itself to any such future prospecting. The same report also says that "assurances" for the termination of prospecting were given in a letter by Prime Minister Papandreou to the Turkish Government but, as responsible sources have stressed, such a letter does not exist and has never been sent to Ankara.

DEFENSE MINISTER SAYS U.S. RELATIONS 'POSITIVE'

TA252056 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 25 Mar 82

[Text] National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken has said that relations between Turkey and the United States are developing in a positive manner and that there are no problems whatever between the two allies. Bayulken, who went to Washington after attending the NATO conference in which he noted that following the assessment, until recently, of Central Europe as a possible area for a clash, now there is a tense atmosphere in the Middle East and southwest Asia.

Pointing out that due to its location, Turkey has gained importance, Bayulken said the Turkish armed forces must be modernized. He noted that his government considers U.S. aid to Turkey insufficient, adding that this aid is expected to be raised to the desired level in the next year. In reply to a question, Bayulken said Turkey is continuing its efforts to put an end to the Iran-Iraq war within the framework of the Islamic conference goodwill initiatives and will continue these efforts in the future.

In Washington Bayulken will meet with Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Vice President George Bush and members of Congress. On 30 March he will go to Canada on an official visit. Meanwhile, it has been announced that the United States will sell equipment worth $57 million to Turkey in a bid to modernize its airports. The announcement was made by the U.S. Defense Department.

On Security, NATO

TA260731 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Text] National Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken has said that the NATO countries do not have the means to defend themselves against Soviet medium-range missiles. Bayulken was interviewed on U.S. television after the Colorado Springs meetings of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group. In the interview, Bayulken recalled that recently the Soviet Union had deployed 300 SS-20 missiles in Europe and said this situation was against the interests of the NATO countries. Our correspondent in Washington reports that Bayulken pointed out that accepting Brezhnev's proposal would mean letting the other side have the upper hand. Asked to comment on the power of the Soviet Union and its willingness to protect this power, Bayulken said Turkey's foreign policy was based on the principle of peace at home and peace in the world. He added that Turkey has good relations with its neighbors, and the Soviet Union is no exception. The national defense minister stressed that Turkey has an important place in the NATO alliance and that it is a loyal member of the alliance.

In a news conference in Washington yesterday, Bayulken was asked whether Turkey opposed the military strengthening of Greece. He replied: We see this as the strengthening of NATO's southeastern flank. And we see Greece as a valuable ally of Turkey and NATO. Bayulken concluded by saying: Problems may arise between neighbors, but this does not mean they should prevent the benefits the alliance provides for its members.

Today the national defense minister will attend a luncheon given in his honor by Senator John Tower, the Senate Armed Services Committee chairman. Bayulken will then meet Vice President George Bush. On 29 March he will meet Secretary of State Haig and on 30 March he will go to Canada for an official visit.

ULUSU CONDEMNS ISRAELI ACTIONS ON WEST BANK

TA251549 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1545 GMT 25 Mar 82

[Text] Ankara, 25 Mar (AA) -- Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu received Thursday 17 Muslim and Arab countries' diplomatic mission chiefs and told them: "Turkey will make every effort to prevent Israeli acts which increasingly threaten peace and security. Turkey would be in solidarity with Muslim and Arab countries to this effect," he said.

The government statement said, in brief: "Recently, Israel has sped up the policy of escalating tension in the Middle East. Israel abolishes especially in the West Bank elected municipal assemblies and puts them under her own jurisdiction.

"Our government denounces Israel's such act aimed at virtually annexing the occupied territories in violation of international law. The decision to abolish Al-Birah municipal assembly must immediately be repealed. We condemn and demand an immediate halt to the actions in the West Bank and Gaza which has caused deaths and injury to civilian population including women and children. In the occupied territories, it is an international obligation to implement the 1949 Geneva Convention."

SPOKESMAN REPORTS ON CONSTITUTION COMMITTEE WORK

TA251258 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 25 Mar 82

[Text] Sener Akyol, Consultative Assembly Constitutional Committee spokesman, has said that with the establishment of the main principles of the constitution in May, the system that will make up the framework of the constitution will be determined. In a news conference in Ankara, Akyol discussed the activities of the Constitutional Committee during the past month. He said the new constitution would be prepared in light of Turkey's constitutional tradition and the country's past experiences, that it would be democratic, pluralistic and at the level of international norms regarding rights and freedoms.

Akyol said the views of the Consultative Assembly members, private persons and organizations that had been conveyed to the committee on the new constitution were being evaluated systematically and that the main trends in these views were emerging. Akyol said the committee is now studying the period between 1961-80. Akyol stated that the committee had not asked for the views of members of the pre-12 September political parties except for the Central Administrative Council members. However, he added, they might do so in the future. He said several experts from scientific circles directly concerned with the constitution had not yet conveyed their views and that the committee is waiting to hear their opinions.

AUSTRIA

ANTI-U.S. EL SALVADOR DEMONSTRATION IN VIENNA

AU251339 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 25 Mar 82 pp 1-2

[Summary] In Vienna last night more than 2,000 people participated in a demonstration on the occasion of the second anniversary of the assassination of Archbishop Romero, thus drawing attention to the brutal struggle of the U.S.-backed El Salvadoran military junta against the Salvadoran people. "The demonstrators were chanting: 'United States, get out of Central America' and displayed slogans such as 'Halt the U.S. intervention' and 'No to the Reagan Western in Central America.'

"Before the beginning of the demonstration, a representative of the Austrian-Cuban Society stressed that the same forces that are threatening El Salvador with military intervention also want to 'destabilize' Nicaragua, threaten Cuba, and are building the neutron bomb that is meant for us Europeans."

At the concluding rally which was held on the Graben Square in Vienna's first district, the representative of the El Salvador Solidarity Committee referred to the forthcoming "elections" in his country as a "farce." "The speaker of the Nicaragua Committee emphatically protested against the daily lies about Nicaragua which, as he said literally, are being spread by the 'Hollywood ham, Reagan.'

"Werner Feinmann of the Vienna Socialist Youth called the events in Central America a war of the U.S.-supported military against the people. He came out against Austrian arms exports to Latin American military dictatorships.

"Wolfgang Rainer, chairman of the Austrian Communist Youth, expressed his conviction that the people of El Salvador would have won victory long ago if it were not for the U.S. interference in the interest of the monopolies. 'The stronger the solidarity with Latin America, the better it will be for us in Europe,' Rainer said, pointing out the deadly threat posed by U.S. imperialism.

"On behalf of the Christians participating in the demonstration, Herbert Berger called it a scandal that within the church it still has not been realized what is going on in Central America. He stressed that the persecuted priests are supporting the people. The Catholic Workers Youth sent a solidarity address to the demonstration, expressing its support for the manifestation and its regret that it could not participate in it because this question 'still has not been clarified' within the church."

GOVERNMENT REJECTS TOUGHER POLISH SANCTIONS

LD252218 Montreal Domestic Service in English 1900 GMT 25 Mar 82

[Text] Canada's minister for external affairs, Mark MacGuigan, says new restrictions on trade with Poland would bring more disruption to the Polish people. Mr MacGuigan yesterday rejected opposition demands for tougher sanctions against Warsaw and Moscow until martial law in Poland is ended, and Mr MacGuigan announced that Canada would provide another $200,000 for food and clothing for Poles.

The foreign affairs critic [as heard] for the Progressive-Conservative party says the limited range of sanctions which Canada supports has done little to force an end to military rule in Poland. John Crosbie has called for an end to easy credit terms for Polish purchases of Canadian grain. Mr Crosbie also said Canada should refuse to enter into new subsidized commercial agreements with all Soviet bloc countries and Mr Crosbie says the government should not renew existing friendship treaties and it should ban the import of the Soviet-built Lada automobiles.

NEW CUBAN AMBASSADOR COMMENTS ON RELATIONS

LD260426 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1900 GMT 25 Mar 82

[Report by Hector Arenas]

[Text] The new Cuban ambassador in Madrid, Oscar Garcia Fernandez, has arrived in Madrid bearing a personal message from Fidel Castro to the Spanish prime minister. He replaces the outgoing Ambassador Alfaras Varela, who has returned to Havana after 6 years in Madrid. What is the state of relations between Spain and Cuba in the view of the new Cuban diplomatic representative?

[Begin recording] I think that relations between Cuba and Spain remain at a very satisfactory level. They are actually good. They are relations which reflect the historical and cultural tradition which has existed between the two peoples. I am sure that there is always the possibility of deepening and developing them further and this will be the principal objective of my ambassadorship. [end recording]

Meanwhile, the new Cuban ambassador to Spain said that there is the possibility of an agreement between Cuba and the United States, with the mediation of Mexico, on the present crisis in Central America as long as it does not involve a violation of national principles.

SCHMIDT WARNS USSR ON HOPES OVER MISSILE MOVE

LD291056 Hamburg DPA in German 0947 GMT 29 Mar 82

[Embargoed by DPA until 1900 GMT 29 March]

[Text] Bonn, 29 Mar (DPA) -- Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has warned the Soviet leadership, in connection with their recently announced moratorium on missiles, against entertaining the hope that the West will not counterarm in the event the Geneva negotiations on European medium-range weapons prove unsuccessful. "This hope will lead nowhere," Schmidt said Monday in an interview with Swedish television.

The NATO dual decision on medium-range weapons is indispensable to the security of Western Europe, and the decision will not be abandoned, the chancellor affirmed. The Soviets must remain convinced that should the negotiations be unsuccessful, the American missiles will be deployed. This makes him feel sure, Schmidt said, that the negotiations are being conducted seriously.

The Geneva negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union, in the view of the head of government, "have been conducted speedily so far, and up to now there has been no cause to criticize either side." The recent break for some weeks is, according to him, for the purpose of analyzing the position of the other side, as is completely normal and natural.

On the Soviet missile moratorium, Schmidt said that if this is a sign of Soviet willingness to scrap these weapons later, then retrospectively one would be able to assess this unilateral moratorium as a positive sign. At present it is "a very interesting gesture," yet he would have preferred for such proposals to have been made at the negotiation table. Now the impression is arising that Moscow wants to play down the negotiations. Moscow's step is quite certainly aimed at public opinion in Europe and is meant to make it look as if the Soviet Union has taken an important step. "I don't see it that way," Schmidt said, and once again expressed his "great concern" about the fact the Soviet Union has "armed on a massive scale."

Siting of NATO Missiles

LD291030 Hamburg DPA in German 0952 GMT 29 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 29 Mar (DPA) -- The minister of state at the Foreign Office, Peter Corterior (SPD), has confirmed that preparations are underway for the construction necessary for the siting of new NATO medium-range missiles in Europe. This does not, however, permit the conclusion that a firm decision has been made on counterarming. Corterier disclosed this on Monday in an interview on Deutschlandfunk. The time factor must be taken into account in the construction, because if counterarming should prove to be necessary, then certain preparations would have to begin before 1983. This is also necessary to convince the Russians that both parts of the NATO dual decision are being observed.

DER SPIEGEL reported in its latest edition that the FRG will be paying DM560 million next year, over a quarter of the NATO construction budget of DM2.2 billion. Corterier stressed that should the disarmament negotiations in Geneva be successful, we would be able to sustain the expense. In any event, part two of the NATO dual decision -- the offer to negotiate with the Soviet Union -- has priority.

BRANDT, OTHERS APPEAL FOR SPD UNITY AFTER LOSSES

LD281634 Hamburg DPA in German 1348 GMT 28 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 28 Mar (DPA) -- With the Munich SPD congress in April in mind, Party Chairman Willy Brandt and approximately 100 politicians of the Social Democratic center and rightwing have called for unity in their party, which has suffered heavy electoral defeats.

Brandt's statements and discussions among the "Darmstadt Circle," which is preparing the congress in Seeheim near Darmstadt with leading SPD politicians such as Presidium Member Hans-Jochen Vogel and Federal Ministers Hans Apel and Herbert Ehrenberg, also reflect efforts to clarify a more independent Social Democratic policy distinct from that of its FDP coalition partner.

Alliance Breakup Fear

LD280810 Hamburg DPA in German 0002 GMT 28 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 28 Mar (DPA) -- Lower Saxony Minister-President Ernst Albrecht has reaffirmed his opinion that the Bonn SPD/FDP coalition is "objectively speaking...dead" and regards the eventuality of the government coalition breaking up as possible at any time. In an interview Sunday on Deutschlandfunk, Albrecht said that on questions of vital interest to the nation the SPD and FDP were no longer able to govern, mainly because the SPD was deeply divided.

"There are so many problems that cannot be solved by the SPD and FDP that it could lead to conflict at any time, which could result in dissolution of the coalition."

Albrecht named as possible reasons for a split the Hesse elections in September and the coalition partners failing to agree on an employment program if the planned increase in value added tax designed to finance the program failed to get through the Bundesrat. Albrecht stressed that this tax increase would not get through in the majority of CDU-ruled regions because it would raise unemployment.

STOLTENBERG 'IMPRESSED' AFTER TALKS IN U.S.

LD271656 Hamburg DPA in German 1214 GMT 27 Mar 82

[Text] Kiel/Hamburg, 27 Mar (DPA) -- Schleswig-Holstein Minister-President Gerhard Stoltenberg (CDU), following his return from a 1-week visit to the United States, was "very impressed" by his talks with politicians, scientists, economic experts and students. This was announced by State Secretary Gerd Behnke today in reply to an enquiry after Stoltenberg arrived in Hamburg at lunchtime.

The CDU politician gave several lectures in Washington and New York and talked with, among others, Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Eugene Rostow, the U.S. disarmament representative, and Paul Volcker. Questions on the NATO dual decision and problems of East-West economic relations were at the center of the talks. Stoltenberg will be giving a press conference in Kiel on Monday on details of his U.S. trip.

[Text] Waidhaus, 27 Mar (DPA) -- Frontier organs of the CSSR on Friday evening refused transit to eight German Red Cross trucks carrying relief goods for Poland at the Bavarian-Czechoslovak frontier point at Waidhaus-Rozvadov. While at first no explanation for the ban was forthcoming, it was said an hour later by the Czechoslovak side that the trucks were not properly sealed. Bavarian frontier police said that so far not a single truck carrying relief goods for Poland had been sealed. The drivers of the convoy began their detour via the GDR last night.

MAUROY EXPLAINS OUTCOME OF CANTONAL ELECTIONS

LD261810 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Premier Mauroy received the press this afternoon. Mauroy commented for the first time on the results of the cantonal elections. He said the left and right have been neck-and-neck in France since 1974 and that France has therefore not suddenly become socialist. He also said there is a balance of political forces which cannot be altered in only a few months. Mauroy also stressed the local and rural character of the cantonal elections. He noted that the majority voting system favors overrepresentation of the (?opposition) and that the French have a habit of opposing the party in power. All this together, in the view of the premier, explains the results achieved by the majority parties in the cantonal elections.

Without there being any link between cause and effect, the prime minister made a point of stressing that a new phase of governmental action is beginning today. After the structural reforms, after the adoption of the ordinances, the [word indistinct] of change, the question now is to apply what has been decided. This is no time for a pause, and Mauroy, in fact, this afternoon opened a new act of the Mitterrand presidency or, at least, a new scene in Act I -- the one marking the deepening of change.

Defferre, Jospin Comment

PM261339 Paris LE MONDE in French 23 Mar 82 p 3

[Excerpt] Mr Gaston Defferre (interior minister): "The PS, which has done better than in the first round, is still the leading party in France as regards votes and seats. The result of the canton elections is not a success for the government parties. It is better to lose a canton election than a parliamentary election.

"I was criticized by Mr Lecanuet. He cast doubt on my intentions by saying that my intention in putting forward the decentralization law was to enable the left to govern all the French departments, or at least a very large majority of them. I would like to point out that before the decentralization law was passed it was the prefects who were in charge of the department executives. The prefects are under the government's orders.

"In having that law adopted, I knew perfectly well that the opposition, which already held half of the department council chairmanships, had a chance of keeping a large number of its chairmanships, probably half, so that, by having decentralization adopted, I gave the opposition the opportunity to administer a large number of French departments.

"Despite this evening's results, I intend to continue to present to parliament the rest of the bills on decentralization and, in particular, the bill on the distribution of powers between the state and the departments, the communes and the regions, to the benefit of the regional communities [collectivites territoriales].

"Most of the major reforms which have been undertaken by the government have been passed but not yet implemented, or at least not completely. We are at a stage when people see the disadvantages of this reform emphasized by the opposition and when the vast majority of the population is still not in a position to appreciate the advantages of these reforms, which will be felt in the next few months."

On the possibility of electoral reform, Mr Defferre stated: "Electoral reform was planned. It was announced by the majority parties during the parliamentary election campaign. It will therefore be prepared like any other electoral reform and submitted to parliament."

Mr Lionel Jospin (PS first secretary): "The PS will be the leading party in terms of seats, and that is not a bad result. But it is not possible to say that the left has won the elections. There will be a larger number of department councils led by the right than we had hoped. What is the reason for these results? There has been an automatic reflex effect. The left was carried a long way in the last parliamentary elections by the dynamism created by the presidential election. It swept back into positions more in keeping with the balance of political forces in France. The right then mobilized more fully than the left, viewed these elections as political revenge and made them into a national issue.

"The policy we have started to pursue has not yet borne fruit in many respects. That worried the rightwing electorate more than it mobilized the leftwing. Our policy will be continued. Nonetheless this is a warning that must be heeded in preparing for the next elections, especially the commune elections, and I hope these results will show that when you want real change you come up against powerful forces which sometimes use rather undemocratic methods. I think this will galvanize all those who want change."

CHEYSSON CONDEMNS ISRAEL'S WEST BANK 'REPRESSION'

LD261912 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Text] Claude Cheysson today condemned the Israeli repression of the Palestinians on the West Bank. We must categorically denounce, said the minister of external relations, measures that are indisputably illegal. Cheysson especially deplored the dismissal of the mayors of Nablus and Ramallah, who had been democratically elected, he pointed out.

PS Protest

PM261153 Paris LE MONDE in French 24 Mar 82 p 4

[Text] The PS on 22 March issued a "very strong protest over the Israeli occupation authorities' decision to dissolve the elected council of Al-Birah on the West Bank." The PS says in a communique that, "coming after the annexation of the Golan, this measure and the violence that followed it threaten to lead to a gradual annexation of the West Bank."

INCREASED AID TO SOMALIA PLEDGED TO SIAD BARRE

PM261119 Paris LE MONDE in French 25 Mar 82 p 8

[Text] France is to step up its aid to Somalia. This was stated Tuesday by Minister Delegate for Cooperation and Development Jean-Pierre Cot following the luncheon given by Francois Mitterrand for President Siad Barre.

"We want to increase France's aid to Somalia," Mr Cot said, "which is at present very modest as far as welfare and development are concerned, though the Central Bank is involved in a major dam project which hitherto lacked funds but which must be completed.... We must increase this aid progressively and we intend to do so because we have good relations with Somalia and we have every reason to want to consolidate them.... The fact that it is one of the least developed countries constitutes a further incentive for us."

Mr Cot specified that the issue of military aid was not broached during the luncheon, which was attended by Mr Hernu.

Minister of Finance and Economy Jacques Delors said: "We will increase economic cooperation as far as possible. We will be rigorous but supportive."

MARCHAIS QUESTIONED ON POLAND, PCF VOTE STRENGTH

LD262114 Paris Domestic Service in French 1200 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Interview with Georges Marchais, general secretary of the PCF, by Paris radio correspondents Bernard Valette, Michel Lemerle and Alain Barbeaux in Paris -- live]

[Excerpts] [Marchais] I am honest with my party. I know very well there are comrades and workers who think we should become differentiated from the Socialist Party, that we should state the revolutionary virtue of our party, and that in order to establish this difference the party should lay it on thick. What do I want to say to these comrades and workers in the Central Committee? I say: Let us be serious, comrades. We went into the presidential elections with our proposals, with our program, with solutions which, as I see it, are capable of taking the country out of the crisis. However, the French people have decided. They elected Francois Mitterrand based on his program. Moreover, we concluded an agreement with the Socialist Party on bases on which we found it possible to do so. We must keep to the pledges we have made; we must not engage in an auction. Consequently, as you see, more must be done, because the cantonal elections show that there is legitimate discontent and impatience; but this should not lead to auctions. That is what I wanted to say.

[Question] How do you assess the PCF's popularity after the cantonal elections?

[Answer] (?I believe we have the time).... [questioner interrupts]

[Question] A word about Poland. It is important, after all.

[Answer] I shall come back to that presently. We have done this at the congress. We have pointed out the party's loss of ground, the loss during the past 20 years, and I myself have assumed my part of the responsibility for it. We have analyzed all these things. But the cantonal elections indicate new factors which have come about since the presidential elections. Well, what do you want? In the cantonal elections we noted that there are cantons in which we gained a lot, and there are cantons in which we are between the level of the legislative elections and of the 1976 cantonal elections and that there are cantons in which we scored more than in the 1976 cantonal elections -- few, but they exist. There are cases in which we gained and others in which we lost. What happened? There are people who are discontent, who say [words indistinct]. We have just spoken of this.

There are people who have interpreted our stand on Poland as approval of what is happening in Poland, while I told the Central Committee we have not approved and, moreover, it is not our job to do so.

[Question] Have you disapproved of it?

[Answer] There are people who do not agree with it. This is clear. There are voters who are impressed by the campaign carried out. We have taken a difficult and responsible stand [words indistinct] but we are above all internationalisms. We love the Polish people. We are attached to Poland and we wanted to prevent bloodshed in Poland. We wanted to encourage the necessary, and I said this yesterday, the necessary reforms, economic, social and democratic, in order to get the country out of the crisis.

[Question] Some say you took this stand merely because you are aligned with Moscow. This is a basic problem which recurs.

[Answer] [Words indistinct]

[Question] This loses you votes.

[Answer] Undoubtedly. But nonetheless there are people who, when they take a closer look, see that the Communists are not aligned with anybody. They carry out their policy in complete independence. Do you want me to illustrate this with some visits? I shall do so. At the end of this week I will go to Nicaragua and Cuba, and before the holidays I will attend the Yugoslav party congress.

Our communist party is an independent party. It establishes its policy in complete independence. We want to build a socialist society based on no model whatsoever. It will be socialism in the French style from start to finish -- and I said so yesterday. This being said, I will go to the Yugoslav congress. I will meet Berlinguer in May -- not immediately, because I will not be here -- but in May I will. I will also go to China this year. Consequently, as you see, the PCF.... [questioner interrupts]

[Question] No date fixed yet?

[Answer] This year, but no date is fixed. But let us go back to our discussion; otherwise no one will be able to follow the reasoning. Thus I believe Poland also played a role in the discontent. All this explained the party settling at 16 percent of the votes. But this is an enormous force; 5 million men and women represent an enormous force.

[Question] What will you tell the uncommitted voters?

[Answer] Three things, or rather four. I will only list the titles of the chapters. In tomorrow's L'HUMANITE you will read my [Central Committee plenum] closing speech. And what I can tell the voters, they will be able to read there: First is that in the field, day after day, within the framework established, through presidential and legislative elections, you will be able to see on site that the Communists are present everywhere to act on and defend your interests. This is the first thing. To the electorate, I say secondly: This battle has the aim of a socialist society in a French style -- socialism as defined at our last congress. The third thing is that we want to carry out a foreign policy of independence, peace and security for our country. We are not aligned with anybody. We are an independent party concerned first of all with the interests of the workers, of the people and of the nation. This in no way contradicts our solidarity with the world forces struggling for independence. The fourth thing I am saying to the voters is that our party is an open, democratic, imaginative one, a party ready to fight, a party in which everyone can find his or her place. This party is needed by the workers so they can go forward. That is whay I am saying to these people.

PRESS VIEWS OUTCOME OF REAGAN-PERTINI MEETING

AU261739 Rome ANSA in English 1532 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Rome, 26 Mar (ANSA) -- The meeting between "such different personalities" as Italian chief-of-state Sandro Pertini and United States President Ronald Reagan in Washington Thursday was the leitmotif of much of today's press commentary on the visit. The photo of the two men embracing when they greeted each other yesterday in Washington was published on the front page of practically all leading newspapers.

"The meeting between the two men with such different backgrounds and such different opinions", said Turin's LA STAMPA for example, "was anticipated with curiosity and not without a degree of apprehension." Reagan's speech was unusually long and not at all formal, the daily noted, "and the Italian president made no attempt in his own remarks to Reagan to water down their differences in generalities or in protocol language." "Standing up the U.S. President," the same paper went on, "Pertini spoke at length in straightforward and sometimes impassioned terms." "Only a free-thinking and sincere person like Pertini could have reminded a Republican president about Franklin Delano Roosevelt's political message."

The popularity of the Italian president's personality was stressed by IL CORRIERE DELLA SERA, which noted how rare it was for so much praise to be heaped on the "man" himself when a foreign chief-of-state visits Washington. "In that atmosphere", IL CORRIERE commented, it was "a natural development that the two men tuned into each other so well." According to the Christian Democrat Party (DC) mouthpiece IL POPOLO, the embrace with which Reagan greeted Pertini was not scheduled in the protocol. "It can be said that the two men were almost trying to outdo each other in their mutual shows of sympathy," IL POPOLO went on, and their kind feelings towards each other were reflected in what were described as "unusually warm remarks of greeting."

This may be the first time that an Italian president is visiting the United States when that country is more anxious than his to intensify bilateral relations, the Communist Party (PCI) organ L'UNITA commented today. The truth, according to the PCI newspaper, is that the conservative administration in Washington accorded "a full-pitch fanfare welcome to the first Socialist Italian president to set foot on American soil basically because of the diplomatic strains building up between the U.S. and the major nations of the old world."

Further Press Comment

AU271608 Roma ANSA in English 1537 GMT 27 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Rome, 27 Mar (ANSA) -- Among the results of the talks Italian President Sandro Pertini has had in Washington was the explicit promise from Ronald Reagan that Italy will never again be left out of Western summit talks, wrote CORRIERE DELLA SERA today. As the Milan daily put it, there would be no more Guadalupes.

Another Milan paper, IL GIORNO, picked out for comment a remark Reagan made to the effect that Pertini with his life had shown that free men, be they on the right or left, could militate in the same camp. This could be the first time that the American President has ever admitted that a Socialist might be a free man working for democracy, IL GIORNO said.

Rome's MESSAGGERO noted that Pertini found the American President extremely personable. The paper also highlighted Pertini's call for international relations dedicated to detente and grounded in mutual respect. We are dramatically reminded of this urgent need by events in Poland, Pertini told the guests at a banquet given in his honor at the White House. Other hotspots persist and worsen in Africa, in Latin America and in the Middle East, the Italian president noted. No one can remain indifferent to the human tragedies they cause, so that it becomes the duty of every free man to do everything he can to end this strife, IL MESSAGGERO quoted Pertini as saying.

CP OFFICIAL FEARS SPLIT AT MAY PARTY CONGRESS

LD281442 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1300 GMT 28 Mar 82

[Text] In the view of the deputy chairman of the Finnish Communist Party [SKP], Taisto Sinisalo, the party is threatened by a split at its special congress in May. Sinisalo, who spoke at the SKP conference in Tampere, accused part of the party majority of being dictatorial, of carrying on an undisguised power struggle and even of personal careerism. According to Sinisalo, the SKP trend to the right must be stopped and the party will have to increase its cooperation with the CPSU. The SKP conference, which is being held for the first time, has been discussing the main line of the party and the political situation.

MINISTRY SEES NOTHING NEW IN BREZHNEV PROPOSAL

PM221139 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 17 Mar 82 p 8

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report: "Norwegian Skepticism"]

[Text] "President Brezhnev's proposal to halt the deployment of SS-20 missiles does not really contain any new elements after a purely superficial assessment," Norwegian Foreign Ministry Under Secretary Eivin Berg told NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA.

Berg stressed that Brezhnev's demarche is limited to SS-20 missiles in the European part of the Soviet Union and does not include missiles deployed east of the Urals. "However, these missiles represent just as large a threat to Western Europe," Berg said, adding that Brezhnev's demarche would not reduce the total number of SS-20 missiles.

In reality, therefore, the Soviet proposals only mean freezing a considerable Soviet superiority in this type of weapon, Berg said, adding that it was this superiority which led to the NATO dual decision in December 1979.

ARGENTINA TOLD TO REMOVE CIVILIANS FROM ISLAND

[Excerpts] Britain has told Argentina to get its half dozen scrap merchants off the South Atlantic island of South Georgia as soon as possible. If they do not go the Royal Navy will remove them. The British request was made in a series of secret diplomatic exchanges in Buenos Aires and London over the past few days largely designed to keep the dispute over the men under control. The government has authorised the use of force to dislodge the scrap merchants, who are dismantling a whaling station, but only as the last resort.

Diplomatic Moves

LD290620 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0430 GMT 29 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Yesterday diplomats were continuing their bid to solve the "invasion" issue peacefully. As Britain's gunboat HMS Endurance lay anchored off South Georgia, in the South Atlantic -- and there were reports that Argentina had sent up to five warships to the area -- the British ambassador in Buenos Aires met Argentinian Foreign Ministry officials.

"We want to avoid at all costs any confrontation," said a British Embassy spokesman. "Certainly both sides are looking to find a diplomatic way out." The Defence Ministry said there were no plans to send reinforcements. The nearest British frigate is believed to be several-thousand miles away in the Caribbean and would take at least a week to reach the area.

DAILY TELEGRAPH WARNS U.S. ON CENTRAL AMERICA

PM251221 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 25 Mar 82 p 18

[Editorial: "Uncle Sam's Back Yard"]

[Text] On the eve of Sunday's controversial elections in El Salvador, the new coup in Guatemala illustrates the scant value of democratic processes in the present turmoil in Central America. It is surely a signal for the Americans, if they have the wisdom, to act upon it. Polls in the United States have shown President Reagan that he cannot hope to win popular support for the old fashioned remedy of "sending in the marines" or using more sophisticated, covert instruments of war. Guatemala -- much bigger, more dangerous, truly the key to Central America, trite though this sounds -- is a monument to the short-sighted, short-tempered policy of the Eisenhower-Dulles era.

In 1954 Washington was able to sweep aside a half-baked left-wing regime which had nevertheless begun long overdue social reform, on the pretext that it was bringing Soviet influence into the area. The cavalier transfer of this "problem" from the United Nations to the U.S.-dominated Organization of American States disturbed Westminster. Britain, mirabile dictu, was among the powers which refused America's request to search ships for communist arms on the high seas. Socialist France, then extricating itself from Indo-China, called, as now, for action to prevent bloodshed.

The challenge to America is how to "contain" the social and political upheaval south of the border without throwing its weight behind the maintenance of a social order that is a disgrace to the West. Neglect, not always benign, has characterized American and, let us admit it, European attitudes towards Latin America. But one or more faux pas now and the whole of Central America and Mexico might eventually be swept into the enemy camp, altering the entire world strategic situation. How much attention would America be able to pay to European security if the communists were sitting on the Rio Grande -- a border where not even hordes of famished Mexican job-seekers can be held back?

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS TURKISH AIRSPACE VIOLATIONS

NC262028 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Text] The Cyprus Government today protested to the United Nations recent violations of Cyprus airspace by Turkish military aircraft. In a letter to UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar, the republic's UN representative, Mousioutas, said flights by Turkish aircraft are a stark violation of Cyprus' sovereignty and are contrary to repeated UN resolutions. The letter says the violations occurred on 15 March and involved two Turkish aircraft during military maneuvers in the area north of Skillloura.

DURDURAN INTERVIEWED ON PROBLEMS OF SETTLEMENT

NC270919 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 27 Mar 82 pp 1, 10

[Interview with Chairman of the Turkish Cypriot Communal Liberation Party Durduran in Tripoli, Libya, 22 March]

[Excerpt] Question: Do you believe the Cyprus problem can be solved, and if so how?

Answer: I believe the Cyprus issue can be resolved. A permanent solution can only be found with peaceful means and with the continuation of the intercommunal talks. The solution must be based on a federal, bicommunal, secular [kosmikis] demilitarized republic, as provided in the summit agreements. We hope the details can be discussed constructively and sincerely and that a solution can be found soon.

Question: Do you believe foreign interference in Cyprus is an obstacle to solution?

Answer: Whenever there was a problem, foreign factors had the opportunity to influence and exploit it. Thus every foreign force that exerts influence in the eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East does not want a solution in Cyprus. Sometimes the foreigners maintain that detente in Greek-Turkish relations is more important than their interests in strategic advantage in Cyprus, but in reality this is not the truth.

Question: Shouldn't the Turkish Cypriots make concessions to help find a solution, such as the return of Famagusta for settlement?

Answer: I cannot speak on behalf of the government, and we don't wish to create obstacles in the intercommunal talks. We back intercommunal agreements on the basis of which practical measures will be adopted for the creation of a climate of good will.

Question: What practical measures can be adopted toward this?

Answer: There are many measures that can be adopted to create an atmosphere of good will and mutual confidence between the two communities. Like economic enterprises, to the extent of circulating the Cyprus pound all over the island, or the joint utilization of national resources, to the extent of reopening Nicosia International Airport. There are many, too many, measures that can be adopted.

Question: How do you see the stance of the government of President Kiprianou on the Cyprus problem?

Answer: We see that the stance of Mr Kiprianou's government is not constructive with regard to the Cyprus issue.

Question: In your opinion, is there a possibility of war between Greece and Turkey, and in such an eventuality what is Cyprus' position?

Answer: I hope that ultimately there will be no war between Greece and Turkey. I do not foresee such an end. If anything like this does happen, then I am concerned and anxious about Cyprus' fate. I hope no one will try to push things toward a war and exploit it in Cyprus.

[Excerpt] In a press conference yesterday, Minister of Industry and Energy Peponis stated that no foreign official has advised us not to obtain natural gas from the Soviet Union. GOVERNMENT PROTESTS ISRAELI WEST BANK ACTIONS

NC271652 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1500 GMT 27 Mar 82

[Statement issued by the General Press and Information Secretariat -- date not given]

[Text] The Greek Government protests in the strongest possible manner the events occurring these days in the West Bank area of Jordan and the area of Gaza. The behavior of Israeli authorities in these occupied areas -- through the forceful dismissal of lawful mayors, the deaths of noncombatant Palestinians and generally the trampling of the most fundamental human rights in violation of the Geneva Convention of 1949 -- constitutes, following the recent tragic annexation of the Golan Heights, new evidence of Israel's intention to disregard all international laws and UN decisions.

In solidarity with the Arab nation, and particularly with the suffering Palestinian people, Greece demands the immediate end of these acts of violence and will do whatever is possible to prevent any action that dramatically endangers peace in this sensitive area.

SPOKESMAN CONFIRMS GREEK 10-MILE AIRSPACE LIMIT

NC262245 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2200 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Text] A Foreign Ministry spokesman in Ankara has stated that Turkey has rejected the Greek demarches on violations of Greek airspace by Turkish aircraft, with the excuse that Turkey does not recognize the 10-mile limit. The government spokesman in Athens made the following statement:

For Greece, its national airspace is 10 miles, as legislatively ratified since 1931 and established from that time on by practice. It must be noted further that until 1974-1975 no one questioned the fact that Greek national airspace was 10 miles.

Further on Statement

NC271223 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1100 GMT 27 Mar 82

[Text] Referring to the Turkish allegations that they do not recognize the limits of Greek airspace, the government spokesman made the following statement:

The Turkish allegations expressed in Ankara that they do not recognize our 10-mile airspace limit indicate again that the Turkish leadership is putting forward unacceptable claims against our national area. It must be pointed out that until 1974 Ankara not only did not question our 10-mile limit, but also in the NOTAM for exercises always accepted the 10-mile limit. The government spokesman concluded that Ankara must know that Greece does not intend even to discuss its inalienable right, safeguarded since 1931 and confirmed internationally through constant practice.

MINISTER STRESSES INTENTION TO SEEK AEGEAN OIL

NC261924 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Text] Minister of Industry and Energy Peponis has issued the following statement:

A report in the European edition of a U.S. newspaper says the Greek Government allegedly has restricted prospecting for oil in the Aegean area exclusively within the framework of previous agreements with foreign companies. This report is inaccurate. The Ministry of Industry and Energy has instructed the public oil corporation to prepare and submit a program for exploration in all probable oil areas of the national area without restrictions. The government will decide, by appraising the economic and technical facts that will emerge from the public oil corporation's report, using the policy being followed for the country's self-sufficiency in energy as the criterion.

ATHENS TO BEAM RADIO, TV TO CYPRUS, BORDER AREA

NC261205 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 26 Mar 82 p 8

[Excerpt] Athens, 25 Mar (Special) -- According to reports from circles at the Ministry to the Prime Minister's Office, Prime Minister Papandreou has given special instructions to the appropriate services and has approved a budget of tens of millions of drachmas, for:

The installation of the necessary substations for the relay of television and voice programs by ERT [Hellenic Radio and Television] and by IENED [Armed Forces Information Service] so as to cover Cyprus and the border areas of continental Greece fully, particularly the areas that border Turkey. This would make it possible for Cyprus and the border areas to receive television and radio programs directly, something that cannot be done today.

Specifically the people of the border areas are compelled to watch Turkish programs from powerful relay stations the Turkish Radio and Television has established at points in eastern Thrace and on Turkish coastal areas opposite the Greek islands of the Aegean.

KKE URGES UNITY ON DISARMAMENT POLICY ISSUES

NC271924 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1900 GMT 27 Mar 82

[Text] Following a suggestion by KKE Secretary General Florakis, the party Central Committee has discussed the country's political situation and the KKE tactics within the new conditions being formulated after 5 months of the country's rule by PASOK.

A statement issued by the Presidium of the KKE Central Committee plenum stresses: We must exert every effort to rally all forces which are interested in peace and disarmament, regardless of any differences in other matters.

Concerning the policy the government has followed up to now, the statement says this policy is characterized by reneging, despite the fact that certain measures of a democratic nature have been adopted. Moreover, the statement identifies as "positive" the fact that the government has accepted the Brezhnev proposal which, it is stressed, constitutes a contribution to the cause of peace.

BAYULKEN SAYS U.S. UNDERSTANDS DEFENSE PROBLEMS

TA270844 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0800 GMT 27 Mar 82

[Text] National Defense Minister Umit Bayulken has said U.S. officials understand Turkey's defense problems. In Washington, Bayulken has held meetings with Vice President George Bush, members of the House of Representatives Foreign Affairs, Europe and Middle East subcommittees and the chairman of the Senate and House of Representatives Armed Services committees. Later Bayulken held a news conference for Turkish journalists and said his talks were held in a positive atmosphere of mutual understanding.

On Monday Bayulken will hold a meeting with U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig. He is expected to depart Washington on Tuesday for Canada as the official guest of Canadian National Defense Minister Gilles Lamontagne. Bayulken had left Turkey for the United States at the beginning of the week to attend the NATO Nuclear Planning Group meeting in Colorado Springs.

TV Interview

TA261612 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1505 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Washington, 26 Mar (AA) — Turkish Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken said Turkey, with a strong economy and army, would contribute not only to NATO deterrence but to stability in her own region. In an interview telecast on cable TV, Bayulken supported the NATO view, reiterated at the Nuclear Planning Group meeting at Colorado Springs, that the recent Brezhnev proposal was unacceptable, for it would give a lead to the Soviet Union in nuclear power. Turkey deplored the current conflict between Iran and Iraq, two neighbors with which Turkey had equally friendly relations.

Bayulken confiremd the calendar for restoration of democracy in Turkey announced by the head of state. He believed former political leaders would not be permitted to take an active part in future elections, but suggested it was necessary to wait for the new election and political parties laws to be drafted by the Consultative Assembly. He believed the interest of some European circles in Turkey's domestic affairs, verging on intevention, was a result of ideological solidarity among political parties.

AFGHAN REFUGEES TO BE RESETTLED IN HATAY AREA

TA261609 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1515 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Text] Ankara, 26 Mar (AA) — The first group of Afghan refugees to be resettled in Turkey will be housed temporarily in Hatay Province, spokesman for the Red Crescent Society of Turkey said. The Turkish Government had recently decided to receive Afghan families of Turkish origin comprising 4,500 individuals who had fled to Pakistan. A Turkish team now in Pakistan visiting the refugee camps will report to the special coordination committee at the Interior Ministry in Ankara in connection with the Afghan refugees

The Red Crescent, officials said, has already airlifted 200 million Turkish liras' worth of relief to the refugee camps in Pakistan, including food, blankets and medicine. The prospective refugees, including Uzbek, Turkmen, Kirghiz, Ayman and Uigur Turks, will be allowed to bring along their flocks of Karakul sheep, a valuable source of fur and yarn for carpets.

STEYR COMPANY CONFIRMS TANK SALES TO ARGENTINA

AU261219 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 26 Mar 82 p 9

[Text] A spokesman for the Steyr-Daimler-Puch Automotive Corp declared yesterday in comment on an AFP report from Buenos Aires on the sale of 27 "Cuirassier" tanks to Argentina that this delivery would be made under the contract concluded with the Argentine Government in June 1981. Two partial deliveries have already been made in 1981, according to the spokesman. The third delivery will be based on an option in the contract which is now being used by the buyer. Thus there is no new deal involved, but the company is merely fulfilling the valid purchase and delivery contract concluded in 1981. The spokesman denied reports that Steyr-Daimler-Puch was going to supply Argentina with a complete tank factory on a turnkey basis.

LD271224 Valleta Radio Mediterran in English 0700 GMT 27 Mar 82

[Text] Malta and the Libyan Jamahiriyah have exchanged instruments of ratification of the 1976 agreement referring their continental shelf dispute to the International Court of Justice at The Hague. The exchange was made at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Valleta between Foreign Affairs Minister Dr Alex Sceberra Trigona, and the secretary for foreign liaison, 'Abd al-'Ati al-'Ubaydi, after 2 days of talks. These followed last week's visit to Malta by Libyan leader Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi.

A joint communique said Mr al-'Ubaydi paid a courtesy visit to the president of Malta, Miss Agatha Barbara, before proceeding to talks with the minister of foreign affairs. During the meeting with Dr Sceberra Trigona, the outstanding points between the two countries were discussed and a mutually satisfactory solution was arrived at. This morning further talks were held and the instruments of ratification of the 1976 special agreement were exchanged between Mr al'Ubaydi and Dr Sceberra Trigona and the date of notification to the International Court of Justice was agreed upon. The communique continued to say that both Mr al-'Ubaydi and Dr Sceberra Trigona expressed their deep conviction that this normalization of relations between the two countries enables the improvement of their political and eocnomic relations.

It was also agreed that trade relations return to normal as from today and that the position of Libyan-Maltese joint ventures be strengthened. The communique ended by announcing that a mixed commission headed by the respective minister for foreign affairs was set up and will [words indistinct].

POLICE SEEK AUTHORS OF NEO-NAZI 'BLACK LIST'

AU291336 Vienna KURIER in German 27 Mar 82 p 3

[Erich Grolig report]

[Text] Austrian security police have launched a large-scale investigation to track down rightist-extremist elements who are believed to be closely cooperating with neo-Nazi underground groups in the FRG. The wanted extremists are suspected of having compiled a "black list" with the names of prominent figures from Austrian business and culture [according to Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG of 24 March, page 2, this list, circulated in the FRG, was called a "death list," containing the names of potential victims of neo-Nazi attacks as well as the names of several Jewish institutions as potential targets of attacks], and of operating a secret printing shop.

At this secret printing shop the so-called OESTERREICHISCHER BEOBACHTER is illegally printed once a month, and is disseminated primarily to former Nazis in the FRG and in Austria. To date, all efforts to track down the underground printing shop in Austria have been fruitless.

The state security police therefore believe that the printing shop is located in the FRG, probably in the Munich region. For that reason the Austrian state security police are closely cooperating with the Wiesbaden Federal Criminal Investigation Bureau which has also launched a large-scale search for the distributors of the "black list." This list, among others, contains the names of Andre Heller, Fritz Muliar, Hans Weigel [prominent cultural figures] and Simon Wiesenthal [head of the Jewish Documentation Center, who tracked down prominent Nazis, including Eichmann, after the war].

The list was distributed enclosed in a copy of the latest issue of OESTERREICHISCHER BEOBACHTER, primarily to recipients in the FRG. That is what has induced the state security police to assume that the people actually behind this action and the illegal publishers of the neo-Nazi underground paper are to be found in the FRG.

As has been learned from the Austrian Interior Ministry in this connection, there are already some indications that Austrian rightist extremists participated in the compilation of the "black list." According to a ministry source, the suspicion is directed against a number of "persons who are rather well known to the public," and against whom an investigation is pending because of a suspected violation of the ban on neo-Nazi activities. Should this suspicion prove to be justified, some arrests can be expected in the near future.

SOMALI PRESIDENT BEGINS VISIT, MEETS SCHMIDT

LD251336 Hamburg DPA in German 1111 GMT 25 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 25 Mar (DPA) -- Federal President Karl Carstens has thanked the Somali president, Maj Gen Siad Barre, for the aid given to the Germans by Barre and his country in October 1977 in freeing the hostages at Mogadishu Airport. During a talk with the Somali president, who arrived in the Federal Republic on Thursday for a 2-day working visit, Carstens called him a friend of the Germans. Barre then met Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt for an exchange of views.

At a luncheon given by Carstens for Barre and for the six ministers accompanying him, the federal president promised the East African country further aid to overcome the problems created by the refugees from Ethiopia. He called on the Ethiopian leaders to create the preconditions for reducing tension and for a peaceful dialogue with Somalia.

On his arrival at the Villa Hammerschmidt, the African president was welcomed by the federal president with a military ceremony. Together with the Somali foreign minister, Abdurahman Jama Barre, and with the German minister of state for foreign affairs, Hildegard Hamm-Brucher, the two heads of state posed for photographers before beginning their talk.

Confers With Genscher

LD261146 Hamburg DPA in German 1105 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Excerpt] Bonn, 26 Mar (DPA) -- On Friday Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and President Mohamed Siad Barre of Somalia expressed their concern over the Soviet Union's attempts to bring the states in the Horn of Africa under its influence for strategic considerations. Genscher and Barre met on the second day of the Somali president's working visit at Schloss Gymnich near Bonn for a 1-hour exchange of views.

The Foreign Ministry stated that Genscher underlined the Federal Government's view that East-West differences must not be carried over into the Third World. Bonn's policy is therefore aimed at promoting genuine nonalignment. Preconditions for this include internal stability and sound economic conditions in the states concerned. These considerations also form the basis of the Federal Republic's intensive economic cooperation with Somalia.

STRAUSS DEPARTS FOR NAMIBIA, SOUTH AFRICA

LD271342 Hamburg DPA in German 1211 GMT 27 Mar 82

[Text] Munich, 27 Mar (DPA) -- Franz Josef Strauss, CSU chairman and Bavarian minister-president, left Munich on Saturday for a 1-week trip, via Paris, to Namibia and South Africa. Strauss is to stay in Namibia for 3 days where, according to the CSU, he will be meeting, among others, Dirk Mudge, chairman of the Turnhalle Alliance. Next he will be visiting Capetown at the invitation of the South African Government, where he is to have talks with the country's leading politicians. Strauss arrived back home about a week ago from a 6-day factfinding tour in the United States.

DEMONSTRATORS PROTEST U.S. EL SALVADOR POLICY

LD271658 Hamburg DPA in German 1612 GMT 27 Mar 82

[Text] Hamburg, 27 Mar (DPA) -- On Saturday there were several demonstrations in cities in the Federal Republic against the U.S. involvement in the Central American state of El Salvador. For example, 6,000 people demonstrated in Berlin, 4,000 in Bremen and about 2,000 in Hamburg against American policy. Among others, placards read "Freedom for El Salvador."

There were no incidents in Hamburg. Police in Berlin reported that there were only minor incidents. In Bremen, some demonstrators tore up paving stones in the market square, threw containers of paint at the Ibero-American Bank and broke a window in the U.S. Consulate General. A group of 40 demonstrators occupied an empty house in Bremen.

U.S. OFFICIAL ADDRESSES CSU POLICY CONGRESS

LD271952 Hamburg DPA in German 1221 GMT 27 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Munich, 27 Mar (DPA) -- Fred C. Ikle, under secretary of defense for policy in the U.S. Department of Defense, has demanded an end to the NATO states' financial and technical aid to East bloc countries. At a CSU foreign policy congress in Munich on Saturday, Ikle demanded: "We, the alliance members, must stop subsidizing our opponents."

German and American taxpayers should no longer be asked to pay twice, once for their own defense budget expenditures and once again for credit guarantees or interest-subsidies to transfer Western goods or research results to the East. Such help permitted the Soviet Union to spend more of her own resources on military armament and modernization, prevented liberalization and strengthened totalitarianism.

"During past decades we have all been far too unconcerned about this blood transfusion for our opponent," Ikle criticized. Nevertheless, the Reagan government advocates "by no means economic warfare." The flow of Western assets to the Eastern bloc will have to be diverted to countries in the West and Third World. "The (?imminent) weaknesses of the communist economic system must take their own course."

The CSU chairman and Bavarian minister-president, Franz Josef Strauss, agreed that the Soviet system would have gone bankrupt even more quickly without Western help. Strauss rejected the idea that the new Pershing II and cruise missiles be called American weapons. In truth, they are, in the spirit and text of the Atlantic treaties, NATO weapons and thus also German weapons, even if they are attached to U.S. units. According to Strauss, the Kremlin's objective is to use psychological warfare and "useful idiots" to create a mood inside the peace movement by the end of 1983 which would make the threatened deployment impossible.

As long as the Western alliance is intact, Strauss believes that the chances of war breaking out in Europe are "as good as zero." The chances would be much greater if Europe chooses neutrality. He categorically rejected German reunification under a Marxist omen. Strauss thinks that the CSU is unanimously agreed as far as foreign and security policies are concerned. Its "yes" to the NATO dual decision was not a favor; it was based on understanding. Concerning his controversial appearance in the United States, Strauss said ironically, "Like Schockemoehle, I am prepared to ride for Germany; but I am not prepared to lie for Helmut Schmidt against Germany."

GOVERNMENT UNIMPRESSED BY CHANGES IN BORDER LAW

LD261240 Hamburg DPA in German 1128 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 26 Mar (DPA) -- The new GDR border law on the rules governing the use of firearms "in no way changes" the inhumanity of the GDR border installations. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker stated this on Friday to a press conference in Bonn. The law, passed on Thursday by the People's Chamber in East Berlin, states, among other things, that the use of firearms on the border is an "ultimate measure."

Becker recalled Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's statement in December at the German-German meeting at Werbellinsee that the two German states were still a long way from sensible relations. "There is no normalization as long as there exist border installations of this kind," stated Becker with reference to the so-called death machines on the border. In talks with the GDR leadership, Schmidt had, with reference to the border installations, pointed out "that this is not compatible with the desire for sensible relations."

Becker, in commenting on the pre-military training also passed by the People's Chamber, said that this is not "consistent with our understanding of a free state pursuing a policy of peace."

DEUTSCHE WELLE, INFORMATION OFFICE WON'T MERGE

LD261524 Hamburg DPA in German 1423 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 26 Mar (DPA) -- According to the Federal Interior Ministry, the Federal Government does not intend to amalgamate the monitoring services of Deutsche Welle and the Federal Information Office. Rationalization measures in the monitoring services were, however, necessary for financial reasons, State Secretary Siegried Froehlich said in Bonn today in reply to a question from CDU Lower House Deputy Herbert Werner.

GOVERNMENT 'NIGHTMARES' BEGIN OVER REAGAN VISIT

DW291255 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 29 Mar 82 pp 30-31

[Text] People in Bonn are already having nightmares in connection with the visit of the U.S. President because the environmentalists and the leftists could spoil the desired pro-American mood.

Vice Chancellor Hans-Dietrich Genscher considers himself a political prophet: When U.S. President Reagan comes to Bonn on 9 June and 2 days later makes an appearance for several hours in West Berlin, this will initiate a signal for German-American friendship. Genscher: "The effort will be worthwhile."

Through his people, the foreign minister says that the NATO conference with 15 heads of state and government on 10 June will be also a "demonstration of solidarity with America" and not simply a routine meeting. In fact, however, the Reagan visit became a nightmare long ago for people in Bonn. SPD Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski pleads with his comrades, saying that it ought to be possible to have "such demonstrations without disturbances." A Genscher aide feels concerned that in the end "more bad than good" could be caused because the American TV audience would remember the demonstrations against their president rather than the NATO show.

U.S. diplomats, concerned about the security of their president, would "prefer" the Bonn summit take place "in the Black Forest." FDP foreign policy expert Juergen Moellemann is asking himself whether the effort will really pay, implying that "some third parties might be grinning in the end."

The Reagan visit is indeed threatening to degenerate into a spectacle. CDU chief Helmut Kohl has summoned his party to a pro-American demonstration in the Bonn Hofgarten on 5 June, 1 day prior to the Hamburg communal elections. No local or kreis demonstrations of the CDU/CSU are permitted to take place on the Reagan Saturday. Special trains and music bands have already been ordered so that "far more than 100,000 people can demonstrate in the streets for this republic and our ties with the West" (CDU Spokesman Wolter von Tiesenhausen).

Weeks ago Kohl blocked exploratory talks with other parties on whether a common demonstration could not be staged. ("Not with the SPD.") He said that "on this day we want to have the other Germany in the streets." The other Germany is also supposed to be present the same day on Munich's Marienplatz -- the CSU wants to have its party congress demonstrate for Reagan's America "with people from throughout Bavaria" (Party Spokesman Godel Rosenberg).

Host Helmut Schmidt's party has had more difficulties in this respect. SPD Federal Manager Peter Glotz turned down a request by Manfred Lahnstein, state secretary of the chancellor's office, for the SPD to also launch a pro-Reagan demonstration. Schmidt was able to see to it that all comrades will be threatened with expulsion from the party if they urge participation in or speak at an anti-Reagan demonstration. However, the chancellor cannot prevent party leftists such as Erhard Eppler from gathering on 12 June, one day after Reagan's departure, to hold a solidarity demonstration with the American peace movement.

Schmidt tries very hard not to be outdone by anyone with regard to his positive approach to Ronald Reagan -- not even by Genscher -- and has scheduled a private talk on the eve of the NATO summit. In line with the chancellor's habits, he wants to accompany the U.S. President to West Berlin.

The ruling people in Bonn must fear above all that the peace movement will spoil the picture of a pro-American mood. The environmentalists want to gather the peace friends in Bonn on 10 June "not against Reagan, but on the occasion of the NATO summit." The Bonn CDU city administration is trying for the time being to block the demonstration with procedural tricks: The Bonn Department for Roads and Transportation told Lukas Beckmann, federal manager of the environmentalists, that the Hofgarten lawn, the market and Muenster Square are needed for the traditional Corpus Christi demonstration. A demonstration in the Rhine Meadow Park was said to be impossible because of the "condition of the plants in the park." This is "all nonsense," Beckmann, a trained agronomist, said. "It will not hurt the grass -- and the Corpus Christi procession will be over by noon.

Bonn's Deputy Police President Juergen Homann also does not see why the environmentalists should not be given a place to assemble, saying that counterdemonstrations are only unacceptable "in the immediate vicinity" of the state guest.

The Bonn protocol authorities want to ensure that no demonstrations get close. The alliance representatives will meet and dine within the confines of the government quarters, in the Bundestag's Plenary Hall, at the Schaumburg Palace, but mostly in the conference hall of the chancellor's office which is safe against bugging or tapping.

No demonstrators can disturb Ronald Reagan at night either in Gymnich, the water castle near Erftstadt. The state guest will fly from there by helicopter to the chancellor's park. The other government chiefs will sleep in the residences of their Bonn ambassadors. In place of the people, the Bonn parliamentarians are supposed to see the president. Bundestag President Richard Stuecklen said last Thursday that the chances of a Reagan speech in the Bundestag are good.

SPD leftist Peter Conradi is not happy about the idea of a special parliamentary session unless the deputies will be permitted to debate with the American and ask questions. That is required by the procedure if Stuecklen convenes the Bundestag.

A colleague of Conradi will be absent that day -- Willy Brandt has appointments to meet in Strasbourg. He has warned his party against "gross impoliteness" with regard to Reagan.

CHEYSSON VOICES FEARS AT WEST BANK SITUATION

PM291517 Paris LE MONDE in French 26 Mar 82 p 4

[Text] Addressing the International Union of French-language Journalists and Press on Wednesday, 24 March, External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson described what is happening on the West Bank "and probably Gaza" as "serious and tragic." Nevertheless, he was keen to remain "cautious and restrained" in his remarks ("Once does not constitute a habit," he commented), following the example of the Arab capitals, whose "reserve" he explained in terms of "the danger of violent reactions in the area."

Recalling the External Relations Ministry's declaration on Monday, the minister stressed that the Israelis' action in the occupied territories is "unquestionably contrary to the international regulations that apply under such circumstances and to the Geneva conventions (concerning the protection of civilians in the event of conflict) in particular."

Mr Cheysson pointed out that Mr Mitterrand's visit to Israel provided an opportunity for him [Cheysson] to meet with the four mayors of the West Bank and Gaza. Having heard them, he said, "I can better understand the seriousness of what is happening at the moment." "When you watch television," he added, "I expect you feel the same anguish as I do on witnessing the start of a collective psychological phenomenon, fearing that it will get completely out of control."

JAPANESE ECONOMIC ENVOY SEES MORE COOPERATION

PM261111 Paris LE FIGARO in French 24 Mar 82 p 9

[Alain Vernay report: "Japan Does Not Wish To Be Scapegoat"]

[Text] No high-level mission is destined to have such direct and marked effects for the future of relations between Japan and France, or, moreover, between Japan and the other EC countries, than that of the nine liberal Democratic Party leaders currently in Europe led by Masumi Esaki, former minister of the MITI [as published; presumably Ministry of International Trade and Industry] and of defense, seconded by former Minister of Planning Tadashi Kuranari. Before leaving for Bonn and after having talks in Paris successively with [French minister of state for foreign trade] Michel Jobert, National Council of French Employers leaders, the Economic and Social council, OECD Secretary General van Lennep, [French minister of external relations] Claude Cheysson and, last, the president of the republic. Mr Esaki agreed unreservedly to answer our questions.

What did Mr Esaki remember principally of the hour spent at the Elysee Palace with Francois Mitterrand? The president of the republic, anticipating his 14 April visit to Tokyo, told him that he would propose to Prime Minister Suzuki that each of the two governments have a cultural center constructed in its capital to make each other's civilizations better known. The president of the republic fears that all French people are very ignorant of how the most modern technology developed out of Japan's oldest traditions.

The envoy replied that he would enthusiastically support such an important project and that he would propose setting experts to work to study in depth the Japanese side of the scheme.

In addition, Mr Esaki added, the president of the republic expressed to him the desire to see French-Japanese technological cooperation develop, with the contribution of Japanese knowledge in the fields of electronics and computer science and the contribution of French knowledge in the aeronautical, space and nuclear fields -- an opinion which Mr Cheysson also expressed for his part. Mr Esaki will tell the Japanese prime minister how favorably he views this plan.

He was asked if there was a chance that positive decisions, made at the highest government level at the time of Francois Mitterrand's visit to Tokyo, can be put into practice. Is there not a danger of blocking by certain Japanese private circles? It has been said that is the case with Japan's intentions to liberalize trade, reportedly opposed by the lower middle grades of the administration, and, in particular, by the customs service.

Mr Esaki believes that he can deny this and rule it out. Three committees have been set up to deal with this kind of problem since last June: A committee to promote trade, an industrial cooperation committee and a committee of wise men. Private circles play an active role in all three. The (Keidanren) -- the Japanese employers' association -- is prepared to take part in any specific discussion in a spirit of give-and-take.

To what points did Mr Esaki deem it necessary to draw the president of the republic's attention? To two important topics: on one hand he made a point of telling Francois Mitterrand that, following the first oil crisis, a 35 percent wage increase was agreed on in Japan in 1975 and 25 percent in 1976, although there were 3 million unemployed in Japan.

On the other hand, Mr Esaki made a point of informing the president that the Japanese market is now at least as open as the European markets, even if the memory remained of the obstacles actually encountered at the beginning of the seventies, at the time of the vain European attempts to penetrate the Japanese market. The only really important nontariff barrier still existing in Japan today is the Japanese language. But, Mr Esaki said: "As far as we are concerned, it is no longer the time for discussion. We are at the stage when it is necessary to see what Japan can do and do it immediately. And when progress cannot be made, we must seek to discover why with the French partner." Mr Esaki also said this to Michel Jobert, who asked him to examine the French-Japanese dispute.

Has the Japanese mission heard in France or elsewhere threats of retaliation against Japan -- whether vague or precise, in the medium term or even in the short term -- because of the considerable and protracted surpluses in its foreign trade? If such was the case, how did the mission react? Mr Esaki confirmed that this has occurred in certain EC countries. Nevertheless, he replied by recalling the wave of protectionism which submerged the world after the beginning of the thirties and by pointing out that you can live happily with protectionism but for a very brief time, because this kind of practice quickly spreads. He emphasized his country's condemnation of such measures.

It is easy, Mr Esaki concluded, to make Japan a scapegoat, but that will not help the Western states to control and revive their economies.

PSDI CONGRESS ENDORSES GOVERNMENT COALITION

AU290835 Rome ANSA in English 0818 GMT 29 Mar 82

[Text] Milan, 29 Mar (ANSA) -- Italian Social Democrat Party [PSDI] Secretary Pietro Longo has received overwhelming support for his leadership and his policies from the party's five-day national congress in Milan. A unified document drafted by the leadership and the party's minority factions headed by Labor Minister Michele di Giesi and former Secretary Pierluigi Romiti reiterated the PSDI's endorsement of the present ruling arrangement in Italy, a five-party coalition of Christian Democrats, Socialists, Social Democrats, Republicans and Liberals headed by Premier Giovanni Spadolini.

Ruling that there is no viable alternative to that alliance at present, the PSDI urged the five parties to come to terms on an effective policy platform to strengthen their power and prevent early elections. The PSDI also called for an expansion of the nation's socialist parties and the minor groupings to check the power of the "hegemonic" Christian Democrats and Communists, Italy's two biggest political parties.

The party ruled to stick to the local government coalitions it has joined, together with the Communists, in many big cities on the grounds that these alliances did not contradict national politics. The cooperation pact with the socialists was endorsed, although no steps were taken to move towards unification with the PSI, the nation's third largest political grouping and a major partner to Spadolini's coalition.

The PSDI's foreign policy calls for loyal membership in the NATO alliance, the resumption of the East-West detente process, a rejection of "neutralism" and negotiated settlements of international conflicts in Afghanistan, El Salvador, the Middle East and southern Africa.

The fifth largest vote-getter of Italian political parties, the PSDI holds 20 posts in the lower house of Parliament and 6 in the Senate with the 3.8 percent of the popular vote it received in the last round of legislative elections (1979).

Longo Reelected

AU271953 Rome ANSA in English 1937 GMT 27 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Milan, 27 Mar (ANSA) -- The Social Democrats, minor partners in Giovanni Spadolini's coalition government, today unanimously re-elected Pietro Longo as their political secretary during their national congress underway here. Political observers expected Longo to be reconfirmed but the vote was not due until the final day of the congress tomorrow. However, Public Works Minister Franco Nicolazzi today moved that the congress vote Longo in by acclamation, a proposal which immediately had all the delegates on their feet applauding and chanting the secretary's name.

Nicolazzi today called for the unanimous vote so as "to reply to those political forces that sought to injure (Longo) some months ago." He was referring to accusations -- that Longo has always denied -- to the effect that the PSDI leader was a member of the subversive P-2 Masonic lodge which has been banned in Italy.

MARIO SOARES URGES CHANGE OF GOVERNMENT SOON

[Excerpt] "The failure of the government's policy, owing to profound structural reasons, is not only leading the country toward a situation of terrible deadlock, but is calling into question the democratic system's own credibility." The Socialist Party [PS] secretary general stated this in a message to the Santarem Socialists read by Maria Barroso yesterday during a rally. Mario Soares was unable to attend as a result of being ill with influenza.

In his message Soares mentions the need for a major national campaign of enlightenment "to convince all Portuguese people that it is urgent to change policy by changing the government within respect for the democratic and constitutional rules." After warning of the "danger of new totalitarian adventures, resulting from this lack of credibility of the system because of the Balsemao government's policy," Soares emphasized that "If it depended on the PS, the government would not last another day." "In an open and democratic society," the PS secretary general continued in his message, "public opinion has great influence, and its enlightenment is decisive in finding the national political solutions which the country's interest demands."

COMMUNIQUE ON MOZAMBIQUE MINISTER'S VISIT CITED

PM291349 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 17 Mar 82 p 4

[Text] The joint communique signed at the conclusion of the visit to Portugal by Mozambique Minister of Industry and Energy Antonio Lima Branco, which has now been released, highlights the need to strengthen cooperation between the two countries, specifically in the fields of power and petroleum, major agro-industrial projects, geological research and heavy engineering, actions in which will be monitored by a Portuguese-Mozambican working group. Minister Branco, heading a large delegation from his ministry, visited Portugal for 4 days, held talks with the minister of industry, energy and exports and with that ministry's two secretaries of state, in addition to the minister of housing, public works and transport and the secretary of state for tourism. The Mozambican minister had audiences with the president of the republic, the minister and secretary of state for foreign affairs and the minister of finance and planning, contacted industrial employers' associations and visited some plants in the electrical and mechanical engineering sectors and in the textile and smelting industries. All the talks and contacts between the Portuguese and Mozambican sides took place "in an atmosphere of frank cordiality, with broad identity of viewpoints on cooperation between the two countries in the industrial and energy sectors."

The joint communique released following the Mozambican delegation's visit emphasized the interest in the contacts made, which made clear Portuguese enterprises' ability and readiness to take part in the industrial development of the People's Republic of Mozambique. In the field of energy, not only was the state of the ventures in the power sector in which Portugal is taking part (Cabora Bassa, Revue and Sonefe) analyzed, but agreement was also reached on the advantage of direct contacts between Petrogal and Petromoc in the aspects of vocational training and technical assistance.

New areas for developing cooperation in carrying out major agro-industrial projects, including the cotton and sugar producing sectors, were surveyed; the possibility of developing and exploiting Mozambique's vast coal reserves, as well as the possibility of setting up mining and quarrying operations, priority being given to diamonds, radioactive minerals and ornamental stones, were studied. The setting up of a new glassworks, development of a plan for the iron and steel sector, light industry and heavy engineering, and shipbuilding and repair were other points highlighted in the joint communique, which also envisages aspects of vocational training and the setting up of a joint working group to analyze the projects in progress.

Within the spirit of cooperation imbuing the Mozambican delegation's visit, Minister Branco invited his Portuguese counterpart to visit Mozambique at a date to be set in due course.

1982-83 DEFENSE BUDGET BREAKDOWN REPORTED

PM290943 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 10 Mar 82 p 8

[Erik Liden report: "Twenty-two Billion"]

[Text] In the 1982-83 budget year the defense forces will be given 19.1 billion kronor in funds. Of this 2.5 million kronor comprise estimated compensation for inflation and price rises.

In all important respects, the draft defense bill follows the middle parties' proposals made in the Defense Committee.

The defense bill will introduce a few defense price index to replace the present net price index. All the parties in the Defense Committee are agreed on this. The compensation level to cover wage increases has been set at 35 percent and the level to cover materiel price rises at 65 percent.

This means that the army will get 6.3 billion kronor, the navy 2.7 million and the air force 5.4 million next budget year.

In addition, there are funds for the Defense Ministry, the army staffs and authorities and the final allocation of price compensation funds.

There will also be an additional 3.5 billion kronor for other branches of Swedish total defense forces.

OPPOSITION'S TRIDENT CENSURE MOTION DEFEATED

LD292156 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 2120 GMT 29 Mar 82

[Excerpt] The government had a heavy majority of 86 tonight in beating off an opposition censure attack on the decision to choose Trident II to replace Polaris as Britain's strategic nuclear deterrent.

Voting was 301 to 215 after a Commons debate which had a thin attendance after the opening speeches -- and reports that some Tories might abstain in the final vote.

The defence secretary, Mr John Nott, defending the decision to spend more than 7 billion pounds on the superior Trident missile system, said: "We have every confidence in the American strategic guarantee...."

But he added: "In the last resort Britain must be responsible for her own defences. She cannot shuffle them off to another nuclear power."

FLEET COMMANDER SURE OF NAVY'S READINESS

PM291621 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 29 Mar 82 p 2

[Desmond Wettern report: "'24 Ships' Pledge by Navy"]

[Text] The next commander-in-chief fleet will have no difficulty assembling two dozen major warships and auxiliaries in four years time when the effects of the government's latest cuts are felt, said Adml Sir John Fieldhouse, the present C-in-C.

Sir John, who is visiting ships at Gibraltar for the "Spring Train" exercise, has inspected almost all of the 24 warships and Royal Fleet auxiliaries gathered at the Rock.

"We certianly intend to go on using the Rock as an important base after the dockyard's closure next year," he said.

"It is ideally placed for exercises, with nearby deep water, calm seas and clear skies for missile firing."

The admiral admitted that the effects of the moratorium on defence contracts in the latter part of 1980 were still being felt in the fleet's equipment "though they are being overcome." He believed that the reliability of equipment in the latest warships, like the Type-22 frigates, was improving considerably, although this design has been criticised by Mr Nott, defence secretary, because of its high cost.

"But there are still considerable areas of unreliability with the Type-42 Sea Dart missile destroyer." The navy has nine of these ships in service, the latest costing some 100 million pounds, and a further five are being built. The first entered service in the 1970s, but the electrical wiring, for example, for their missiles and radar systems has been described as a "night-mare."

The reactions in the fleet to the government's cuts had been mixed. Young ratings in their teens and early twenties were largely apathetic. Among older officers and ratings, however, there was an attitude of profound cynicism toward politicians, both government and opposition.

PAPANDREOU REVIEWS CYPRUS ISSUE AT EEC SESSION

NC300838 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 0400 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Report from Brussels -- recorded]

[Text] The entire spectrum of the Cyprus problem was explained by Prime Minister Papandreou to other EEC leaders during an official dinner given in their honor last night by European Council Chairman Martens. The discussions that took place within the framework of this official dinner were almost always among the most interesting moments of the EEC summit conference. And this is so because the leaders exchanged views with all sincerity on all the burning issues that concern not only the EEC but also the entire international community.

Mr Papandreou stressed to the other nine European leaders that Cyprus is a country of Europe -- even associated with Europe, and that it has been under Turkish occupation since 1974, with 200,000 refugees, with 36.4 percent of its territory occupied by Turkish troops, and with the threat of this occupation expanding. The prime minister stressed that there is a joint and general responsibility of Europe toward the Cypriot people -- mainly on the part of Greece and Britain, which are guarantor powers. The Cyprus problem is not an issue of Greece and Cyprus, Mr Papandreou stressed; and Greece does not consider Cyprus as its extension, but Cyprus Hellenism is definitely an extension of the Hellenic nation.

The prime minister also said Turkey cannot and must not claim that a question of security exists in Cyprus on the part of Greece because the Athens government has proposed an increase in the UN peace force -- after the withdrawal of the Turkish troops from Cyprus, of course -- and has even declared that Greece is prepared to undertake the expenditure for this force.

Mr Papandreou reiterated that the internal problem of Cyprus -- that is, the relations between the two communities -- could be resolved as soon as the Turkish troops, which at this moment constitute the crux of the problem, are withdrawn. He stressed: It is not only the Greek Cypriots but also the Turkish Cypriots who are facing a problem of occupation because they have to face not only the Turkish soldiers but also the settlers from Anatolia. The EEC cannot show concern for or examine burning international problems at a time when the drama of Cyprus (?is dormant), declared the prime minister. Mr Papandreou stated that he believes that last night's discussion on the Cyprus problem definitely helped, following his recent letters to EEC leaders, the repositioning of the Cyprus problem.

Today, the final day of the summit conference, the internal situation in Turkey, involving the violation of human rights and trade union freedoms, will be examined along with the report by Tindemans, who recently visited Ankara on behalf of the community. It is considered certain that there will be [words indistinct] regarding the contents of the report, which many delegations consider unacceptable.

DEFENSE MINISTER SAYS U.S. ARMS AID INSUFFICIENT

TA300539 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Text] Defense Minister Haluk Bayulken has said that U.S. aid for the modernization of the Turkish armed forces was not satisfactory. Turkish Radio and Television [TRT] correspondent Kemal Akaydin reports that Bayulken, who visited Washington following the NATO Nuclear Planning Group meeting in Colorado Springs, has concluded his talks in Washington with U.S. officials. In a statement to TRT, Bayulken said the Turkish armed forces' needs were higher than the aid being extended by the United States and that this was acknowledged by the U.S. officials, who promised to do their best to increase the amount of aid to Turkey.

Bayulken will leave Washington for Canada today as the official guest of Canadian Defense Minister Gilles Lamontagne. He will return home on 2 April.

TURKMEN VIEWS EFFECT OF ECONOMY ON RELATIONS

TA291652 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1505 GMT 29 Mar 82

[Text] Istanbul, 29 Mar (AA) -- Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said in Istanbul his government intended to apply for full membership in the European Economic Communities "when the political atmosphere is ripe." Addressing businessmen in Istanbul on "the economy and foreign policy" Turkmen added Turkey had about reached "the limit of advantages association with the community could provide any country. As in formulating foreign policy, Turkey should take care to keep all options open" in foreign economic policy, not to reach hasty value judgements under the impact of temporary conditions, and to distinguish clearly between short-term and long-term perspectives.

One should not be overoptimistic about improvements in economic relations, for time was needed to settle problems such as an adequate growth rate, increased foreign capital investment, more competitive power abroad and a continuous equilibrium in the balance of payments. Turkmen cited the United States as a potential market for Turkish goods which had not been adequately explored.

Turkey, as a bridge between developing and industrialized countries, and between continents and civilizations, did not have to turn her back to the West while strengthening relations in the Middle East, or vice versa, the foreign minister believed. Turkey intended to be part of Europe as a "strong partner enjoying economic cooperation with countries of the Middle East" the foreign minister said, adding, "We believe Turkey will gain in significance for her Western partners as an element of stability in the Middle East to the extent that she strengthens her relations with Islamic countries, and similarly for the Islamic world to the extent that she takes her place in the economic and political decision-making mechanism of the EEC." It was part of the functions of Turkey's diplomatic corps abroad to seek new markets for Turkish products, the foreign minister agreed.

Asked by the president of the Turkish Businessmen's Society, Ali Kocman, to comment on relations with Israel, Turkmen said total serverance of relations with Israel was not being envisaged, and offered the following explanation: "There are certain sensitive balances in our foreign policy. We have to assess our external relations as a whole. Arab countries are understanding about the difficulties we would have in cutting off relations with Israel entirely."

USSR, GREEK CYPRIOTS BEGIN JOINT OIL SEARCH

NC300916 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 21 Mar 82 p 14

[Metin Cetin report]

[Text] Nicosia (AKAJANS) -- It has been announced that the Soviet Union and the Greek Cypriot administration have started prospecting for oil jointly off the coast of the Greek Cypriot sector.

According to an agreement, the Soviet research ship (?Vityaz) has been drilling at 11 different sites in the sea along the coast between Paphos and Akrotiri for a period of 10 days. No disclosure has been made about the findings of the ship. Meanwhile, it has been reported that planes taking off from the British base at Akrotiri have watched the activities of the Soviet ship very closely.

The government in the Turkish Cypriot sector too has begun preparations for searching for oil.

OZAL EXPLAINS NEED FOR BALANCE IN FARM OUTPUT

TA281529 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1455 GMT 28 Mar 82

[Text] Rize, 28 Mar (AA) -- Deputy Premier Turgut Ozal told tea growers in the Black Sea port of Rize the government had to maintain equilibrium between producer, labor and consumer in its policy of subsidies to crops. Price increases which seem to favor the farmers at the beginning might, if they hurt the whole economy, turn against the farmer in the end, he added. If domestic tea prices were higher than the world price, the government might allow the importation of tea, he warned.

It was unthinkable to ban imports of a commodity just because it was being produced domestically, he said, explaining that ideally, exports should equal imports, with the economy producing, exporting and importing at the same time.

U.S. SHIPS' BLACK SEA CRUISE SEEN PROVOCATION

TA300637 (Clandestine) Our Radio in Turkish to Turkey 0500 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Text] The Soviet agency TASS has termed as a provocation the sailing of U.S. warships into the Black Sea. Two U.S. warships sailed into the Black Sea last Friday. In a commentary on this incident, TASS termed it a provocation. The TASS commentary continues: This incident must be assessed within the framework of U.S. policies of escalating rearmament and undermining the detente process. The purpose of Washington is to increase insecurity and tension in Europe.

The present international situation requires both military blocs to abstain from military activities. It is because of this that the Soviet Union has offered to sign an agreement to restrict the operation areas of naval fleets. Moreover, the Soviet Union has declared that it was ready to discuss security measures covering the seas as well as the oceans.

EEC LEADERS CONCLUDE SUMMIT AS FARMERS PROTEST

NC301354 Paris AFP in English 1342 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Text] Brussels, 30 Mar (AFP) -- The summit of European Economic Community leaders ended here today after the morning session was prolonged by four hours as thousands of farmers demonstrated for higher farm prices.

Police mounted a major security effort as the demonstrators from several EEC countries converged on official buildings.

Organisers of the demonstration said 10,000 people took part, but security officials put the number at about 6,000.

They were demanding an average 16.3 per cent rise in minimum guaranteed agricultural prices for this year compared with the nine per cent proposed by the commission which administers the Community. They also demanded that ministers agree on a new price structure by the appointed date of April 1.

Meanwhile the leaders from the 10 countries ended their two-day European Council meeting summit by agreeing to close ranks against unemployment, in support of investment, and to challenge the United States and Japan. But while they agreed on the aims, they remained divided on ways to cope with record unemployment totalling nearly 11 million people, while achieving price stability.

West Germany, backed mainly by Britain, Belgium and the Netherlands, continued to argue that monetary stability and the fight against inflation are the best ways of giving business the confidence to invest. France and Denmark put the emphasis on a boost to the economy.

On foreign affairs, the summit agreed to present a joint attitude towards the U.S. and Japan at the summit of industrialised countries to be held at Versailles, outside Paris, in June. They agreed to urge the U.S. to lower its interest rates, but Germany and Britain remained sceptical about the usefulness of such a move by the EEC. They also repeated their insistence that Japan should make its market more open to European exports, but Germany made it clear that it does not favour economic sanctions against Japan while noting that Japanese industry has scored through high performance and innovation.

The summit agreed on the need to boost the European Monetary System (EMS) of Community currencies excepting sterling and the drachma, but Germany objected to development of the system until there is better convergence between members currently experiencing inflation ranging from six to 24 per cent.

On policy for East-West relations, the Middle East and Central America, the 10 showed an ability to take a common line.

On Poland, they reaffirmed that the crisis weighs heavily on East-West relations, and again asked the Polish authorities to lift martial law. On the Middle East, they said they were extremely worried by growing tension in the West Bank, and they condemned the Israeli dismissal of Arab mayors. On Central America, they decided to increase their aid as much as possible.

The community's internal problems were broadly glossed over. On farm price fixing and the problem of reducing Britain's net contribution to the Communist budget, French President Francois Mitterrand hardened his tone against the British stance, but did not close the door on the possibility of a compromise.

The problem is to be discussed on Saturday in Luxembourg by Community foreign ministers.

LUFTHANSA ANNOUNCES WEEKLY FLIGHT TO WARSAW

LD291452 Hamburg DPA in German 1432 GMT 29 Mar 82

[Text] Cologne, 29 Mar (DPA) -- The German airline Lufthansa will fly to Warsaw next Friday for the first time since the imposition of martial law in Poland. The airline announced on Monday that there will be one flight to and from Warsaw every Friday. Prior to the imposition of martial law in December 1981, there was a flight to Warsaw every day.

SWEDISH PRIME MINISTER BEGINS 3-DAY VISIT

LD311046 Hamburg DPA in German 1018 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 31 Mar (DPA) -- Swedish Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin has arrived in Bonn for a 3-day visit. After his arrival Falldin received SPD Chairman Willy Brandt in the Swedish Embassy for talks. A meeting with CDU chief Helmut Kohl is scheduled for later.

The conservative Swedish prime minister's official program begins in the afternoon with a military review in front of the chancellor's office. Then Falldin is to meet Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt for talks. On Thursday Falldin is also to hold discussions with Federal President Karl Carstens and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher (FDP).

The focal point of the German-Swedish talks will probably be economic relations between the two countries, the East-West situation and the situation in Poland. Relations between Bonn and Stockholm are good and free of problems.

JOURNALISTS SEARCHED IN GDR AFTER POLISH VISIT

LD261456 Hamburg DPA in German 1233 GMT 26 Mar 82

[Text] Hamburg, 26 Mar (DPA) — The GDR authorities for several hours searched two West German journalists who had worked in Poland on their return trip through the GDR and took documents from them. The editor-in-chief of the HUSUMER NACHRICHTEN, Helmut Sethe, told DPA on Friday that, together with NDR [North German Radio] editor Friedrich Wilhelm Kramer, he was "pedantically" [in kleinlicherweise] checked at Frankfurt/Oder for almost 3 hours by the GDR customs.

The two journalists were the first West German reporters to be allowed to drive through Poland after the imposition of martial law on 13 December. They were returning from a 9-day visit to Poland.

Sethe said that the GDR authorities searched not only cars and luggage, but went through the two journalists' notes in detail and played tape recordings of conversations with Polish politicians, including several ministers. The Polish customs officials earlier had already cleared the two journalists.

The GDR customs confiscated a letter from Sethe and recordings of conversations from Kramer. They passed the documents on to Polish customs which gave them back to the two correspondents after a brief examination. Sethe was, however, urged to put the letter into the post box because of censorship.

Sethe said that the two journalists had been accredited at the Polish Foreign Ministry. He himself had a letter from the authorities with him confirming that he was allowed to carry with him documents, notes, tape recordings and films. Sethe said he has meanwhile asked the GDR's permanent representative, Ewald Moldt, for an explanation.

TATU EXAMINES FOREIGN POLICY TOWARD EL SALVADOR

WA301530 Paris LE MONDE in French 13 Mar 82 pp 1, 6

[Series of articles by Michael Tatu: "The 'Diplomacy of Indignation'"; part 1: "El Salvador: And If They Were Already Communists?"]

[Text] In the era of human rights, and even more so with a Socialist government, it should not be surprising that French diplomacy is assuming more easily than in the past, the character of a "diplomacy of indignation."

Just as de Gaulle claimed to "speak history" about the international scene, so does Mr Mitterrand claim to "proclaim the right" and even "proclaim morality." Or, as Dominique Moisi writes in the latest issue of FOREIGN AFFAIRS, "Mitterrand's idealism and internationalism have replaced de Gaulle's nationalism and Machiavellism."

At the same time, realpolitik is not dead. As one saw at the time of the signing of the French-Soviet contract on gas, realpolitik is viewed all the more negatively since it dampens more severely the enthusiasm which had been aroused by the diplomacy of indignation.

However, the whole world recognizes that what is needed is a little of each. How can we define the limits and avoid the traps inherent in each? The cases of El Salvador and Poland enable us to better define the basic elements of the problem.

Thanks in part to France's action, El Salvador is on the way to becoming for Europeans what it already was for Salvadorans and perhaps also North Americans: a "little Vietnam" of the kind that "Che" Guevara dreamed of.

In many respects, the issue is appropriate for indignation: despicable massacres, archaic social structures, a military rabble in service of the right, and dominating Yankees, though not too sure of themselves, inhibited by the scruples of Congress and the press, this time even more concerned because the problem is in their backyard.

In summary, a "legitimate national liberation struggle" meriting the sympathy of a French government which is seeking to complement the economic and social Third Worldism already displayed without much success at Ottawa, Cancun, and in Mexico with a political Third Worldism: France, by the French-Mexican statement recognizing as representative the guerrilla political organization in El Salvador, and then by supplying arms to Nicaragua, has in effect "chosen its side" in the current conflict.

Its attitude has served as an example to the international socialist movement and many European governments. After the refusal of Belgium, Denmark, Greece, the Netherlands, the FRG, and Canada, only the UK seems prepared to send observers to the election organized by the Salvadoran junta, an election whose validity the Socialist Party and the French Government are questioning in advance.

However, there is an additional motive which is more debatable. By supporting the left in El Salvador and Nicaragua, Mr Mitterrand intends to demonstrate not so much idealism as "intelligent realism": to prevent these movements from moving into the communist orbit, in this case into the arms of Fidel Castro and dependence on the Soviet arsenal. As the president of the republic explained to TIME in October, "Communism is born of misery." We must therefore win back these people (the revolutionaries) "who are not natural adversaries of the West, but who become so by the logic of the situation imposed on them."

The "Houphouet-Boigny Case"

This is a very long-standing attitude of Mr Mitterrand, prompted by the example of Fidel Castro at the beginning of the Cuban revolution, but in fact even earlier by the "Houphouet-Boigny case."

Did not the right strongly criticize, at the beginning of the 1950's, the then chairman of the UDSR (Democratic and Socialist Union of the Resistance) for having brought into his movement the Ivorian leader who had until then been a communist-sponsored member of the National Assembly. Mr Houphouet-Boigny's evolution having proved Mr Mitterrand right, he remains convinced that communists, or alleged communists, of the Third World are in fact nationalists who are perfectly assimilable if only they are shown a little understanding. Today he makes the same point in regard to Mr Ungo, president of the Salvadoran Revolutionary Democratic Front.

However, the reasoning has not always been convincing. It applies, no doubt, to Fidel Castro, who was pushed by the American embargo and the Bay of Pigs venture in the early 1960's toward a USSR which itself hesitated at the time to accept such a gift and toward a "Marxism-Leninism" which was certainly not his original credo. However, the same has often been said of Ho Chi Minh and the Hanoi leaders, forgetting that these men started out as faithful Stalinists and would hardly introduce in their country anything other than a regime very close to their Soviet model. They were certainly also nationalists -- and have remained so, which is not impossible when you are fortunate enough to live 10,000 kilometers from Moscow...

The case of the Sandinista Front in Nicaragua is even more doubtful: There is no doubt that President Reagan's ostracism of it is pushing it toward Cuba and Moscow, but it must be pointed out nevertheless that this evolution started in 1980, at a time when former President Carter wes faithfully trying to play the game, giving the green light to Somoza's overthrow and offering (despite a long rearguard opposition by Congress) economic aid to the new leaders. As for El Salvador, the Socialist Party is informed of the fact that the "hard core" of the insurrection, at least its armed branch, is Communist or at least "Marxist-Leninist," as its leaders themselves proclaim (LE MONDE of 11 March). The whole effort of Paris is designed to encourage the non-communist elements, social-democrats and others, which are part of the Front's political organizations.

The intent is praiseworthy, but we have to raise some questions. Which group has the strongest influence, the military leaders of the political figures, when things come to an armed struggle, particularly when this struggle develops into full-scale war, as is currently the case in El Salvador? Even if other forces do participate in the fighting, are not the communists, by their organization and structures, the best equipped to call the tune for the struggle as well as after the victory?

The questions are even more valid for having been raised throughout the Vietnam war: In response to the "pessimists," who everywhere the "hand of Hanoi," the "optimists" pointed to the pluralist nature of the Liberation Front.

Thus we should not have too many illusions. If aid to a movement enables it to avoid becoming communist, then this aid will have served its stated purpose. However, if this movement has been communist from the outset, the aid will only have provided one more guarantee of the installation of an odious regime. Naturally this does not mean that we should support the opposite camp and the colonial endeavors of the Americans: The U.S. involvement in Vietnam remains an aberration, considering the conditions under which it was decided and conducted, and this would have been true whoever the enemy. Nevertheless, the performance since 1975 by the two winning governments, both in Saigon and Phnom Penh, should inspire extreme prudence, in the name of morality especially. It would probably be unfair to say so in many other cases, but here the shadow of Pol Pot will henceforth hang over the guerillas. It is no longer enough simply to be anti-American to expect a good conduct medal.

The Americans use an argument of their own. Their spokesmen who criticize France for supporting El Salvador by saying: "What would you say if we supported the Corsican or Breton nationalists?" are guilty of exaggeration. Until there is a change, El Salvador is an independent country, and it must not at this stage be an American "private hunting preserve." Yet Frenchmen who counter: "You yourselves supported the Algerian FLN!" are also wrong. If Kennedy secretly helped France's adversaries in Algeria, the rationale was the same as now used by the French Socialists in El Salvador: to prevent the FLN from falling into the communist orbit. Events clearly proved him right: Subsequent Algerian leaders have fully proved themselves pure nationalists, strongly independent of the USSR as well as all the other big powers. We would like to be able to say as much of the Revolutionary Democratic Front and the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front of El Salvador.

At any rate, there is a risk that the Socialist Party's role in the diplomacy can create a problem: It is the party, more than the government, which is in the vanguard of the struggle for El Salvador, and some in high circles sometimes cite the "flexibility" which this can provide in foreign activity. However, this ignores the fact that party in power cannot act like it is not in power.

Moreover, foreign governments are not deceived on this point, especially since Mr Cheysson proclaimed after the formation of the government, to whomever wanted to listen, that French diplomacy was henceforth "socialist." This is certainly true for Ethiopia, which expelled several French diplomats assigned to Addis Ababa after a Socialist Party communique supporting the Eritrean fighters. Yet this action was taken at a time when French diplomats were thinking, wrongly or rightly, that a prudent action carried out with "flexibility" had a good chance of loosening the too exclusive ties formed since 1978 between the Ethiopian Government, the USSR, and its Cuban ally. This is precisely the objective which the Socialist Party is setting for itself in Central America and elsewhere.

Views Poland

PM171215 Paris LE MONDE in French 14-15 Mar 82 p 2

[Part 2 of Michel Tatu article: "The 'Diplomacy of Indignation'"; Part 2 -- "What Is the Aim in Poland?"]

[Text] The French Government and the ruling PS pledged to "say what is right" and moral in international affairs, which explains the relatively militant attitude taken by Paris in the Central American conflicts. However, it remains to be seen whether it is not already too late to prevent the Salvadoran and Nicaraguan revolutionaries from falling into the Soviet-Cuban sphere of influence, as Paris is trying to do. Poland's case poses similar questions.

In this case realpolitik went in a direction diametrically opposed to that of the diplomacy of indignation. The inevitable resignation of a large section of the Polish population to the "normalization" was probably bound to produce a corresponding weariness in French opinion. But that evolution was speeded up by the shock provided by the announcement of the signing of the French-Soviet gas contract. On the official side, however, that rather ignoble concession to realpolitik was compensated for by new and spectacular gestures, ranging from the vigorous condemnation pronounced in Madrid by [external relations minister] Cheysson to this same minister breaking off his conversation with his Polish counterpart "to whom he had nothing more to say," and including the PS declaration reaffirming a "total condemnation of the process being carried out in Poland by General Jaruzelski's regime."

Nonetheless, there is reason to wonder what they are trying to obtain in Poland. In this connection two lines can be distinguished in the West. Once consists of using every means to attack the Soviets, hence seizing on the Polish crisis as a new pretext for putting them on the defensive; that is roughly the line adopted by Mr Reagan and it is not illogical.

The other claims to be better "suited" to the fate of Poland and its people and seeks to obtain gradual improvements in the framework of the limitations imposed by geopolitics. This is the line followed by Mr Schmidt -- although the West German chancellor took a tougher tone in the statement published in Paris 25 February in order to move closer to his French ally -- and, in any case, by [German Social Democratic Party parliamentary leader] Wehner and the SPD leadership. For the German chancellor in particular, as he told THE GUARDIAN, the choice in Poland is not between democracy and dictatorship but between "re-Stalinization" and a Hungarian-type regime with a leader like Janos Kadar "whom the West regarded as an archtraitor in 1956."

Official France, however, has chosen both paths at once: that of Mr Reagan at the verbal level but the "German" line at the practical level. Not only is it not applying any sanction against Moscow or Warsaw outside the strict minimum required by alliance solidarity but it is returning to "normal business" in its relations with the Eastern bloc as soon as the stakes make it worthwhile in its view, as with the Soviet gas.

The Traps of East-West Trade

At a practical level the French Government has a few good reasons. There is a great deal of hypocrisy in the Western agitation over Poland, including that of Mr Reagan who, as Francois Puaux, former Quai d'Orsay political director, points out, has carefully avoided taking the four sanctions which would have had real importance: An embargo on wheat sales, declaring Poland to be in default on repayments, withdrawal from the Madrid conference and halting the preliminary negotiations in Geneva on Euromissiles.

To that we should add, but without justifying them, the Western countries' long-observed inability to seriously coordinate their economic policies toward the East and the dependence of each on communist orders to remedy unemployment: Did not the jobs connected with the building of the gas pipeline have at least as much influence as the future need for gas on the decision to sign with Moscow? In any case it has been confirmed that, contrary to what Mr Samuel Pisar and Mr Kissinger himself thought, East-West trade has certainly not moved in the direction of the increased dependence of the East on the West, but rather in the other direction.

Nonetheless some consistency still has to be restored between speeches, intentions and actions. Just as the diplomacy of "indignation tempered with calculation" is seeking to prevent the nationalists in El Salvador and Nicaragua from falling into the arms of Mr Castro or Mr Brezhnev, so there could be a concern not to push General Jaruzelski and his colleagues in the military junta closer to Moscow. It is true that that they are communists and are already strongly "Sovietized." But they may also be nationalists, as almost all Poles thought just a few months ago. In any case they have more chance of remaining so (or becoming so again) while the Soviets have not made a direct intervention in Poland. It is with this that we should be concerned, as much as with hoping to see the leader of the ruling junta in Warsaw obey the daily injunctions made to him to lift martial law and return to the situation as it was prior to 13 December, to restore Solidarity's rights and to negotiate with Mr Walesa.

For Poland's future will clearly be determined not by General Jaruzelski's very unlikely capitulation to those demands -- an attitude which would, moreover, be very likely to spark off a Soviet intervention and thus an even greater evil -- but by the outcome of the battle which has already started between the advocates of a centrist and moderately reformist line on the one hand and the revanchists of the conservative apparatus on the other.

All communist regimes now have their "rightwing": men who do not believe in the "socialist" ideals any more -- and indeed, any less -- than the others but who reason solely in terms of authority and of the preservation of their privileges. They are "reactionaries" in the real sense of the word who draw support exclusively from the repressive apparatus and seek first to settle scores with all kinds of liberals -- not to mention the many anti-Semites or semi-fascists in their ranks.

Now, as was seen particularly in Czechoslovakia, a successful "normalization" in the Soviet sense of the word is one which gives the victory to those people. The "Hungarian" case could not have universal value: Hungary had the good fortune not only to have a Kadar who succeeded in setting aside that kind of revanchist from the start but also, in Moscow, a Khrushchev who sincerely tried to reform the system and eliminate the Stalinists. The same could not be said of Brezhnev in 1982....

Thus there is a danger of seeing Moscow move away from General Jaruzelski in a few months' time and try to replace him with a leader who conforms to the "Husak model" from the party apparatus and who is determined to turn the normalization into a restoration. The pressure to do that will be particularly strong since the "military option" which was resorted to in time of need is regarded as ultimately dangerous in the apparatuses.

It was in vain that General Jaruzelski told his Central Committee that the party should remain the "leadership force" and that there will be no "socialism without the party": the new role he has assigned to the army is likely to arouse rather too many ulterior motives under peaked caps not only in Poland but in other Warsaw Pact countries.

Caution

It must be repeated that there could be no question of whitewashing General Jaruzelski or of actively helping his regime, which remains one of the most repressive in Eastern Europe. The aim should rather be to safeguard the possibilities of his evolving in a constructive direction, including the even more promising evolution of the de facto setting aside of the party and its apparatus. It is by doing that that things will eventually change in the European satellite zone.

Of course all these calculations and hypotheses can be rejected in the name of ideals and human rights; people can proclaim, for instance, that democracy must reign immediately in Poland as in Central America. Or, and this is very cynical, it could even be decided that Eastern Europe is doomed to an endless cycle of anarchical uprisings and repression and Central America to 25 years of Marxism-Leninism or to direct occupation by the United States.

Those two outlooks are closely connected, since the first leads precisely to the second: The more you urge ideal solutions, the more you push toward catastrophe. Consequently, for the very sake of the ideal, the diplomacy of indignation should be tempered with caution.

JOSPIN COMMENTS ON TALKS WITH BERLINGUER

LD302026 Paris Domestic Service in French 1600 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Text] Georges Marchais is in Cuba, but Enrico Berlinguer is in France at the invitation of the French Socialist Party. The leader of the Italian Communist Party, which has openly fallen out with the Soviet Union over events in Poland, is meeting Lionel Jospin against a background of the issue of the Euro-left, or "the union of European democratic forces to outstrip capitalism."

The two men gave a news conference this afternoon. They noted that there is broad agreement of refusing to see the logic of blocs. Here is Lionel Jospin speaking to Michel Lemerle:

[Begin Jospin recording] The exchanges took place in a warm atmosphere. We agreed in our analyses of the international crisis. Points of agreement also emerged in our examination of the crisis of capitalism and the Eastern bloc countries. Broad agreement exists on refusing to see the logic of blocs and on the need for cooperation between progressive forces in developed and Third World countries in order to transform North-South relations. Broad agreement also exists on the idea that the main political support for developing socialism within democracy will be found in the workers' movement in Western Europe. [end recording]

SPANISH BASQUE GROUP CLAIMS TRAIN BOMBING

NC310734 Paris AFP in English 0724 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Text] Bilbao, Northern Spain, 31 Mar (AFP) -- The Spanish Basque Battalion (BBE) today said it carried out the bomb attack Monday night on the Paris-Toulouse "Capitole" express train which killed five and injured 27 passengers.

An anonymous telephone caller told the daily DEIA here today that the BBE "would attack in France every time that the military wing of the ETA (Basque Autonomous Movement) carried one out in Spain."

Basque informed sources here said that DEIA was generally used by extreme right groups to claim responsibility for their attacks. Extreme right groups have frequently claimed that ETA militants carry out terrorist attacks against police and army officers in Spain and then obtain refuge in southern France.

PRESS COMMENTS ON EL SALVADOR ELECTION PROCESS

AU301534 Rome ANSA in English 1520 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 30 Mar (ANSA) -- The true victor in the elections in the Central American state of El Salvador was the extreme right even if the more moderate Christian Democrat Party has apparently won the largest number of votes, leading Italian dailies argued here this morning. The Rome daily, LA REPUBBLICA, ran the headline, "The Useless Vote in El Salvador," and said that the extreme right "has won." A similar line was taken by the Italian Communist Party daily, L' UNITA, which said that "even if the Christian Democrat Party is claiming forty percent of the vote, the true winner seems to be the thug, D' Aubuisson."

According to IL MANIFESTO, the most authoritative voice to the left of the Communist Party, the elections had merely made the country "still more ungovernable." This was not only for Christian Democrat leader [word indistinct] Duarte, "but also for the United States, which staked so much on this simulacrum of an election," IL MANIFESTO said, adding that Secretary of State Alexander Haig should maybe "admit his sins" to the Mexican and French presidents, both of whom have argued against the vote. The Socialist Party mouthpiece, AVANTI, ran the frontpage title, "Duarte Is Prisoner of the Extreme Right, Now the Extremists Can Even Replace Him."

The only Italian newspapers to dissent from this line of interpretation were those with the most conservative editorial line and IL POPOLO, the mouthpiece of the Italian Christian Democrat Party. This paper ran the front-page headline, "The Christian Democrats Have Won," and published an editorial signed by Party Secretary Flaminio Piccoli with the title, "How a Democracy Is Born." Piccoli claimed that the "sixty percent of the voters" who went to the polls was the highest in Salvadoran history. "The Salvadorans," he claimed, "not only voted at the risk of their lives, but also gave a great aye to the Christian Democrats, defeating the design of the extreme right."

A similar claim was advanced by the Conservative Milan daily, IL GIORNALE NUOVO, in an editorial signed by editor in chief Indro Montanelli. He also complained over the lack of Western support for Duarte. "We do not know whether he will manage to save his country," the editorialist asserted, "nor even whether he will manage to save himself, but he has given a lesson to D'Aubuisson, to the guerrillas and to those who get by while so many are dying by guerrilla warfare."

SOMALIA'S BARRE MEETS WITH COLOMBO IN ROME

AU271952 Rome ANSA in English 1943 GMT 27 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 27 Mar (ANSA) -- Somali President Siad Barre, on a private visit to Rome, met this afternoon with Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo. Somali Foreign Minister Giama Barre also took part in the talks which ranged over the various situations on the African continent and particularly in the region of the Horn of Africa. The two sides also voiced satisfaction over bilateral relations between the two countries and prospects for their further development.

Other Meetings

AU291522 Rome ANSA in English 1510 GMT 29 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Rome, 29 Mar (ANSA) -- Somali President Mohamed Siad Barre continued a private visit here today by going to the Vatican City for an audience with Pope Paul II and meeting with Senate Speaker Amintore Fanfani, who is serving as Italy's acting head-of-state during President Sandro Pertini's current visit to the United States. After the meeting with Fanfani, official sources said the "long and cordial" talk had confirmed the close ties of friendship linking Italy and Somalia, as well as the favourable prospects for future cooperation.

NORWAY

INVITATION TO POLISH OFFICIAL WITHDRAWN

PM300853 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 24 Mar 82 p 9

[Text] Norway has postponed "until a more suitable time" the planned visit by a Polish deputy foreign minister. The first agreement about the visit was reached early last fall, before martial law was proclaimed in Poland. Norway proposed the last 2 days of March 1982 as a suitable date. But in mid-February the Foreign Ministry in Oslo informed the Polish authorities that the date must be changed because of the new situation in Poland resulting from martial law.

At present no new agreement on a later date for the visit has been reached, Foreign Ministry Press Spokesman Geir Grung told AFTENPOSTEN.

SWEDEN

FALLDIN INTERVIEWED ON UPCOMING BONN VISIT

DW311431 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0448 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Reporter Schob interview with Swedish Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin; questions in German, answers in Swedish with superimposed translation, date and place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] You will now return Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's 1979 visit to Sweden. Do you pursue concrete aims in connection with your Bonn visit?

[Answer] Luckily there are no concrete problems between our two states at present. Yet I am looking forward to this visit with great expectations because it will give the chancellor and me an opportunity to talk thoroughly about the current international situation and its tensions.

[Question] Sweden and the Federal Republic are Western democracies. They have close mutual relations and geographically they are almost neighbors. Both countries also have close relations with Poland. Is Poland also of great significance to Sweden at present?

[Answer] Yes, I think so. We were very much excited by how the military forces in Poland suddenly stopped the dialogue in Poland, our close neighbor, about the development of democratic forms and the improvement of civil rights and liberties. I know that people in your country feel and think the same way. The closeness of our two countries to Poland is, therefore, of great importance mainly because we are granting asylum to Poles leaving their country now for various reasons.

[Question] Europe threatens to become a nuclear battlefield if the superpowers will not reach an agreement on a reduction of existing arms and a renunciation of new arms. The United States demands that the Soviets remove all SS-20 missiles aimed at Europe. In such a case NATO would not rearm. But Moscow just offers not to deploy any new SS-20 missiles. What preferences do you have with regard to Swedish security interests?

[Answer] Well, it would already be a success if one stopped the deployment of further nuclear arms in Europe. But that is not enough for us Swedes.

The existing nuclear arms can destroy human life several times. We are, therefore, in general for a reduction of all nuclear arms. We consider that the most important task because the survival of mankind is at stake.

[Question] Do you see ways our two countries could cooperate in order to achieve this aim?

[Answer] Don't forget that the Federal Republic belongs to NATO. Sweden is nonaligned in peacetime and neutral in a war. Cooperation on a formal basis is, therefore, impossible. But both countries, each within the limits of its opportunities, could work toward making disarmament a political duty. In order to achieve this, confidence must be created again between the superpowers. Our countries could cooperate in this matter. That would be a common task.

[Question] Will you make respective suggestions to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt?

[Answer] I am not going to Bonn to make suggestions to Chancellor Schmidt with regard to NATO or other matters. But I will make it very clear to him that we Swedes most urgently demand that an end be made to armament, to this nonsense. We are pursuing and supporting an active disarmament policy, which would free resources to be used for the benefit of mankind. I am most eager to hear what the chancellor will have to say to me in this matter.

[Question] The greatest postwar maneuvers were taking place in Sweden a few weeks ago. The enemy was once more expected to attack from the north and from the east. Is that a realistic assessment of the situation?

[Answer] We know that strong rearmament is taking place on the Kola Peninsula, in the air and on the water. And it is known that NATO will not remain inactive in view of such developments. It means that the northern Swedish area together with the Finnish area lie in the point of intersection between the two power blocs. We must, therefore, hold exercises there because we must defend our country against the enemy regardless of the direction he may come from.

[Question] Has the Swedish image of an enemy sharpened after the detection of a Soviet submarine with nuclear arms in Swedish territorial waters? What must one think now of the Soviet slogan that the Baltic is a sea of peace?

[Answer] Yes, our image has changed with regard to an important point. We knew prior to the incident that there were a few highly modern submarines in the Baltic with modern arms. But we were surprised that there were also some old submarines equipped with nuclear arms. It means that every discussion about a nuclear-free zone in the north of Europe will make sense only if the waters of the Baltic are included.

[Question] A question with regard to German partition: How do you assess the chances of the German people living together again in reunited Germany? Is that just a dream?

[Answer] We all ought to be realistic and not believe that this could be the case tomorrow. But I consider it most realistic to continue to pursue this aim by building further bridges between both German states, bridges which Willy Brandt began to build and which have been continued by Helmut Schmidt. These seem to me to be the prerequisites for making a dream -- as you called it -- become reality some day.

USSR PROTESTS REFUSAL TO ADMIT LATVIAN

PM291521 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 25 Mar 82 p 1, 15

[Sune Oloffson report: "Soviet Protest to Sweden"]

[Text] The Soviet Union has protested against the Swedish authorities' treatment of Nikolay Neyland. On Wednesday afternoon [24 March] the Swedish Embassy in Moscow was visited by a representative of the Soviet Foreign Ministry. The representative's name is Yushin, and he is deputy chief of the Department of Consular Affairs in the Soviet Foreign Ministry.

Yushin made a "formal protest" at the Swedish authorities' refusal to admit Nikolay Neyland, the Latvian Soviet Republic's deputy foreign minister.

"This refusal does not promote good-neighborly relations," Yushin told Swedish Embassy Counsellor Goeran Larsson, who is responsible for consular affairs at the Swedish Embassy in Moscow.

The Swedish Foreign Ministry considers the protest to be "mild." The reason for this view is to be found in the "level" at which the Soviet Union chose to protest. If the Soviet authorities had been so upset over the Nikolay Neyland affair they would probably have chosen to protest at ambassadorial level, the Foreign Ministry press office stated.

Just before 1700 hours on Wednesday the Swedish Embassy in Moscow informed the Foreign Ministry in Stockholm of the protest in a telegram. "We have noted the Soviet reaction and are now considering what and how to reply," Foreign Ministry Press Chief Maguns Faxen said.

Last Saturday SVENSKA DAGBLADET reported that the Soviet Union was considering whether to protest. Vyacheslav Vasilyev, press attache at the Soviet Embassy in Stockholm, said Saturday that "the embassy has some definite views on this matter."

Nikolay Neyland has been accused by the Swedish secret police of recruiting "agents to exert influence" in Sweden and that these are consciously or unconsciously spreading Soviet propaganda in the Swedish mass media.

However, it is possible that there are other reasons behind the refusal which are as yet unknown.

Tuesday afternoon Soviet Ambassador Leonid Mikhailovich Yakovlev met Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten. Yakovlev had other business with Ullsten. It is not known whether he also touched on the Nikolay Neyland affair. Foreign Minister Ullsten is now in Iceland.

ELECTIONS SURE IN 1984; ECEVIT, DEMIREL BANNED

NC301422 Paris AFP in English 1410 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Text] Ankara, 30 Mar (AFP) -- General elections in Turkey will take place in 1984 as scheduled, following a constitutional referendum this fall, the Consultative Assembly Constitutional Committee's chairman, Orhan Aldikacti, said here today. All basic freedoms as defined by the 1978 declaration of the rights of man and the charters of the United Nations and the Council of Europe would be guaranteed by the new constitution, Professor Aldikacti said.

"Basic freedoms are irreversible," he said, "and the fact that they are temporarily suspended does not mean that we can definitely go back on them." Turkey has been accused of human rights violations ever since the September 1980 military coup and the nation-wide martial law which followed it suspended a number of basic rights and freedoms.

The major points of the new constitution have been drawn up already, he said, adding that he was against presidential systems "leading to a succession of coups d'etat, such as in Latin America, or to wars such as the one in Vietnam by the decision of a single president (John F. Kennedy)." He reiterated that outgoing political leaders Bulent Ecevit, a social democrat, and Suleyman Demirel, a conservative, would be banned for 10 years from presenting themselves at general elections.

Last year's military decision to dissolve all parties was not a blow to political ideas in this country, Prof Aldikacti said, "because there will always be a leftist party and a conservative party in Turkey." A new electoral law and a political parties law, both to be readied in time for the elections, will seek to prevent "the creation [of] oligarchies within political groups" and to "reduce the representation in parliament of small parties," he said.

He added that "the mission of the Turkish Army is not yet accomplished," but that its leaders did not want to remain in power and would "return to their basic duty, which is the defense of the nation." The new constitution would be the first step to ensure this, Prof Aldikacti said, and although the country's military rulers would have the final word, "we know that they will not reject basic human rights."

ANKARA TO BOYCOTT COUNCIL OF EUROPE MAY MEETING

NC301042 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 26 Mar 82 pp 1, 4

[Nihal Alp report]

[Text] Ankara -- Turkey has reacted strongly to the decision of the Council of Europe Political Affairs Committee to hold its May session in Jerusalem. Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen has stated that Turkey cannot send an observer to Jerusalem, which Israel proclaimed as its capital. In his letter to the council, Turkmen said: "This decision is tantamount to Europe saying 'I am on Israel's side.'"

It has been announced that at the meeting in Jerusalem -- a city kept under Israeli occupation and proclaimed as its capital -- the committee will discuss "the latest developments in the Middle East and Turkey." According to information from the authorities, the Political Affairs Committee of the Council of Europe will dwell on developments in Turkey. The disputes between the Arab countries and Israel will also be evaluated.

The Middle Eastern countries and Turkey reacted strongly to Israel's proclamation of Jerusalem as its capital. Following this, Turkey froze relations with Israel, withdrawing its ambassador to Tel Aviv and reducing its legation to the level of secretary. The Israeli action was condemned in the United Nations as well.

Diplomatic circles consider it a "strange" decision to hold this meeting in Jerusalem, the Political Affairs Committee of the Council of Europe being one of its most important organs and Israel not even a member of the Council of Europe.

EUROPE DISCONCERTED OVER COUNTRY'S MIDEAST TRADE

NC301034 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 25 Mar 82 p 3

[Text] Turkey's efforts after the 12 September operation to improve its relations with the Middle East countries, to which it attaches great importance, and its gradual penetration of this market has begun to disconcert the Europeans. The economic agreements signed with Middle Eastern countries have annoyed the Europeans, who have not allowed any other country to enter the Middle East market.

Our exports to the Middle East countries, which obtain all their needs from outside, began to develop as of last year for the first time. Last year, Turkey sold $1,530,263,000 worth of merchandise to Iran, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Libya, Kuwait, Syria and Jordan. This year, even this early, the value of our exports for which agreements have already been concluded has risen to $3 billion. Authorities have pointed out that seeing that Turkey's exports to the Middle East countries have risen to $3 billion, while this figure has confined to only a few hundred million a few years ago, the Europeans have begun to take steps to counter this increase.

Prof Mehmet Gonlubol, lecturer at the faculty of political sciences at Ankara University, made this comment: "The West does not wish to share with Turkey the blessings they enjoy in the Middle East. Their discomfort stems from the expanding relations Turkey is pursuing in the Middle East. Turkey has turned to the Middle East because it has been unable to get what it wanted from the West, which is why the West is now annoyed."

Assistant Professor Bilsay Kuruc, a former secretary general of the State Planning Organization and now a lecturer at the faculty of political science, had this to say in this connection: "From time to time the West has shown signs of discomfort with Turkey's activity in the Middle East market. It never refrains from expressing this discomfort, nor does it refrain from bringing pressure to bear on Turkey. These pressures manifest themselves in this way: It suspends credits for some time or it threatens to do so; it threatens to reduce credits or not to give them at all; it tries to suspend the money-credits agreements or implements them to our disadvantage; it discontinues financial aid extended within the OECD framewrok or threatens to do so. Ohter methods of pressure may follow."

BAYULKEN DISCUSSES RESULTS OF TALKS IN U.S.

TA301646 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Statement by National Defense Minister Umit Haluk Bayulken to correspondent Kemal Akaydin before departure from Washington 30 March -- recorded]

[Text] I received the following impressions from my contacts: The U.S. administration has warm feelings toward our country. The essence of my contacts here concerns defense issues between Turkey and the United States. As I noted before, my colleague Mr Weinberger and I held a lengthy talk on this in Colorado Springs. During my subsequent contacts here, the following conclusion emerged: The amount of aid needed to modernize the Turkish armed forces is no doubt greater than the currently allocated amount. They state that they will exert every possible effort to increase this amount. As noted by the NATO commander, General Rogers, in view of the difficulties caused by the arms embargo, $1 billion in aid to Turkey each year for at least 6 or 7 years is necessary to move toward modernization of the Turkish armed forces. This is the situation. They believe that in their aid package Turkey holds an important position, that this importance will continue and that (?military aid) will and must be increased.

In Canada the further development of this defense cooperation will be discussed. I do not know whether the grant can be further increased. We may talk about aid in the form of a long-term loan. We may purchase goods from them through loans. We may benefit from certain mutual [word indistinct] and discuss the transfer of certain new technologies and the realization of certain joint projects. I already told you about [word indistinct] during our previous meeting. In Turkey we not only want to receive funds, aid or equipment; most importantly, while we spend these funds for the purchase of urgent equipment, we want to exert more effort toward local production in certain areas. This will be discussed in Canada and I hope to tell you more about the outcome after my visit.

BILL READIED TO EXPROPRIATE GREEK CHURCH PROPERTY

TA301747 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Text] A bill that will enable the expropriation of Greek religious trust properties and other fixed properties has been prepared following the Greek moves aimed at expropriating the property of Turkish religious trusts in Western Thrace. In reply to a question by journalists, Foreign Ministry Spokesman Nazmi Akiman said Greece recently has increased its activities aimed at expropriating the property of Turkish religious trusts in Western Thrace and that Turkey, in return, was forced to take countermeasures based on the fundamental principles of international law.

Akiman added that Turkey has proposed negotiations with Greece in a bid to find mutual and lasting solutions to problems concerning minorities. According to Akiman, the protection of religious trust property, the development of a protective system both from the administrative and financial viewpoint to enable small trusts to continue their activities and the exemption of trusts from taxes were among the proposals rejected by Greece. The proposals were aimed at facilitating the activities of the trusts of both minorities and at creating the ground for an agreement toward a solution.

Akiman said a bill that will enable the expropriation of Greek religious trust properties and some other fixed properties was prepared following the Greek refusal to negotiate on the issue. He added that the bill, which was prepared according to the fundamental principles of international law, will, after ratification, be implemented in accordance with the Greek moves and attitude toward Western Thrace Turks.

LAND ALONG SOUTHERN BORDER TO BE DISTRIBUTED

TA301751 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1555 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Text] Kilis, 30 Mar (AA) -- The large strip of minefields along Turkey's southern border will be (?cleared) of mines and distributed to families without land, official sources in this border town said. The Council of Ministers had agreed in principle to distribute the land, the same sources added. The mined strip is twice the size of Cyprus and can provide land for 2,500 families if cleared. Instead of the outmoded and ineffective measure of mining border land to prevent smuggling, a 20-meter wide modern highway is being built. It will be patrolled by motorized border squads against smuggling.

The defendants are being charged with attempting to set up a Marxist-Leninist Kurdish state in eastern and southeastern Turkey and adjoining territories in neighboring states. The prosecutor is demanding the death penalty for 14 of the defendants.

SCHMIDT: EC WILL NOT ENGAGE IN 'TRADE WAR'

DW311207 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2030 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Reporter Martin Schulte interview with FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on 30 March; place not given -- recorded]

[Text] [Question] Don't you think that the European Community ought to pursue a more independent trade policy regarding the East bloc, a policy more independent of America?

[Answer] Regarding trade policy, we have issued a most significant statement in this connection. May I read it: We jointly recognize the role played by economic relations between the West and East in stabilizing political relations, and we want this stabilizing role to be continued on the basis of mutual interest, real mutual interest. That might be formulated somewhat differently in Washington, but it is our joint formulation.

[Question] This plainly means somewhat more independence?

[Answer] It means that we will not become engaged -- let me put it quite bluntly -- in a trade war.

[Question] A trade war with regard to the Soviet Union?

[Answer] That's right.

[Question] If we went with such an approach to the Versailles world economic summit, wouldn't that automatically mean a quarrel with the Americans?

[Answer] I don't think there will be any quarreling, but the Versailles economic summit is not a concert where everyone plays the music or follows the score of just one government. I think it is quite possible that there will be some rapprochement in this regard. I remember the sharp criticism 8 weeks ago with regard to the gas-for-pipes agreement between France and the Soviet Union, between us and the Soviet Union, and between other West Europeans states and the Soviet Union -- and if I compare this with the tones we are hearing today on this subject, I must say that things sound much milder. There is more than 8 weeks until the Versailles meeting and there is time for rapprochement.

[Question] Since economic difficulties are so great, wouldn't it be more reasonable to seek another way to achieve more agreement? A direct question: Are you in favor of a common European security policy with the final aim of perhaps achieving a European defense community independent of America?

[Answer] My answer is a clear no. I cannot imagine that in the long run we European states could guarantee our security alone without the United States -- neither militarily nor with regard to the political pressure which could be exerted on us with the help of military power in the background. No, as far as we can see -- and that would be until the end of this century -- the military alliance with America and Canada must remain. The French and the British are of the same opinion. This does not mean, however, that we will not clearly state our European interests within the alliance. We have done this until now and we will continue to do so in future.

STEYR FIRM SAID TO SELL ARMS TO LIBYA, ARGENTINA

AU010951 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 1 Apr 82 p 1

[Excerpts] Referring to well-informed sources, the Austrian Students Association on Wednesday reported new large arms deals by the Austrian Steyr Corporation. It charges that "apparently the Steyr Corporation is deliberately feeding half-true information to the mass media to divert attention from its big arms deals."

Actually, the delivery of 27 tanks to Argentina, which Steyr Director General Malzacher has admitted, is said to be merely part of a larger delivery -- 130 tanks -- to South America. In addition, a complete turnkey tank plant is to be delivered to Chile. It is not known whether it is a tank production or a tank repair plant -- but the latter would only make sense if tanks were delivered to Chile as well which, as is known, was prevented once due to the pressure from the Austrian public.

On the evening of 13 February -- in other words, before the Al-Qadhdhafi visit -- three special trains containing mainly cuirassier tanks are said to have been dispatched to La Spezia; the destination of these arms was Libya.

In an open letter to Chancellor Kreisky containing this information, the Austrian Students Association asks him to completely clear up these charges, since the people have a right to learn the truth about what is going on at the Steyr works.

Bishops Against Arms Exports

AU310915 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 31 Mar 82 p 4

[Special DIE PRESSE report]

[Text] Five Austrian bishops have signed the appeal of the Catholic university youth not to supply any arms to the "brutal regime in Libya." They are the diocese Bishops Aichern (Linz), and Laszlo (Eisenstadt), army Bishop Zak and suffragan Bishops Karetzl (Vienna) and Mayr (Salzburg). The appeal has also been signed by the chairman of the Catholic Action, Ploier. Within a short period, the Catholic students have collected 2,400 signatures against arms exports to Libya as well as Argentina, and handed them over to the chancellery. The signature drive, which was started after the visit to Austria of Libyan chief of state Al-Qadhdhafi, is being continued.

PRIME MINISTER PLANS VISIT TO NORTH KOREA

AU010843 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 1 Apr 82 p 2

[Special DIE PRESSE report]

[Summary] Foreign Minister Pahr will visit the DPRK in the first half of this year. This was announced by the DPRK Embassy in Vienna and confirmed by the Austrian Foreign Ministry. Because of his crowded schedule, Pahr will not be able to combine this visit with his trip to China 11-25 May. He is scheduled to visit Mongolia 11-16 May and then have talks with leading PRC representatives until 25 May. Early this year Pahr visited the ROK and offered Austria's good offices for ROK-DPRK talks on Korea's reunification. At the forthcoming celebration of the 70th birthday of DPRK chief of state Kim Il-song, President Kirchschlaeger will be represented by a special envoy, the Austrian ambassador in the PRC, Wolfgang Wolte.

SCHMIDT, SWEDISH PRIME MINISTER HOLD TALKS

LD311826 Hamburg DPA in German 1742 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 31 Mar (DPA) -- The Federal Press Office reports that in "very thorough" talks held today lasting 2 and 1/2 hours, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Swedish Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin chiefly discussed the world economic situation and the consequences of oil price increases and high interest rates for the European national economies. The two heads of government also expressed concern at developments in Poland and their effects on East-West relations.

SI MEETS IN BONN; KREISKY WILL SEE SCHMIDT

AU010909 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 1 Apr 82 p 3

[Summary] Bonn (SK) -- On 1 and 2 April the Presidium of the Socialist International [SI] will meet in Bonn under the chairmanship of Willy Brandt to discuss the present situation in South and Central America, East-West relations, the international economic development and the continuation of the North-South dialogue.

"At the periphery of the SI meeting Chancellor Kreisky will meet this afternoon with FRG Chancellor Schmidt at the Bonn chancellery for a talk in strict privacy. It is certain that one of the main topics of this talk between the two politicians will be the recent visit to Austria of Libyan revolution leader Al-Qadhdhafi. For some time it has been Al-Qadhdhafi's wish to also pay a visit to the FRG."

POLAND TO SIGN DEBT RESCHEDULING AGREEMENT

LD311914 Hamburg DPA in German 1743 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Text] Frankfurt, 31 Mar (DPA) -- The debt rescheduling agreement between some 500 Western banks and Poland will be signed in Frankfurt on 6 April now that the Polish side has fulfilled the conditions for this by paying interest of $500 million due for 1981. This was stated in Frankfurt today by the head of the Dresdner Bank, Hans Friedrichs. Polish Finance Minister Marian Krzak will be present at the signing of the agreement.

According to its own figures, Poland owes the West $25.5 billion while Western sources put the figure at $26.5 billion.

Under the terms of the agreement, 95 percent of the debt due for repayment to Western banks by Poland in 1981, which amounts to $2.4 billion, must be paid in seven half-yearly installments following a 4 year repayment-free period. In accordance with the agreement reached in October 1981, the interest rate is to be 1.75 percent above the operative London Interbank rate. Five percent of the debt is to be paid this year.

The signing of the agreement has been repeatedly postponed since the end of 1981 because Poland was not in a position to meet the banks' demand for payment of the $500 million interest for 1981 due before the end of the year.

Negotiations on the rescheduling of Polish debts due for repayment in 1982 are to be held at a later date.

PCI'S BERLINGUER TO MEET WITH MITTERRAND

AU310844 Rome ANSA in English 0838 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 31 Mar (ANSA) -- Italian Communist Party (PCI) leader Enrico Berlinguer pays a call here today on French President Francois Mitterrand with an agreement already struck between his and Mitterrand's Socialist Party to pursue common principles together without regard for ideological nuances.

Berlinguer and French Socialist Party Secretary Lionel Jospin announced to the press last night that their parties agreed to fight together to assert their common principles without getting bogged down in the differences in shade of their ideological colors. Both men said they were pleased with the outcome of their talks and announced plans to step up communications between their parties while giving the press a rundown of their meeting Tuesday.

Reporters showered Berlinguer with questions about the Italian party's dispute with the Soviet Communist Party. The PCI secretary summed up the quarrel this way: "We believe that socialism should play a decisive role in the world and that role must now be assured by the workers' movement in Western Europe. The Soviet comrades do not agree."

After meeting Lionel Jospin, first secretary of the Socialist Party, on 30 March and noting the many points of agreement between the two parties, Mr Berlinguer was received at the Elysee this afternoon by President Mitterrand. The talks symbolize what is now being called the Euro-left. For 65 minutes the two men discussed the political situation in France, in Italy, bilateral relations, Central America, disarmament and Poland.

VISIBLE IMPROVEMENT SEEN IN VIETNAM RELATIONS

NC311250 Paris AFP in English 1228 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 31 Mar (AFP) -- A visible improvement in France's relations with Vietnam may put this country back on the South-east Asian political scene after a prolonged absence, observers here said today.

Although Paris and Hanoi continue to disagree over Vietnam's occupation of Cambodia, the visit here on April 8 and 9 of Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach will be the high point of an improving dialogue, they said. It will be the first trip to Paris of a ranking Hanoi official since Vietnam invaded Cambodia in 1979.

The visit by Mr Thach, who has just been elected to the Vietnamese Politburo, will come after French technology Minister Jean Pierre Chevenement starts an Asian tour in Hanoi next April 1 and 2.

President Francois Mitterrand's special adviser Regis Debray was there last month. The two countries signed a consular agreement in December, and France has promised Vietnam $33 million of credit.

France still has no intention of recognising Cambodia's pro-Vietnamese Heng Samrin regime, but does not want this to prevent improvement of relations with Vietnam at a time when that country is going through an economic crisis. France would hope to further improve relations by offering its help, and Mr Chevenement is expected to take up economic issues during his trip there.

HOODED ASSAILANT FIRES ON ISRAELI BUILDING

NC311354 Paris AFP in English 1334 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 31 Mar (AFP) -- Shots were fired this afternoon at a building housing an official Israeli arms purchasing mission near the Arc de Triomphe, but no-one was hit, police said.

According to eyewitnesses, the building, guarded by a French riot policeman, was fired on by a hooded man with a machine pistol, who with two hooded companions stepped out of a car on the opposite side of the street. After about 25 shots were fired, the three returned to the car and made their getaway.

Grand Rabbi of France Rene Sirat later visited the building, an annex of the Israeli Embassy, to salute the riot policeman "in the name of the French Jewish community."

Rabbi Sirat also expressed strong condemnation of this latest attack against an Israeli building.

Embassy Blames PLO

NC311615 Paris AFP in English 1600 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Text] Paris, 31 Mar (AFP) -- The Israeli Embassy here claimed the Palestine Liberation Organisation was responsible for an armed attack earlier today against the official Israeli arms purchasing mission in France.

So far, no one has claimed responsibility for the attack in which three men fired about 25 shots at the Israeli Embassy annex near the Arc de Triomphe, guarded by a single French riot policeman. No-one was injured.

The embassy said that "after the bloody incidents it instigated in Judea and Samaria (the West Bank), the PLO is now exporting its acts of intimidation outside Israel." The PLO was responsible for "15 attacks in Europe" last year, it added.

France's Grand Rabbi Rene Sirat visited the building earlier today to salute the officer on guard -- who was unhurt -- "in the name of the French Jewish community."

Meanwhile, the riot policemen's union threatened "stiff reactions" if the Interior Ministry failed to replace the present one-man guard system with more sophisticated, video-backed patrols.

BERLINGUER VIEWS FORMATION OF 'EURO-LEFT'

LD311006 Paris Domestic Service in French 0600 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Text] Lionel Jospin and Enrico Berlinguer, first secretary of the PS and secretary general of the PCI, have made similar analyses of the international situation, and particularly of the situation in Europe. Their talks yesterday produced the same condemnation of the policy of blocs and of the inevitability attached to the Yalta agreements. Similarly, the French Socialists and the Italian Communists are in agreement in stating that the CPSU can no longer play a positive role in the development of world socialism. Their differences are only a matter of nuances concerning the development of the USSR's foreign policy and the need, or otherwise, to establish U.S. missiles in Europe. Anyway, this meeting again launches prognostications and reflections about what is called the Euro-left. On this point here is Enrico Berlinguer's reply:

[Begin recording] I have nothing against the term Euro-left. Euro-left of course means taking account of a reality in which there exist elements from the working movement with different roots, different traditions and also certain political differences, and we think that joint progress should be made with all of these. We want to have good relations with both the PS and the PCF. I think you are aware, moreover, that I shall soon return to France to meet Georges Marchais and comrades in the leadership of the PCF. [end recording]

GAS DEAL WITH USSE MAY BE SIGNED 'SOON'

LD300942 Belgrade TANJUG in English 0905 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Text] Rome, 30 Mar (TANJUG) -- It is learned from informed sources that Italy could soon sign an agreement with the Soviet Union on Soviet gas deliveries and participation in the construction of the Siberian gasline already done by France and the Federal Republic of Germany. This in fact represents the end of the "pause for thinking" regarding this agreement imposed on the Italian Government by Social Democrats and Socialists after the introduction of martial law in Poland.

The chief advocate of the signing of the agreement is Minister of Industry Marcora (Christian Democrat) whose main argument is that the Soviet gas is cheap for Italy. The draft agreement envisages the Soviet Union annually to deliver to Italy eight billion cubic meters of gas over a 25-year period.

Eanes Speaks at Banquet

LD010054 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2230 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Text] President Sergej Kraigher of Yugoslavia is in Lisbon on an official visit to our country at the invitation of General Ramalho Eanes. After an initial meeting between the two presidents this afternoon, a banquet was held tonight at Ajuda Palace in honor of the Yugoslav president. Here is a report by Helder Fernando:

Brief speeches were delivered by the two presidents. The Yugoslav president naturally advocated nonalignment, condemned international pressures and old forms of domination as well as military interventions contrary to freedom.

President Eanes at one point praised the historic figure of the late President Tito of Yugoslavia:

[Begin Eanes recording] In the difficult times we are going through -- in which conflicts proliferate and tensions are increasingly exacerbated, in which the peoples' sovereignty and the (?accepted) rules of relations between states are forgotten in attempts to impose the logic of force which would destroy mankind -- the example left by President Tito cannot be forgotten by all those who are sincerely committed to the search for dialogue, understanding, conciliation and the strengthening of regional relations, which contribute to the prevention of world balance. [end recording]

With regard to Portuguese foreign policy, the president said: [Begin recording] Mr President, the major guidelines of Portugal's foreign policy, emanating from the liberating, democratic and pluralist movement of 25 April, in close association with our history, have been outlined before. They are: Political and economic integration in Europe; participation in the integrated plans of European defense; continuation of the universalist vocation of our people in cooperation and friendship with all peoples, and in the strengthening of our natural and increasingly close relations with the Portuguese-speaking countries. These general objectives of our foreign policy are complemented, in the light of consolidation of peace and security, by our resolve to contribute to overcoming all situations of hegemonism, to global balance and controlled disarmament, to the constant search for negotiated solutions to all conflicts and to the constant defense of the dignity of human rights. [end recording]

Further on, Eanes spoke about Europe, peace and its importance, stating that it is above all here in Europe that the conditions of world peace are currently determined. That is why, he said, we continue to advocate the view that every effort should be made to enforce respect for the rights and duties inherent in the Helsinki Final Act and to contribute to the balanced and controlled reduction of armaments in the European theater.

LUCE DEFENDS FALKLAND ISLANDS SOVEREIGNTY

PY301911 Paris AFP in Spanish 1822 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Text] London, 30 Mar (AFP) — We have sovereignty over the Falkland Islands region; and there is no doubt that, if necessary, we will defend and support the inhabitants of the islands with all our might, stated Richard Luce, the Foreign Office deputy minister, at the House of Commons today.

Sub Thought To Be on Way

[John Miller and Desmond Wettern report: "Atom Sub Alert for Falklands"]

[Excerpt] The nuclear submarine, Superb, was believed last night to be sailing for the Falkland Islands as the row between Britain and Argentina over the "scrap merchants' invasion" of the British island of South Georgia intensified.

Though the report could not be officially confirmed a reliable Whitehall source said: "The decision should not come as a surprise." The source said that the Superb, which has five 21 in torpedo tubes, could now be "well on its way" to the Falklands if it left the Gibralter area as thought last Thursday.

He said that the Superb, 4,000 tons, needed no refuelling or escort of surface ships and could maintain a constant speed in all weathers. The Superb has a crew of 97 and can travel at 30 knots submerged.

It is understood that the main attraction of the submarine's use to the government as an urgent measure was that it presented a hidden threat to the Argentinian Navy. "It is not like a warship easily visible and just sitting there," the Whitehall source said.

"The Argentinians will not know where it is and if they start being aggressive they may suddenly get a torpedo up their backsides. It is a master stroke in any psychological warfare that the government feels it necessary to embark upon with the Argentinians."

A civilian-manned tanker of the Royal Fleet auxiliary is also believed to be on its way to the Falklands. The dispatch of the tanker indicates that Britain is planning to increase the number of warships to the Falklands area.

Lords, Commons Discuss Dispute

PM311527 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 31 Mar 82 p 11

[Peter Pryke and Walter Aburn report: "How the Last Argentine Invasion Was Seen Off"]

[Text] A promise that the ice-breaker Endurance would remain on station "as long as necessary" during the Anglo-Argentine dispute over the Falkland Islands was given in the Lords yesterday by Lord Carrington, foreign secretary.

In a statement on the situation since a group of Argentine scrap merchants landed in South Georgia, part of the Falkland Islands dependency, he undertook that the government review of Falklands security "will obviously include the long-term future of Endurance."

In the Commons, MPs were intrigued by an indication from Mr Callaghan, the former Labour premier, that a similiar "invasion" by Argentines had been seen off by a Royal Navy presence in the recent past. He said there had been other recent occasions when Argentina, beset by internal problems, had tried some sort of tactical diversion.

"On a very recent occasion, of which I have full knowledge, we assembled ships that were stationed in the Caribbean, Gibraltar and the Mediterranean and stood them about 400 miles off the Falkland Islands in support of Endurance.

"Without fuss and without publicity, when this became known, a diplomatic solution followed. While I do not press the minister on what is happening today, I trust it is the same sort of thing."

Mr Richard Luce, minister of state, foreign affairs, who throughout some anxious questioning by Conservative MPs, insisted that he could give no details of the security position, replied that the government would take note of Mr Callaghan's words.

Lord Carrington said it had been made clear to the Argentine Government that Britain regarded the dozen or so men still on shore as being on British territory illegally. But their position could be regularised if they sought authorisation. Argentine warships were in the area and the situation was "potentially dangerous."

Lord Shackleton (Lab) acknowledged there was need to preserve a sense of caution and to exercise maximum diplomatic skill. But the firm reiteration of our stand was not only for the protection of wholly British people in Falklands. "It could affect the peace of the whole of that area of Antarctica." The presence of Endurance and the manifestation of our sovereignty was important.

Lord Gladwyn (Lib) hoped that diplomacy would settle the dispute. He asked if reference to the International Court had been considered. Lord Carrington said it took two parties to refer a matter to the International Court and the Argentine Government had refused to do that in an earlier dispute.

Mr Callaghan's reference to past incursions by the Argentines was later taken up in the Commons by Mr Healey, shadow foreign secretary, who claimed that Britain faced humiliation in the Falklands because of the government's defence policy. They had crippled the Royal Navy for the sake of the Trident programme. "The result is recent events have found the government with its trousers down in the South Atlantic and it is not surprising that the Argentine Government has been tempted by the target it has provided."

Mr Luce replied that it was easy to preach on how to avoid disputes. "We are doing our best to resolve this problem. We have a duty to the islanders and I don't think it helps to make comments on what previous governments have done."

Sir Nigel Fisher (C Kingston Upon Thames) pointed out that ministers kept repeating they would help the islanders to the best of Britain's ability, and added: "The trouble is we have not got the ability. Endurance is better than nothing. Under the circumstances it is not enough. Will you tell us what else the government proposes to do?"

Mr Luce replied that he could not comment on th detail of the security review. It was important for everyone that the government should seek a peaceful diplomatic solution. Later he said: "We will defend the islanders if necessary. I still express the hope it will not be necessary."

PAPANDREOU SPEAKS TO PRESS ON EEC SUMMIT

NC311058 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Excerpts] The first EEC summit meeting for 1982 ended today with unpleasant affirmations on the economic and social problems the community is facing. At the same time, in a joint statement, the 10 EEC government leaders expressed their profound apprehension over the developments of critical international problems. Once again Greece expressed its reservations on the community's appraisal of the Polish issue and the influence this may have on West Europe's relations with the Soviet Union. ERT [Greek radio-television] correspondent in Brussels Thanos Oikonomopoulos reports:

[Begin correspondent recording] The summit conference of The 10 ended its work today by issuing a general and vague statement on the community's economic and social situation and a communique on political cooperation in the EC.

Greece had reservations on two points of the communique on political cooperation -- the one concerning the community's relations with the Soviet Union in view of the Polish problem and the other on East-West relations in the commercial and economic sectors. Speaking to Greek reporters accompanying him, Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou said immediately after termination of the conference's work:

[Begin Papandreou recording] This morning, the first issue presented to the European Council [of ministers] was the Greek memorandum which is essentially a proposal for revising the status in force for Greece within the community's framework. Of course, its text had been submitted by Mr Varfis but today there was an opportunity and an obligation to present an analysis of the reasons that led Greece to ask for this revision -- special arrangements which, if accepted in their entirety, will naturally change Greece's status within the community framework. Naturally, I am not in a position to determine the exact time when this proposed demand -- Greece's memorandum -- will or will not have an auspicious conclusion. What I can say is that at least -- from some quarters, from significant participants in the European Council -- there have been appraisals that the presentation was objective and that there truly are prospects for a positive response by the community.

With regard to relations between Europe and the United States, the text of the communique was discussed and I believe that perhaps phraseologically it has been improved -- through interventions by our side -- on points that concern us. However, as for East-West relations, there were clearly disagreements on some points and, consequently, the Greek side expressed reservations on the acceptance of the European Council's conclusions and decisions. To be precise, the communique refers to the role of the Soviet Union in the Polish problem. Of course, this is a fact. In the past we condemned the imposition of martial law and referred to the fact that there is a Soviet presence -- essential if you see it so -- in the development of the Polish problem. However, what we did not accept was that this affirmation can lead, or should lead, to a change in relations between West European countries -- especially where Greece is concerned -- and the Soviet Union. We cannot accept this for many reasons but I shall mention at least three.

One reason is that it would be arrogant for a country like ours -- almost at the Soviet border -- to threaten the Soviet Union with consequences and sanctions. It would be at the least a silly bluster. The second reason is that it would be a huge mistake to consider the Polish problem on the level of East-West relations when the future of humanity -- nothing less -- hinges on these relations.

Sometimes we should be serious and recognize that the nuclear arms negotiations in Geneva are perhaps the most significant ongoing event, above all others, and it would be a great error, for any reason, to undermine the process of pursuing a way out of nuclear calamity and to doubt the sincerity of the two negotiating parties. The third reason is that we are leading supporters of the belief that both Yalta and Potsdam [agreements] should some day be retired to history's archives. In any case, they have not yet and, therefore, the West should deal with its own violations of democratic institutions and human rights -- as in the cases of Turkey and Central America -- before it concerns itself with what is going on in the other camp. At this point we expressed reservations, that is, we disagreed and it is significant that our disagreement was put on record.

Finally, the case of Turkey has occupied us for a long time and at this point I should stress that with my colleague's contribution -- Kharalambopoulos' contribution -- a very broad discussion ensued. We stressed our bitter experience with timetables. We considered as entirely unacceptable the phrase that [the Community] accepts with satisfaction the Turkish junta's statement that a timetable exists [in Turkey] for returning to democracy. We specifically stressed the persecution of trade unionism. Because Europe constantly refers to Solidarity, it is impossible for us not to consider also what is going on in trade unionism in Turkey. What was of immense significance, and for which I want to thank Mr Kharalambopoulos, was the discussion on lifting martial law. Strange as it may seem, our colleagues at the European Council were ready to talk about the return to democracy but strongly opposed even the mention of the phrase martial law in connection with Turkey, a phrase that is being used time and again in the case of Poland.

We were thus afforded the opportunity to refer to the fact that there is a continuing threat against Greece's territorial integrity, a threat which NATO thus far has not attempted to control or to provide some kind of guarantee for the country's eastern borders. I think this is of special significance when, despite talk by the Turkish junta of an improvement in the atmostphere of relations between Greece and Turkey, violations of Athens' national airspace have continued and a few days ago intensified. Of course, this was not the object of a discussion in this forum [last word in English], but in each case Greece's position was absolutely clear. [end Papandreou recording]

[Begin correspondent recording] Referring to the Turkish issue, Papandreou stressed that at Greece's insistence the phrase: "The Council accepts with satisfaction Turkey's timetable for return to democracy," was deleted from the communique after Greece stressed that it knows something about timetables of this kind.

In reply to a relevant question, the prime minister stressed that our country has not reneged on the EEC issue and that the revision to which it refers concerns the reexamination of all of Greece's relations with the community, it being absolutely linked with our country's development program which is currently being studied. Merely, the prime minister clarified, the possibility of achieving our national goals through the community's procedures is being examined. If this does not become possible then the government will follow the course it charted at the outset. [end correspondent recording]

Returns From Brussels

NC311903 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou returned from Brussels this afternoon satisfied with the whole portrayal of the Greek positions within the EEC framework. The prime minister had participated in the EEC summit.

EEC circles have pointed out that the dynamic presence this time of the Greek [words indistinct] in the community's conference where the Greek Prime Minister presented [words indistinct] three major national issues: The Cyprus issue; Turkish provocations in the Aegean; and the Greek Government's memorandum submitted to the EEC for special arrangements in our country's relations with the community. It is also noted that the Greek delegation declared its difference with and reservations on the positions taken by the EEC on the Polish issue and Mr Tindeman's conclusions on his visit to Turkey.

On the Polish issue, Mr Papandreou reiterated the Greek Government's opposition to imposing sanctions on the Soviet Union. On the situation in Turkey, Prime Minister Papandreou and Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos disagreed with Mr Tindeman's affirmations about the tyranic regime imposed by the Evren junta and, with the support of French President Mitterrand, succeeded in amending in certain points the text of the declaration issued after the end of the summit conference.

The prime minister returned to Athens at 1730 today. Foreign Minister Kharalambopoulos, Deputy Minister Maroudhas, in charge of press affairs, and Deputy Foreign Minister Varfis also returned with the prime minister. At the airport, they were welcomed by Chamber of Deputies Chairman Alevras, members of the Council of Ministers, and the leaders of armed forces and security corps.

PILOTS HIJACK POLISH MILITARY PLANE TO VIENNA

AU011649 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1600 GMT 1 Apr 82

[Norbert Kollinger report on hijacking of Polish military plane to Vienna-Schwechat Airport -- with recorded portions]

[Text] At 1347, a Polish military plane came to a standstill at Vienna-Schwechat Airport, which marks the successful conclusion of the first successful organized escape from Poland since the proclamation of martial law. The plane was immediately surrounded by members of the "Kranich" special police unit, and the 10 passengers left the aircraft without offering resistance: 4 men -- 3 of them in uniform, 2 armed; 2 women and 4 children -- 1, 3 and 4 years old.

According to Schwechat police headquarters, the initial investigation results indicate that the escape was carried out as follows: After a training flight with paratroopers in Krakow, one of the two pilots, 29-year-old (Jerzy Jan Czerwinski) or 31-year-old (Andrzej Malek), forced 35-year-old mechanic (Boleslaw Wronner), who was also on board, to continue the flight at 1100. The plane then landed once more in Poland to pick up the wives of the two pilots, their children and a civilian, 29-year-old (Krzystof Wasiliewski). Flying at low altitude so as not to be detected by radar, the plane then flew across the CSSR. During this flight, the plane's wings were damaged.

Major Alfred Rupf of Schwechat police headquarters declared: [Begin recording] It is to be assumed, according to the findings obtained so far in the investigation, that -- with the exception of the mechanic who was compelled to come along -- the other passengers will request political asylum. The two pilots will be taken to the Vienna Landesgericht Prison on the strength of an arrest warrant, and the others will presumably be taken to the Traiskirchen refugee camp for the time being. The mechanic will, of course, be permitted to return and he will contact his country's embassy.... [voice trails off, end recording]

Whether or not the mechanic will be able to return to Poland with his plane cannot be established yet in view of the damages to the plane. Nor is it known if any, or which, charges will be brought against the two pilots in court.

Poland Requests Extradition

AU021110 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1000 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Text] Today Poland has requested Austria extradite two air force pilots who, together with their families, flew from Krakow to Austria yesterday. The Polish PAP press agency describes the escaped pilots as air pirates and reports that a request for extradition has already been submitted to Austria.

U.S. TO WITHDRAW AID TO EAST-WEST INSTITUTE

AU010849 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 1 Apr 82 p 3

[Text] Vienna (APA) -- In connection with international economic crises and the stagnation in the policy of detente, the International Institute for Applied System Analysis [IIASA] in Luxemburg near Vienna is facing serious difficulties: As of the end of 1982, the Reagan administration will discontinue its financial contribution to the institute, which will result in a large gap in the budget of this scientific East-West cooperation project.

Nevertheless, IIASA headquarters does not expect the USSR to react to the American decision by also discontinuing payments, although the Soviet contribution may be reduced. It is regarded as unlikely that the "child of detente," IIASA, will die, but a significant curtailment of its activities is to be expected.

PAHR INTERVIEWED ON REAGAN DISARMAMENT PROPOSAL

AU011153 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1135 GMT 1 Apr 82

[Roland Machatschke report on interview with Foreign Minister Pahr, date and place not specified, on U.S. President Reagan's press conference statement inviting the USSR for talks on a drastic cut in nuclear weapons on both sides -- with recorded portions of Pahr statements]

[Excerpt] Foreign Minister Pahr considers the opportunity as favorable: [Begin recording] I welcome this proposal which, I think, is a very usable basis for genuine negotiations for a reduction of the nuclear weapons arsenal. And I hope that the positive expression of the will to negotiate, reflected in this statement as well as in the recent statement by Brezhnev, will actually lead to a genuine result. [end recording]

The Austrian foreign minister believes that the nuclear weapons arsenals on both sides, together with the political tensions which have built up between the two camps, might have convinced the two superpowers of the dangerous courses they were steering.

[Begin recording] I do feel that gradually even the two superpowers have begun to realize that confrontation alone cannot solve any problems but merely creates new problems and a genuine danger of war. [end recording]

At his press conference, President Reagan declared that he was inviting the Soviet Union to reduce nuclear weapons jointly with the United States, and to achieve a breakthrough to lasting peace. It remains to be seen how seriously the invitation was meant, and how sincerely the Soviet Union will react to it.

DETAILS OF NEO-NAZI 'BLACKLIST' REVEALED

AU011024 Vienna KURIER in German 1 Apr 82 p 16

[Report by Erich Grolig]

[Summary] The "blacklist" compiled by so-far unidentified rightist-extremists, which was enclosed in the January issue of the underground neo-Nazi monthly OESTERREICHISCHER BEOBACHTER, contains 114 names and addresses of persons, firms, and Jewish or Israeli institutions in Austria. Police, who to date have not succeeded in tracking down anyone in Austria involved in this affair, believe that both the publishers of the underground papers and the initiators of the "blacklist" are to be found in the FRG, but that they used Austrian sympathizers to acquire data on Austrian target persons and target objects.

Austrian police are drawing attention to the fact that the FRG part of the "blacklist" contains no names of individual persons but merely those of 16 Israeli or Jewish institutions in several FRG cities, while the much larger Austrian part specifically names numerous individual persons (including some who are not Jewish) in Vienna, Graz and Linz -- among them lawyers, actors, scientists, rabbis, businessmen, journalists and representatives of Israel and Jewish institutions -- as well as travel agencies, banks and premises of large textile firms and trade chains.

According to an Interior Ministry source, Austrian state security police are paying close attention to the fact that the rightist-extremist "blacklist" is almost identical to the secret list containing 63 names of persons and objects that came into the hands of Austrian authorities following the arrest of Al-'Asifah terrorists Bahij Younis, Hussham Rajih and Marwan Hasan. It is also pointed out that some of the addresses on the "blacklist" were outdated and that the same applied to the list of the Palestinians.

SCHMIDT OUTLINES FOREIGN POLICY, CABINET CONCURS

LD311728 Hamburg DPA in German 1531 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Text] Bonn, 31 Mar (DPA) -- At the NATO summit in Bonn in June the Federal Government will urge that the linkage between security policy and cooperation in detente policy and efforts for disarmament be reaffirmed as the basis of alliance policy. It rejects a return to the cold war as a reply to the setbacks in East-West relations caused by the "Soviet arms drive" and the crises in connection with Afghanistan and Poland, and also fundamentally adheres to East-West economic cooperation as an element in international stability.

These points are contained in a statement by Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today in the federal cabinet in a more than 3-hour debate in which he summarized the general principles of Bonn's foreign and security policy. Leading members of the SPD and FDP coalition partners, including SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, the leader of the FDP Parliamentary Party, Wolfgang Mischnick, and the inspector general of the Bundeswehr, Juergen Brandt, took part in the long-planned discussion.

Reporting on the cabinet debate, Government Spokesman Kurt Becker made it plain to newsmen that the chancellor's summary also had domestic implications. He noted that no participant in the discussion had contradicted the chancellor nor expressed divergent views. The chancellor is obviously concerned, in the run-up to the SPD party congress -- the SPD is conducting a heated dispute about security policy -- that his cabinet and the leaders of the coalition parties commit themselves to a united position. In connection with the chancellor's statement, Becker spoke of "principles that are binding for all." Becker confirmed that with this in mind, Schmidt had asked the heads of the parties to work to ensure that these positions were adhered to in the coalition parties also.

Becker said that the basic positions discussed by the cabinet, which, apart from some secret parts, are shortly to be published in text form, were also intended for the public in the West and the East. It seems that Bonn's reaffirmation of detente policy as a principle of NATO policy, alongside defense capability, is also addressed to the United States, where trends in the opposite direction have become apparent. Chancellor Schmidt said that he does not think it will be easy to win over Washington again at the NATO summit for this dual aspect of alliance policy.

According to Becker, Schmidt pointed out to the cabinet that the Warsaw Pact has further expanded its conventional superiority. Moscow has caught up with the United States in intercontinental missiles, and has a "great superiority" in European medium-range missiles. The chancellor stressed Bonn's aim of arms equilibrium at the lowest possible level and the so-called zero option at the Geneva medium-range missile negotiations. Once again Schmidt left no room for doubt that in the event of failure of the Geneva negotiations, the Soviet Union will have to reckon with the deployment of American missiles in West Europe. The discussions in Geneva would be made easier if Washington and Moscow started negotiations on intercontinental strategic missiles.

A total ban on chemical weapons also played an important role in the cabinet discussion. Bonn renounced the production of these weapons as early as 1954. According to Schmidt, the Federal Government adheres to trade with the East, which is planned on a long-term basis, and rejects a trade war. However, the Eastern states must not come into possession of technology that can be used for military purposes.

The chancellor again expressed his commitment to friendly relations with the United States, to economic and political cooperation in the European Community and to good-neighborliness between German and France. Schmidt again appealed to the great powers for moderation and responsibility in their relations.

RUMORS RAISED AGAIN ON CABINET RESHUFFLE

DW011103 Bonn DIE WELT in German 1 Apr 82 pp 1, 3

[Text] Bonn -- Chancellor Helmut Schmidt is seriously considering a reshuffle of the Federal Cabinet after the April SPD congress at the latest. Critical positions manned by SPD ministers are to be affected. It was learned from government circles in Bonn yesterday that the chancellor had already discussed this with FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher who gave no indication that he wanted FDP ministers to be involved in the reshuffle.

According to information from the chancellor's office, the chancellor is considering replacing Labor Minister Herbert Ehrenberg with Parliamentary State Secretary Anke Fuchs. Finance Minister Hans Matthoefer, who has been toying with the idea of quitting his ministry for a long time for health reasons, is not supposed to leave the cabinet but replace Kurt Gscheidle in the quiet job of minister of posts. Gscheidle's position has become weaker in past months, not least of all because of attacks from his own trade union.

The chancellor's office also said that current Defense Minister Hans Apel should find another position in any case. The chancellor still believes that SPD Faction Chairman Herbert Wehner should resign after the party congress and that Hans Apel could become the new faction chief. This consideration, however, is contradicted by Wehner's statement that he wants to stay in office for the entire time he was elected, that is until 1983. It has been said that if that happens, Apel would take over the Finance Ministry he headed from 1974-78.

Filling the vacant position of defense minister obviously creates some difficulties for the chancellor if we bear in mind the speculation about possible candidates. One of the candidates for the ministerial position on Hardthoehe would be current Berlin opposition leader Hans-Jochen Vogel. He has lost some points, however, particularly in the eyes of the FDP because of his behavior in Berlin. If Vogel, who appears disinterested for the time being, really is unavailable because of committment to his Berlin job, Andreas von Buelow's name was raised. Von Buelow was parliamentary state secretary of this department in 1976-80.

The chancellor's office is considering merging Von Buelow's Research and Technology Ministry with the Education and Science Ministry of Bjoern Engholm.

The chancellor also wants a change in the Ministry of Youth, Family and Health where Antje Huber is the current minister. If Vogel were to become defense minister and Von Buelow remained in his present post -- and this would make a merger with the Research and Technology Ministry unnecessary -- it is planned to add the family ministry to the current responsibilities of Minister Engholm.

With such new appointments and a possibly streamlined cabinet, the chancellor wants to make a "new beginning" after the SPD congress in Munich. In this way he hopes to achieve a positive influence for the coalition in the forthcoming Hamburg and Hesse elections.

It was learned yesterday that the FDP does not want to take part in the cabinet reshuffle. Minister of Economics Graf Lambsdorff, as well as Agriculture Minister Josef Ertl, will remain in their positions because the FDP sees "no need," for a change. In this connection it is pointed out by the FDP that Graf Lambsdorff was recently reelected overwhelmingly as deputy FDP chairman for North-Rhine Westphalia. Ertl has indicated that he wants to quit in 1984.

The chancellor feels he is supported with regard to his cabinet reshuffle considerations by publicly raised demands on SPF Bundestag deputies.

In addition to Manfred Schmidt, chairman of the Bavarian SPD land organization group in the Bundestag, a reshuffle was also suggested by Rhineland-Palatinate SPD Chairman Hugo Brandt and SPD deputy, Egon Lutz.

CDU Chairman Helmut Kohl said in a BILD interview: "A cabinet reshuffle will not create a new political spring for Helmut Schmidt."

Other Possible Changes

DW020845 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 2 April 82 p 1

[Excerpt] Bonn, 1 Apr -- The chancellor's plans for a government reshuffle include bringing State Secretary Klaus Boelling back to Bonn from East Berlin and reappointing him as government spokesman. Also under consideration is the idea of offering SPD Deputy Chairman Hans-Juergen Wischnewski the job of minister of state in the chancellor's office to replace Guenter Huonker. According to information available to SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG, Helmut Schmidt considers the return of such tested aides to two important positions as important for his plans to set new directions to government work with regard to personnel and goals. The FDP was discretely informed a few weeks ago about the chancellor's considerations and indicated that it does not want its personnel involved in the change.

SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL BEGINS 2-DAY MEETING

LD011108 Hamburg DPA in German 1026 GMT 1 Apr 82

[Text] Bonn, 1 Apr (DPA) -- The Presidium of the Socialist International met in Bonn today for 2 days of discussions on tension in East-West relations. The meeting, chaired by Willy Brandt, president of the Socialist International and chairman of the SPD, is also being attended by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and the heads of governments of Austria, Finland and Denmark. The situation in Central America, world economic developments and the continuation of the North-South dialogue are other topics to be discussed.

Policy of Detente Stressed

LD011404 Hamburg DPA in German 1324 GMT 1 Apr 82

[Text] Bonn, 1 Apr (DPA) -- The leadership of the Socialist International has spoken in favor of continuing the policy of detente and of making further efforts for disarmament despite aggravated tensions between East and West due to the Polish crisis. According to SPD sources, the start of the 2-day consultations of the Socialist International Presidium in Bonn brought agreement among the party leaders that the policy of detente must be continued together with the safeguarding of Western security interests. The Socialist International intends to use its influence with the United States and the Soviet Union for this and also in the interests of making progress in disarmament.

Other topics at the conference, chaired by SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, are the tense situation in Central America, world economic developments and the continuation of the North-South dialogue. The party leaders had lunch with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt today. Among the participants in the Presidium meeting are Bruno Kreisky of Austria; Kalevi Sorsa of Finland; and Anker Jorgensen of Denmark. Several heads of parties from South America, including the El Salvador opposition politician Guillermo Ungo, have come to Bonn for the consultations.

In an opening speech to the party leaders, Brandt urged the Socialist International to define a clear stance toward developments in Central America because much of the credibility of the community of socialist parties depends on this. He also stressed that the Socialist International's support for all efforts in the sphere of arms control have not become any less important following the events in Poland.

Ungo, a leading politician of the democratic opposition movement in El Salvador, told journalists that the results of the election in his country are unlikely to end the armed conflict. On the contrary, the elections have openly legalized fascism, he said, with reference to the electoral victory of the extreme right. Ungo called the election results "extremely dubious." He emphasized the willingness of the democratic opposition to hold talks with the other parties in order to end the civil war and find a political solution.

The leader of the Socialist Party of Jamaica, Michael Manley, said that negotiations between the parties in El Salvador are more necessary than ever. Manley emphasized Mexico's attempts to mediate between the United States on the one hand and Cuba and Nicaragua on the other. He also called for talks to discuss how the small states in Central America can gain sovereignty and what can be done to fight poverty and underdevelopment. He criticized the Caribbean plan of the U.S. administration as an attempt to exert hegemonist pressure on the states in the region.

The leader of the Socialist Party in Guatemala, Carlos Flores, described the latest military coup in his country as a cosmetic operation which changed nothing. Flores demanded that all social-democratic and socialist parties work together in order to bring about revolution in Guatemala.

SCHMIDT HAS MEETINGS WITH KREISKY, PALME, PERES

LD021030 Hamburg DPA in German 1006 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Text] Bonn, 2 Apr (DPA) -- On the periphery of the meeting of the Socialist International in Bonn, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt held separate talks with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, former Swedish Government leader Olof Palme and Israeli opposition leader Shimon Peres. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker said on Friday that the talks assessed the international situation, with special emphasis on the conflict situation in the Middle East.

BONN 'SATISFIED' WITH U.S. ARMS CONTROL REMARKS

LD012004 Hamburg DPA in German 1909 GMT 1 Apr 82

[Text] Bonn, 1 Apr (DPA) -- At his meeting with U.S. Ambassador Arthur Burns in Bonn on Friday, [as received] Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher expressed his great satisfaction with the statement by U.S. President Ronald Reagan on questions of arms control and disarmament. Genscher said that the views of both sides are in agreement on these important questions. The Federal Government especially welcomes the intentions of the American Government, which plans negotiations on intercontinental strategic systems in addition to the current negotiations with the Soviet Union on nuclear medium-range missiles. The Federal Government further welcomes the fact that the intentions of the American Government not only consist of limiting these systems, but also of reducing them noticeably.

FDP WILL SEND 'OBSERVERS' TO LDPD CONGRESS

[Excerpt] Bonn, 30 Mar -- For the first time since 1945 three FDP representatives will attend a Liberal Democratic Party [LDPD] congress in the GDR next Sunday. LDPD Chairman Manfred Gerlach had suggested to FDP Chairman Hans-Dietrich Genscher in writing that 2 or 3 FDP representatives come as "guests" to the 5-7 April Weimar congress.

It has been learned that Genscher, as well as Faction Chairman Wolfgang Mischnick, had considered going to Weimar themselves if they would have the opportunity to deliver a public message. The LDPD leadership, however, was unable to allow that. Therefore, the following FDP "observers" will go to Weimar for 3 days: FDP Federal Manager Fritz Fliszar, press spokesman Herbert Schmuelling and Mischnick's personal aide Horst Dahlmeyer.

MARCHAIS ADDRESSES PCF CENTRAL COMMITTEE

[Apparent text of closing speech delivered by PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais at the PCF Central Committee meeting on 25 March: "Seizing All Opportunities To Progress Toward Change"]

[Text] Comrades: At the end of our session, after the rich report submitted by [PCF Politburo member] Madeleine Vincent and the discussion which we have just had, we can see more clearly that we are now at an important point in French political life. Our ability to understand the situation clearly and to shoulder all our responsibilities properly is, and will be, very important. It will be very important for us and for the country itself.

To Make Progress: A Bitter Struggle Awaits Us

The cantonal elections marked a state in the new course of national life which began last spring. For 9 months the government and the majority, of which we are part, have accomplished the first phase of their work. It is reflected in the first results. But it also reveals limits.

Within the forces which made the left's victory possible this has produced questions, misunderstandings and sometimes a lack of motivation or even some degree of disenchantment. That emerges clearly from an examination of the results of those elections.

Those elections were characterized by less mobilization of the leftwing voters. That led to the limited but real drop recorded by the PS compared with the last elections, the parliamentary elections. And that also produced -- through a great diversity of results, gains but also loss of ground depending on the canton -- the stabilization of our party's electoral support around the level which it had last year. That is a level with which we obviously cannot be satisfied and which confirms the analysis of the fundamental and not accidental nature of our 1981 setback.

The right, for its part, strove to exploit the difficulties and distort the meaning of the action which has been started in order to regroup its forces and begin to regain lost ground. It is raising its head again. In the coming period it will not fail to step up its effort to increase the obstacles, accentuate the difficulties and use anything it can to serve its propaganda and its demagoguery. Its ultimate aim is to create the conditions for what remains its main objective: Its return to power; to go back to the past, to resume the diasastrous policy which the French people rejected on 10 May. It certainly does not lack resources for doing that. And it is determined to use them all to draw support from all the important agents it still has in the economy, the institutions and the media.

Therefore we must have no illusions: If we are to progress, a bitter struggle awaits us.

The Strategic Choices of Our 24th Congress

Our line of conduct in this situation is based necessarily on the choices made by our congress. However, it is necessary to assess its significance, see all its implications and draw all the conclusions from it.

What are those choices? I will recall them briefly. We are taking action to radically change society; to achieve a French brand of socialism. The choice of this new society, whose outlines we clearly redefined at our congress, is not arbitrary in the least.

As Madeleine Vincent recalled in her report it constitutes the most complete response to our country's deep problems which, whether you like it or not, have been raised and will continue to be raised.

We want to bring about this transformation -- we also reiterated that at our congress -- by democratic means. The march to a French band of socialism can only be the result of a majority movement of the French people -- a movement expressed in social struggles and universal suffrage. That makes it necessary for the objectives of change which we set ourselves at the various levels of national life to constantly make it possible to rally the necessary forces to progress, to obtain improvements, to win new rights and hence to alter the balance of forces and lay the foundations for further progress.

This democratic path is in no way the result of an arbitrary choice either. On the contrary, it is the result of a careful consideration of the situation: of the French situation which stems from our country's long history and from the far-reaching developments it has experienced in the past 30 years; of the international situation, resulting from the considerable progress made by the revolutionary and progressive movement in the past few decades, the new problems it is experiencing and those which result from France's specific position in the "Western world;" and, finally, of the situation of deep crisis in French society.

The Meaning of Our Approach Today

It is all these strategic choices, which we had already made during our two previous congresses, which determined our attitude during the 1981 presidential election.

We devoted our whole election campaign, which lasted several months, to explaining, discussing and winning approval for our solutions for overcoming the crisis. Then our people decided through their votes. They took the decision of which everybody is aware. We backed their verdict without hesitation and without reservation. We used all our forces to contribute to the victory over the right. And, once that had been won, we sought a basis for cooperation with the PS and took our place in the government.

Since then we have striven to keep the pledges jointly made. Everybody can now see that we have done so and are doing so at all levels with a spirit of initiative, loyalty and efficacy. And we are going to continue.

I repeat that the simple reason for that is that this attitude stems not from tactical expedient considerations, but from our strategy. We did not commit ourselves to that path with the intention of turning our back on the problems. We do not secretly speculate -- as stupid analyses sometimes state -- on the failure of the new policy. Quite the reverse; we want the 10 May choice to be respected and for the French people's expectations to be fulfilled. And we are shouldering all our responsibilities at all levels to attain that.

Let us make ourselves clear. This attacking approach of ours cannot be identified with an attitude which would consist of demanding more than others at every opportunity. It is not by "laying it on thick" so to speak, that we will assert our nature as a revolutionary party. Definitely not. To act in that way would be to disregard the situation, the political choices made by the country and the framework defined in that way. Ultimately it would be to head for greater difficulties, to turn our backs on progress along the path of change. In a word it would be to do the opposite to what we want.

The Right Course

Nonetheless, we have never had and do not have the illusion that it would be possible to meet the country's expectations without an obstinate struggle to remove the obstacles, to overcome the difficulties and to introduce the necessary changes, and without the workers throwing themselves into the struggle against the forces hostile to change in order to achieve all that.

As we forcefully stressed at the congress, the people's movement cannot delegate to anybody its role as a protagonist in social changes. Change cannot progress unless our people themselves take up the problems raised and with their active intervention. And it is to encouraging that intervention that we are devoting our efforts.

In the new situation produced by the right's defeat in spring 1981, the right course consists of seizing every opportunity to progress toward change, wherever those opportunities might be, however limited they might be and at the pace of the people's movement itself. The correct course consists of proposing, in each individual case, suitable solutions and initiatives which are likely to succeed, and hence to obtain successes which, even if partial, are significant, bring improvements, support the change and at the same time show the path to be followed.

We have reached a point at which it is necessary for the whole party to more effectively gauge the significance of that approach, for it to be steeped in it in order to gradually implement the 24th congress policy. This is necessary because, as the report has shown, difficulties are emerging. It is necessary because the cantonal elections have just shown that a large number of those men and women who want change are now asking questions, even of us, and we must and can give them answers to which they will respond. We need a considerable effort by the communists to do that.

In accordance with this line of ours, our task is now to work to consolidate and expand the union everywhere in the action of the forces of change so as to overcome the difficulties one by one, to progress toward the solution of the problems facing the people and the country. This is true in the enterprises, cities, towns and villages. It is true at the different levels of the elected assemblies. It is true in the government in which we intend to continue to shoulder all our responsibilities.

We Have the Strength and Means To Accomplish Our Task

Can we accomplish this great task? We say: Yes! We have the strength to do so. And we have the means.

First we have the strength to do so. I will not dwell on the assertions of those who disparage us and who constantly and preemptorily predict each morning the imminent and final disappearance of our party. Let's leave them to their fantasies if it reassures them. And let us look at things seriously and lucidly.

First, our party has real strength. As Madeleine Vincent recalled on the basis of indisputable figures, more than 5 million French men and women voted communist during at least one of the three elections in 1981 and 1982. Do we really understand and gauge what that means? It means that more than 5 million women, men and young people around us placed their confidence in us by supporting our party with their votes.

Five Million Communist Voters in 1981 or 1982

That is a trump card, a considerable strength. For they gave that support to the communists in the context of a class confrontation which is taking place in conditions which are unprecedented in France. These are conditions in which the right has lost political power, in which a leftwing majority, of which we form part, is running France's affairs, in which the communists are taking part in the government of the only big capitalist country to be in that position. These are conditions in which our party has for years on end been the constant target of a violent, bitter -- to put it bluntly: frenzied -- anticommunist campaign enjoying the support of all the main sections of the mass media. Finally, these are conditions in which the development of the international situation has frequently led our party to face the most difficult trials alone.

For instance, it has had to meet the requirements of international solidarity and of France's interests alone, by accepting its duties toward the people's forces struggling in the capitalist countries, toward the peoples building socialism, toward the young nations of the Third World which are liberating themselves from the chains of imperialism and colonialism, sometimes at the cost of troubles and upheavals.

To recall all that is to highlight -- although, of course, there are great inequalities among all the communists voters -- the high level of awareness and the quality of political commitment in these 5 million and more French men and women. Yes, indeed, what strength for our party!

We Can Win Back All the Communist Voters

And then there is a second observation which we must make. It is that we have yet other forces which it is now possible for us to win back. As everybody knows, the number of voters who voted communist before 1981 and who have not done so since can be calculated at 6 or 7 percent. To this number should be added young people who would have voted communist in former circumstances but who made a different choice in 1981 and 1982.

Why did those communist voters -- around one-fourth of our electorate -- not give us their votes? There are various reasons for that which our 24th congress analyzed in a precise and detailed way.

First and foremost is the effect of the strategic lag which we had acquired and the negative effects of the resulting form of union. The efforts which we made to overcome that lag and to achieve a clear and effective union clearly disorientated a number of communist voters.

That was especially true since, as I have just recalled, we were obliged to make those efforts in the context of an acute class struggle. Our adversaries clearly tried throughout that period to distort and caricature our approach by portraying us as Giscard's allies, as responsible for the divisions in the left and in the people's movement, as people who would refuse to shoulder their responsibilities in the running of the country's affairs. This onslaught and constant vituperation may have increased the confusion of those voters.

It was then that we had to face the most difficult date for us: that of the presidential election. On that subject we also demonstrated at the 24th congress the extent to which the institutional mechanism of that election and also the fact that we twice refrained from presenting a candidate had worked against us. That undoubtedly led many of our voters to feel that they had to abandon voting communist in the first round of the presidential election in order to cast a "useful" vote against Giscard d'Estaing.

Finally, there is no doubt that the systematic distorting of our position on the countries which are building socialism and, especially in the recent period, of our responsible and humanistic attitude to the Polish situation, worked against us. How many of those voters who have temporarily moved away from voting communist know that we never -- and it was not for us to do so -- approved of the decisions taken in Poland, but that our behavior was dictated solely by one concern: to avoid a bloodbath in that country and enable it to resolutely take the path of the economic, social and democratic reforms which are absolutely vital to solve the crisis it is experiencing? The damage which events in Poland are doing to the very cause of socialism and the misunderstanding of our real attitude toward them probably helped to prevent some of those communist voters from immediately returning to their natural vote.

The very evening of the first round of the presidential election we said: We still regard all those voters as communist voters. We joined with them in the second round to defeat Giscard. And today, after the cantonal elections, what can we see? A number of them have returned to voting communist especially in cantons where the battle was particularly difficult and where the result seemed undecided.

But the vast majority of them abstained. They are hesitating. They are undecided. They decided not to repeat the socialist vote which they cast in special circumstances in the presidential election. But there are still prejudices against us which prevented them from returning to voting communist during the cantonal elections.

I say that the aim of winning back — or winning over in the case of the young ones — all those men and women to voting communist is now a realistic objective. Obviously it will not be done in a day. But we will succeed.

Our Means: The Implementation of the 24th Congress

We have the means to do that. What are they? Those which will be given to us by the practical implementation of our 24th congress decisions in the country.

Everywhere and in all spheres the communists are going to pay even greater heed to the various sections of the working population in order to take up their demands, put forward suitable proposals which will make it possible for the new policy to more effectively fulfill their expectations. Those who believed that the communists did not want change, that they were pursuing partisan objectives and dividing the people's movement will thus constantly be able to verify that our party really is their party, that it is pursuing just one goal: to satisfy the people's and national needs; to make progress in the implementation of change.

The communists are going to wage a determined struggle against all the right's maneuvers in whatever form they take. They are going to reply to its lies, and its attacks calmly but firmly. Those who believed that the communists were tempted to spare the reactionaries will thus be able to see that now, as previously under Giscard d'Estaing, Chirac and Barre, there is no more determined adversary of the right than the PCF.

The communists are going to tackle the main economic, social and domestic issues with realism and imagination, taking into consideration both the choices made by the country and our concept of socialism for France. Those who believed that the communists would refuse to shoulder their responsibilities because the crisis is deep will thus be able to verify the genuine nature of our proposals, the usefulness of our party's original and constructive contribution to defining and implementing the new policy.

The communists are going to show initiative and are going to give practical confirmation of our party's independence in its action for peace, disarmament, the search for a new world order and international solidarity: They will explain the prospects for a French brand of socialism and the democratic path for attaining it which they are proposing to our people. Those who believed in the "communists' allegiance to Moscow," will be able to see that our party decides its own positions in full independence and without any pressure and that it is opposed to any model of socialism and is proposing a socialist society which corresponds to our people's needs, tastes and situation: a socialism which will be French through and through.

There Is a Great Future for the PCF

That, comrades, is the prospect open to us; provided our 24th congress does not remain just a document but that its decisions are implemented with the necessary scope and efficacy. The experience which the French people will have may lead them to observe that they need a great communist party more than ever. And we are going to continue to improve that party — especially, as the report rightly stressed, in its activity in the enterprise — to strengthen it, to spread its ideas better and to ensure that it is increasingly an open, democratic, imaginative and combative party totally devoted to the cause of change and socialism.

At our congress we took as our objective an increase in our party's influence because that is in the interest of the people's movement. As everything I have just said shows, we can realize that ambition. I repeat that the forces are there; all those men and women who place their trust in us and all those men and women likely to do so. The means are there too; those which our 24th congress gives us.

And let nobody say that I am being overoptimistic! No: There is nothing voluntarist or excessive in these assertions! They are motivated simply by the observation of the balance of political forces and its developments per se. It is obvious that boosting our influence again will require a great deal of effort. It will probably require some time. But there is no doubt that we can achieve that. There is a great future for the PCF, and that future depends on us, on all communists. All those who wish to can play a full part in this task even if they have reservations or disagree with some aspects of our policy. Of course there is one duty for all -- to implement the policy democratically drawn up by the party members at their 24th congress. Life always chooses between what is just and what is not.

In these conditions, comrades, I will just say one word: Work! Work to help promote change together with all those men and women who want to do so. Work to implement all aspects of the 24th congress!

CHEYSSON DENIES DELAY OF EQUIPMENT FOR NICARAGUA

PM011217 Paris LE FIGARO in French 26 Mar 82 p 3

[Excerpt] French diplomacy is prepared to support any Mexican initiative which would facilitate a negotiated settlement of the conflicts in Central America, Claude Cheysson confirmed yesterday when referring to the coming visit to Paris by his Mexican counterpart Jorge Castaneda. He emphasized the identity of viewpoints between Mexico and France. "If the Mexicans believe that we could join with them once more to support their proposals, that would interest us considerably."

At the same time the external relations minister explained that "France's aid to Nicaragua is aimed at helping that country to develop and to determine freely its future by escaping exclusive dependence on a big power -- the USSR -- which would make it a mere object of East-West confrontation." Cheysson made these remarks in reply to a written question from Rene Tomasini.

In addition, the French minister emphasized that there would be no delay in deliveries of military equipment to Nicaragua.

INDIAN ENVOY PRESENTS CREDENTIALS TO MITTERRAND

[Text] Paris, 25 Mar (AFP) -- Narendra Singh, India's new ambassador to France, today presented his credentials to French President Francois Mitterrand, saying Paris and New Delhi could make important contributions to international economic stability and equity. Mr Singh said the two governments were "convinced of their capacity to bring their partners into this dialogue, which must be founded on recognition of interdependence and solidarity."

PCI'S BERLINGUER INTERVIEWED ON FRANCE VISIT

AU011537 Rome ANSA in English 1528 GMT 1 Apr 82

[Text] Rome, 1 Apr (ANSA) -- European leftist parties have to make up for lost time and invent a common language with which to tackle today's economic and social problems, according to Italian Communist Party (PCI) Secretary Enrico Berlinguer. In an interview given in Paris after a three-day visit with the French Socialist Party and a meeting with chief-of-state Francois Mitterrand, Berlinguer admitted that the European left has been "lagging" and urged its parties to move to fill the "historic gap" left open by their heel-dragging. "If there is one point that Italian Communists and French Socialists fully agree upon," Berlinguer said in the interview published in today's LA REPUBBLICA, it is their "awareness that traditional models are no longer applicable."

Specifically, the PCI leader dismissed the "Soviet model" just like "the social democrat model," the latter of which, he said, had made "appreciable accomplishments" in the past but was "short of breath" today. Berlinguer admitted that French Socialists and Italian Communists do not see eye to eye on many issues connected to East-West detente, especially their assessment of the two blocks' balance of military power in Europe. On this point, the PCI leader said, "Our party effectively considers itself closer to the views of West German Social Democrats and the policies of the Bonn government."

Berlinguer had to concede that leftist parties in Europe have suffered electoral setbacks, but insisted that the losses were "slight" and were mainly registered in French and West German regional polls. The development, he said, "showed that the right is not standing still, that it is trying to regain the ground it has lost."

The PCI secretary particularly insisted on the need for the left to make up for lost time. "Workers movements... can't limit their attention to unionized workers... but have to include the aspirations of the outcasts, of those who have no protection, of the unemployed, in their overall policies," he said. Social democracy, he added, had its heyday after the second world war, then it was in fashion to develop private consumption. Their gains were possible, according to Berlinguer, at an historic time when "developed countries were able to exploit the wealth of lesser developed states without any trouble." "The advent of Third World emancipation" however, according to the PCI leader, has shrunk their "room for maneuver" to nothing. "I am convinced that an intense revival of North-South relations (between industrialized and developing countries) is the only thing that will solve the new problems we have today."

Meanwhile, Berlinguer said he was "very satisfied" with the talks he had in Paris with French Socialist Party leaders when he returned to Rome today. In an arrival statement, Berlinguer said the visit had paved the way for the establishment of a "new kind" of relationship between the two parties, one that may provide "a contribution to the general progress of workers' forces all over Western Europe.

A commentary on the PCI leader's visit to Paris in Turin's LA STAMPA daily today indicated that the French Socialists had more in common with Berlinguer's party than with the Italian Socialist Party and, vice versa, the PCI has more in common with French Socialists than with the French Communist Party headed by Georges Marchais. "These entwined relations," the daily commented,"makes it all the harder to give a definition to the 'European leftist movement' that Berlinguer and French Socialist Party Secretary Lionel Jospin tried to launch during their meeting Tuesday." Berlinguer met with Mitterrand for more than an hour yesterday but declined to issue any statement about their talks "out of respect for the French president."

PCP SECRETARY GENERAL SPEAKS AT FRIENDSHIP RALLY

PM291255 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 18 Mar 82 pp 9-10

[Apparent text of speech by PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal at 12 March friendship rally in Santa Iria de Azoia: "Alvaro Cunhal at PCP-MSZMP Friendship Rally"]

[Excerpt] Our party examines the living experiences of building socialism to learn their lessons, with a constant feeling; interest in difficulties and obstacles being surmounted and socialist society successfully built.

On the basis of that attitude our party adopted a stance on the events in Poland to which the Hungarian Socialist Workers Party [MSZMP] comrades also referred in their speech. There are painful experiences to be understood in the case of Poland. There are mistakes to be learned from in greater depth to ensure that they cannot be repeated. But there is also a counterrevolutionary process, in which only reactionary forces or those influenced by them can claim to see "a new model of socialism."

Any communist party must necessarily examine and assimilate critically the socialist countries' positive and negative experience of mistakes which have been made. But that examination and assimilation imply a class viewpoint inserted in the struggle against capitalism and for socialism.

In Poland, in view of the imminent danger of counterrevolution, whose approach could be detected long ago, we are pleased that the Polish comrades have barred the way to counterrevolution and taken steps to save Poland from economic and social chaos and from civil war and to defend and safeguard the socialist system.

Martial law is temporary. The day will come when martial law will be lifted. But it is for the Polish comrades to decide when that day will come, and it is to be desired that it will be in such a manner as to guarantee that there is no return to the disastrous previous situation and to the renewal of the counterrevolutionary process.

We are all witnessing the fanatical anticommunist campaign unleased in Portugal on the pretext of Poland. But nobody can believe that those who in our own country are carrying through a policy of exploitation, oppression and repression of the Portuguese workers are defending the workers of Poland.

Imperialism and reaction use all means (and they are now using the Polish crisis to the full) to split and separate the revolutionary forces; in particular, to separate the communist parties in the capitalist countries, the national liberation movements of the progressive countries from the USSR and other socialist countries.

We are aware of those pressures, but they do not change our conduct at all. We have and will continue to have fraternal relations with the communist and workers parties in the socialist countries, and we are working, not only to maintain those relations, but to constantly strengthen and develop them.

Relations between our party and the MSZMP, whose delegation we now have among us, are an instance of this internationalist stance by our party -- a stance wholly in keeping, not only with party interests, but with our people's interests and Portugal's relations of friendship and cooperation with all peoples of the world.

Experiences of Universal Value and Originality of Revolutions

The socialist countries' historical achievements have already demonstrated that revolutions do not follow identical processes or adopt all the same solutions to the same problems.

It is a truth universally acknowledged by communists that there are no "models" of revolutions and that revolutions can be neither imitated or copied.

For instance, the building of socialism in Hungary, as our comrades emphasized, while having features in common with the building of socialism in other countries, has adopted and adopts solutions appropriate to Hungary's actual national conditions and has (as was inevitable) marked peculiarities and original features.

By conveying their experiences to the parties in other countries the Hungarian comrades are making an extremely valuable contribution to enable the other parties and peoples to find valid solutions to the problems confronting them. But neither the Hungarian comrades nor the comrades in any other socialist country claim that their solutions are applicable to all other countries and should be applied there.

It is each communist party's task to find its own solutions to its own country's specific problems. This is what we believe as regards our party, and the analysis made by our party of the national situation, our party's program, our party's conduct both at the time of the dictatorship and after 25 April [1974] and the Portuguese revolution itself serve to demonstrate the creative definition of the revolutionary transformation of society, the class nature and the role of the state, the function of a vanguard party, the decisive role of economic relations in the political system and the organic relationship in socialism between political democracy and economic democracy -- cannot be regarded as "new paths toward socialism."

Blueprints drafted in offices -- blueprints which claim to define the only true socialism and which oppose, not capitalism but the socialist countries, which are denied even the name of "socialist countries" -- are not "new paths toward socialism."

Those paths which counterpose to the unique socialist societies and their revolutionary achievements what they term the "democratic socialist gains (sic) in the developed capitalist countries, particularly in West Europe -- that is, "paths toward socialism" which believe that they see elements of socialism in capitalist society and deny that there is socialism in the socialist societies -- are not "new paths toward socialism."

The PCP remains loyal to the idea of the elimination of capitalism and of all forms of exploitation and oppression. It does not allow itself to be influenced by imperialism's ideological pressure. It will never accept being a communist party in name and a social democratic party in practice. The PCP is and will always be a communist party not only in name but in policy and in action.

And for that reason, while not intending to copy in any way any "model" of socialism, it seeks to become acquainted with and to learn from the socialist countries' experiences, informs the Portuguese workers about those countries' great gains, points out the contrast between the socialist and capitalist societies and delights sincerely and deeply in the socialist countries' successes and achievements.

For that very reason I would like to take this opportunity to convey publicly here through the medium of our guests to the MSZMP, its Central Committee and its secretary general, Comrade Janos Kadar, the PCP's warm greetings and sincere wishes that they may successfully continue their magnificent and exciting work of social transformation of building the new society, of building socialism.

Bilateral Relations and International Communist Movement

The PCP's relations with the MSZMP are characteristic of relations among parties inspired by the same great liberating ideal.

Our party maintains bilateral relations with almost 100 communist and workers' parties and over 20 other parties and revolutionary organizations.

They are relations whose terms, whose level and whose degree of cooperation are decided solely by ourselves and by the parties with which we maintain relations. The bilateral relations fall within the international communist movement, which, as is known, has no center, has no leadership and has no organized forms of worldwide cooperation or coordination (apart from possible conferences), but has a class nature and an identity of essential aims which rightly classify it as a "movement," and distinguish it from any other movements or social or political forces of an international nature.

There are features in common which constitute the very substance of the communist movement. There is an indestructible objective foundation: the identity of interests and historical aspirations of the working class and workers in all countries. There is a common ideology: Marxism-Leninism. There are principles of mutual solidarity: proletarian internationalism.

The communist movement is the strongest and most decisive core of the anti-imperialist front, of the front of the democratic and progressive forces, of the front of the struggle for peace.

The communist and workers' parties are struggling under very diverse conditions. There are parties which have been in power for many years. There are parties struggling in systems of bourgeois democracy. There are parties which are forced underground and cruelly persecuted.

They all operate autonomously and independently. That is the case with our party, which directs its policy without any external interference (which, moreover, we would reject). That is the case with all the parties. Autonomy and independence are the rule and are the reality of the international communist movement.

Only unscrupulous slanderers can deny such a reality. When the propagandists of the "Democratic Alliance," who are joined by the propagandists of the Socialist Party/Mario Soares, revive against our party the slanders which we heard from the fascists for half a century -- that the PCP is "under Moscow's orders," that the PCP "serves foreign interests," that the PCP "is not a national party," and so forth -- I believe that we can conclude that such slanders classify not the PCP but those who utter them as irresponsible, undignified and unscrupulous people whom the truth does not avail, because in the present-day world the truth in itself is revolutionary.

We repeat: Autonomy and independence are the norm and the rule of the communist movement.

However, there are some parties which invoke their "autonomy" and "independence," not so much in order to define their own policy but in order to speak against the international communist movement, to reject preferential relations with the other communist parties, to justify preferential relations with socialist and social democratic parties, to attack the socialist countries, denying that socialism exists there, to tar the United States and the Soviet Union with the same brush, to interfere in the socialist countries' internal affairs, proclaiming what should be done there, and at the same time to protest indignantly against any critical response by those concerned, calling it unacceptable "interference."

These parties have abandoned what they call "the old-style ties" with the other communist parties, place relations with communist parties, socialist parties and social democratic parties on the same level, and one of them is even putting forward the idea of replacing the communist movement with a new movement (which it calls "new forms of internationalist organization") without a class policy and without community of ideology and aims.

Is this an "autonomous" and "independent" attitude? No. By adopting such stances in the name of "autonomy" and "independence," these parties demonstrate in fact that they are losing their class autonomy and independence and clearly yielding to the enemies' and allies' ideological pressures.

The international communist movement reflects the identity of interests of the workers in all countries and the common aim of eliminating man's exploitation by man and building a new society whose resources and energies will be used for human beings' good. It has a class origin which distinguishes it from the (albeit necessary) alliances with parties whose programs, whose ideas, whose aims, are directed not toward the elimination but toward the reformulation of capitalist exploitation.

With its real autonomy and independence, the PCP acknowledges the international communist movement at the most powerful political movement of the contemporary era. We maintain preferential relations with the communist parties because the communist parties represent essentially the workers' interests and have essentially the same aim of liberating mankind from all forms of exploitation and oppression. And instead of denigrating the socialist countries (as some people do), we inform our people about their achievements, their contribution to mankind's liberation, their solidarity with the workers and people of all countries and their role in defense of peace.

We believe without any hesitation that with this policy we confirm our independence and autonomy, moreover, because we remain loyal to the interests, aspirations and aims of the working class, the working masses and all those who are exploited and oppressed in the struggle against the peoples' and nations' real enemy -- capitalism and imperialism -- in the struggle for a society of equality and social justice, in the struggle for socialism and communism.

SFRY PRESIDENT ATTENDS PARLIAMENTARY SESSION

LD012222 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1800 GMT 1 Apr 82

[Excerpt] Yugoslav President Sergej Kraigher was this afternoon received in Parliament, where a solemn session was held in his honor. Here is a report by Melo Matos:

A welcoming session was held here this afternoon during which both Portugal and Yugoslavia expressed their common wish to step up the struggle for world peace and strengthen the ties of cooperation established and developed between the two countries immediately after 25 April 1974. The speeches delivered here this afternoon by Oliveira Dias [Assembly speaker] and Sergej Kraigher again highlighted the capability of dialogue and understanding among nations necessary to secure an easing in international tensions, as stressed last night by the Portuguese and Yugoslav presidents.

MPs turned out en masse to welcome the Yugoslav president, although the UDP [Popular Democratic Union] deputy -- who last Tuesday protested Kraigher's official visit to our country -- was absent. Mario Tome, the UDP MP had said that in his view a lack of freedom prevails in Yugoslavia.

Present at the session were Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao, the chief justice of the Supreme Court, the chief of the Armed Forces' General Staff, several members of the Council of the Revolution and a few cabinet members -- although not one CDS [Social Democratic Center Party] representative was to be seen.

FALKLANDS CRISIS DEEPENS, CABINET MEETING HELD

LD020852 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0824 GMT 2 Apr 82

[By Andy Webb, PA political staff]

[Text] Mrs Thatcher called an emergency cabinet meeting this morning (0945) to discuss the worsening Falkland Islands crisis. Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington has been standing by in London waiting developments after a Foreign Office spokesman said evidence pointed to an imminent invasion of the islands in the South Atlantic. Lord Carrington has been kept in close touch with the tense situation since his return late last night from Israel.

The emergency cabinet meeting lasted just over an hour. A spokesman for the prime minister said Mrs Thatcher had cancelled an appointment with the mayor of Berlin, due this morning, because of the mounting tension.

She has also cancelled a planned trip to her Finchely constituency this afternoon. "The prime minister wants to be available at No 10," said the spokesman.

Eighteen members of the 22-strong cabinet were said to have attended today's emergency meeting. Agriculture minister, Peter Walker, Sir Keith Joseph (education), Mr Jim Prior (Northern Ireland) and Scottish secretary, Mr George Younger were absent.

A spokesman said the chief of the air staff and the first sea lord also attended the meeting. Mrs Thatcher left with other cabinet colleagues and was driven away in an official black limousine. Neither she nor Lord Carrington would comment on their discussions.

'Imminent Invasion' Likely

LD020858 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 0828 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Text] As the Falkland Islands crisis deepened today, Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington was standing by in London awaiting developments. A Foreign Office spokesman in London said: "All the evidence does point towards an imminent invasion of the Falkland Islands."

Lord Carrington, who returned late last night from Israel, was being kept in close touch with the tense situation. A Commons statement is likely to be made by his deputy, Mr Humphrey Atkins, later this morning.

Britain's decision to raise at the UN Security Council yesterday the threatened invasion of the Falklands came as a surprise. In its attempts to reach a negotiated settlement with Argentina, Britain has enlisted the support of the American ambassador in Argentina and any other countries who might be able to exercise influence. So far, however, this has been to no avail.

Throughout the dispute, both the Foreign Office and Defence Ministry have maintained almost a total silence, apparently to enable a diplomatic settlement to be reached. But Argentina has shown little readiness to negotiate.

Lord Carrington made a statement to the Lords on Tuesday, warning that the issue was "potentially dangerous," because of the gradual Argentine naval build-up. British ministers have made clear there could be difficulty in defending the Falklands against an invasion.

Foreign Office Minister Mr Richard Luce told MPs that Britain will defend the islands, if necessary, "to the best of our ability." The problem is that the Falklands are more than 7,000 miles away and there is no proper airfield there to fly in supplies. Some ships and nuclear-powered submarines are on their way.

The 79 Royal Marines in the Falklands today were believed to be digging in around Port Stanley's airfield. The 65,000-strong Argentinian Army -- reckoned by military experts to be one of the best armed and most professional of South American military forces -- would use this airfield as the springboard of any attack. They have trained a number of air mobile brigades, flying in American built C-130 Hercules transport aircraft, for quick response deployments over wide ranges.

The airfield outside the capital of Port Stanley was constructed by the Argentinians themselves in the early 1970s. The marines are believed to be lightly armed in comparison, having only their personal self-loading rifles, squad machine-guns and possibly mortars.

Defending the airfield will be tricky, particularly if the Argentinians use their American-built Skyhawk A4B ground attack fighters to 'suppress' defence. It is known that a squadron of A4Bs moved south from a northern air base yesterday and the Argentinian Navy's 40-year-old carrier, reported today to be still north of the Falklands, carries these aircraft too.

Invincible To Head Task Force

PM020935 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 2 Apr 82 p 1

[Report by naval correspondent Desmond Wettern: "Invincible To Head Task Force"]

[Text] The navy's latest carrier, the 19,500-ton Invincible, is now expected to head a task group of some six or seven ships sailing within the next few days for the South Atlantic. The task group was to have left Britain for the Indian Ocean in September, but its departure is apparently being brought forward because of the dispute with Argentina.

The Invincible has a squadron of five Sea Harrier fighters and nine Sea King anti-submarine helicopters. Sub-Lieut Prince Andrew is one of the Sea King pilots.

The intention to send the task group earlier than planned is evident from the departure from Britain of two of the largest Royal Fleet auxiliaries, one of which is always used to support the Invincible at sea. The departure of the 4,500-ton nuclear powered fleet submarine Superb, reported earlier this week, is also logical since it is the usual practice when possible to include a nuclear submarine with a task group overseas to provide anti-submarine training.

U.S. Help Sought

PM020941 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 2 Apr 82 p 4

[Report by John Miller of the diplomatic staff: "Help From U.S. Over Falklands"]

[Text] Britain is looking to the United States to sort out the row with Argentina over the Falkland Islands. While the Foreign Office maintained an embarrassed silence on the new development it emerged that mediating role was being played by Mr Harry Schlaudeman, the American ambassador in Buenos Aires.

The American role was not entirely unexpected because it was appearing more and more evident that Britain's diplomatic manoeuvring with the Argentines was running out of steam. Reports said that Mr Schlaudeman had had three meetings with Mr Nicanor Costa Mendez, the hard-line Argentine foreign minister, who has rejected a series of British proposals to end the dispute.

The Americans were thought not to care a lot about whether the 12 Argentine scrap merchants remained in South Georgia Island with or without the right documents, but they were concerned about the possibility of a military confrontation between Britain and Argentina.

It was assumed in London that the United States recognized Britain's sovereignty over the Falkland Islands. The government's nervousness over any American mediation or good offices is based on fears that there might be people in the Reagan administration who might just think Britain's sovereignty was another form of colonialism.

Meanwhile reports said that Mr Anthony Williams, British ambassador in Buenos Aires, was continuing to bustle round to the Argentine Foreign Ministry with proposals.

A similar situation arose in 1976 when Argentines landed in Southern Thule, one of the islands in the South Sandwich group, which is nearly 400 miles south-east of South Georgia. The Foreign Office confirmed yesterday that there were "about 50" Argentines running an Antarctic survey station, and that some of the men were probably servicemen. Britain had repeatedly protested about the "illegal presence," most recently during Anglo-Argentine talks in New York in February.

Emergency Statement

LD021042 London BBC Domestic Service in English 1000 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Emergency statement to House of Commons by Humphrey Atkins, lord privy seal and deputy foreign secretary -- live]

[Text] Mr Deputy Speaker, with permission I will make a statement on the situation in the Falkland Islands: Over the past 24 hours the situation has become increasingly grave, there is now a real expectation that an Argentine attack against the Falkland Islands would take place very soon. It was for this reason that we sought an emergency meeting of the Security Council yesterday and associated ourselves immediately with a request from the president of the Security Council that both Britain and Argentina should exercise restraint and refrain from the use or threat of force and continue the search for a diplomatic solution. There was no Argentine response to this. Nor has the Argentine president responded to the many appeals that have been made to him to draw back from the use of force. We are taking appropriate military and diplomatic measures to sustain our rights under international law and in accordance with the provisions of the United Nations Charter.

The House will not expect me to give details at this stage of the military steps we have taken to respond to the worsening situation. In the meantime we continue to hope that the Argentine Government, even at this late stage, will reconsider its rejection of the diplomatic channel as a means for settling differences between our two countries.

'No Invasion' Has Occurred

LD021022 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1016 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Text] Governor of the Falkland Islands, Mr Rex Hunt, has reported this morning that there has been no invasion landing by the Argentinians, Deputy Foreign Secretary Mr Humphrey Atkins told the Commons in an emergency statement.

Mr Atkins was commenting on news agency reports that commandos from the mainland had taken over the Falkland Islands' Port Stanley Airport. "The report on the tapes that Argentinian troops have landed comes, I understand, from an Argentine newspaper."

"We were in touch with the governor exactly half an hour ago and he did not confirm those reports -- he said no landing had taken place at that time," said Mr Atkins.

But earlier Mr Atkins had warned MPs that an attack by Argentina on the Falklands was expected very soon. The prime minister heard him tell questioners that if the situation worsens, Britain will go back to the Security Council.

Mrs Thatcher, with Defence Secretary Mr John Nott at her side, also heard Mr Atkins report: "Over the past 24 hours the situation has become increasingly grave. There is now a real expectation that an Argentine attack against the Falkland Islands will take place very soon."

The government was taking "appropriate military and diplomatic measures" to sustain Britain's rights under international law and provisions of the UN Charter, Mr Atkins said. Even at this late stage the Argentine Government should reconsider its rejection of diplomatic channels as a means of settling differences, he added.

Shadow Defence Secretary Mr John Silkin pledged the Labour Party's "full support for the right of the people of the Falkland Islands to stay British, as they want." It was Britain's duty to defend them, he said, and he backed the government's decision to inform the Security Council there was a threat to peace. But Mr Silkin asked: "Has the government misjudged the situation?" "Is it not a fact that whenever the tinpot fascist junta that rules Argentina is in trouble at home, it threatens the Falkland Islands? And were not the signs there to be seen some time ago?"

Mr Silkin went on: "Did not the defence secretary contribute to that invasion to some extent by his talk of scrapping Endurance, and a large proportion of our surface fleet, thus perhaps giving the false impression that Britain might be willing -- as she will not -- to abdicate her responsibilities in the area?"

He asked whether the government was confident Britain could protect the islands and whether it had any support in the Security Council. Mr Silkin also wanted to know because the situation was "remarkably fluid," whether further statements would be made to MPs today.

Mr Atkins denied that the government had misjudged the situation. "The signs have been becoming increasingly grave over the last few days that the Argentines had assembled a fleet, and that it was operating in the vicinity of the Falkland Islands," he said. The government had responded in the "appropriate way," including the representation to the Security Council.

Mr Atkin said the decisions on the future of HMS Endurance could not have been a factor. "If they had wanted to wait until Endurance was not there, which it is, they would not be doing it now." He went on: "We did consult our friends before taking the matter to the Security Council, and we do have support there."

Former Foreign Secretary Dr David Owen said the Social Democrats fully supported the government's action. "We all hope that the contingency measures taken some weeks ago in order to ensure that naval forces are at this moment in the area and capable of intervening should that arise."

Dr Owen asked if MPs were right in believing that as Mr Atkins spoke he was not aware of any invasion -- and that a report that Argentinians had landed at Port Stanley was wrong. He urged the House not to adjourn at the normal 3 pm today, but to debate the crisis later this afternoon should an invasion take place.

Mr Atkins said there were no immediate plans for another session of the Security Council, but "of course if the situation becomes worse then the Security Council will immediately be called together again."

The landing facilities on the Falkland Islands would be able to take some transport aircraft which could enable the islands to be reinforced. An Argentinian-built airfield at Port Stanley was partially destroyed in a storm a few years ago, but a second was built in the late 1970s by UK contractors. The Falkland Islands office in London today said a number of commercial airlines had been in touch offering flying facilities. Distance is Britain's greatest problem in trying to reinforce the islands. The nearest refuelling base is thought to be Ascension Island, but that is about 3,000 miles from the Falklands.

In the event of an invasion of the islands, there is a defence grouping of islanders numbering about 100 men trained by the marines and armed with light weapons. But it is not expected they would be any match for a trained invasion force. A number of open beaches on the islands would facilitate the landing of an amphibious force. According to the latest reports from the Falklands today, the Royal Navy vessels on their way there had still not been sighted.

Mr Brian Frow, director of the Falklands Islands' office in London, said today: "For Britain now the correct response would be a graduated deterrent. In other words, force should be matched with force. If Argentina lands troops on the Falklands, Britian should be free to sink its aircraft carrier and so on up the scale."

Britain's options to reinforce the Falklands are very limited because of the distance. Troops could fly out in Hercules transport aircraft but they would need refuelling several times. As well as the possibility of using Ascension, friendly countries could help out along the route. The most obvious geographical choice, but one with enormous political sensitivity, would be South Africa.

If, as news agency reports from Buenos Aires suggest, the Port Stanley airfield is a target for Argentinian aggression, this would further complicate matters for reinforcement. The British Army and the RAF do not have the facilities to drop paratroops in combat zones in any force.

Meanwhile, the navy exercise -- Springtrain -- off Gibraltar is ending. This is one of the biggest manoeuvres planned for the year and comprised five destroyers and 14 frigates. The nuclear submarine Swiftsure and the diesel-powered submarine Oracle also took part.

If this force was deployed yesterday or today to reinforce the Falklands, it would probably take between one week and 10 days to reach the area.

No Flights to Argentina

LD021056 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1036 GMT 2 Apr 82

[By Michael Imeson, PA air correspondent]

[Text] British Caledonian Airways, the British "flag carrier" to South America, was told by the Foreign Office today not to operate into Argentina. And the airline has accepted the advice; a flight which left London last night for Buenos Aires and due there at about lunchtime British time, will land in Brazil. The 23 passengers booked for the full journey will be transferred to another carrier in Sao Paulo. Tomorrow's scheduled London-Buenos Aires flight will also terminate in Brazil. The airline normally operates three flights a week to Argentina.

The situation for British merchant ships is less urgent. The General Council of British Shipping said no British vessels were due in Argentina for the next few days. "But clearly we will be keeping a close eye on how things build up," a spokesman added. The Blue Star Line is the major British operator to Argentina.

Phone Links to Islands Down

NC021106 Paris AFP in English 1054 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Excerpts] Undated, 2 Apr (AFP) -- The British Cabinet was meeting in emergency session here today over the mounting crisis in the Falkland Islands as reports from Buenos Aires said Argentine commandos had landed on the islands and captured the airport at Port Stanley, capital of the British dependency.

All telephone links between Britain and the islands were cut from 8:30 a.m. (0730 GMT) today, an operator at the international exchange in London said. Before that time, callers were being told of "indefinite delays" but at 8:30 a.m., the lines were decalred "out of order," the operator added. Normal delay for calls to the South Atlantic islands is around 30 minutes.

British banks today suspended all dealings in Argentine pesos following the invasion reports. A spokesman for Lloyds Banks International said dealings were stopped pending reports from the Buenos Aires branch.

In Buenos Aires, informed sources said that a tank transport vessel landed on the Falkland Islands, despite poor weather conditions. Although the conditions allowed for amphibious operations, they did not allow airlifts of troops, the sources said.

The Cabo San Antonion, which landed early today, can carry up to 20 tanks, 700 men and landing ramps for the vehicles, as well as small personnel landing vehicles, the sources said. It was not immediately known what had been carried by the vessel. The same sources added that General Mario Benjamin Menendez would be designated military governor as soon as the takeover of the islands from the British was completed.

Meeting at Argentine Embassy

LD021134 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1100 GMT 2 Apr 82

[By Roger Tavener, PA staff reporter]

[Text] The Argentinian ambassador to Britain, Senor Carlos Ortiz de Rozas, was holding a top level meeting at his country's embassy in London's Belgravia today. He summoned his chiefs of staff to discuss the Falkland Islands crisis, and a spokesman said there was a possibility the ambassador would issue a statement later in the day.

As the meeting went into its second hour, plain clothes police officers from the metropolitan police diplomatic squad called at the embassy. They appeared to be checking security, but when they left they refused to comment beyond saying it was a "routine visit."

Other visitors to the embassy hurried into the elegant building in Wilton Crescent. The heavy metal studded black doors slammed shut behind them and the locks were engaged.

A lone police constable appeared outside the embassy as the crisis talks continued. Above him the flagpole over the embassy entrance stood bare. There was no sign of the Argentinian flag.

House May Sit Over Weekend

LD021408 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1346 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Text] Commons will be recalled to sit tomorrow or Sunday if necessary if there is any change in Falkland Islands situation, Commons leader Mr Francis Pym told MP's in second emergency statement to MPs today. Mr Pym said there had been no confirmation of any change in position since Deputy Foreign Secretary Mr Humphrey Atkins' statement this morning.

"If it appears the situation there makes requisite a meeting of the House tomorrow or Sunday, I will represent to the speaker so that appropriate arrangements can be made for the House to be recalled," said Mr Pym. Shadow leader of House Mr John Silkin said it was "essential" for Commons to meet tomorrow at 11 am. "The country would expect nothing less of us."

Mr Pym gave assurance that Commons would be summoned if any invasion took place. Mr Pym stressed he had "prepared the grounds" for House to sit tomorrow. Mr Silkin said: "The House really must meet at a moment when we may be at war, and that is the reality of the situation."

Government Silent on Invasion

LD021522 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1413 GMT 2 Apr 82

[By Chris Moncrieff, PA chief political correspondent]

[Text] The government were this afternoon apparently refusing to confirm mounting reports that the Argentinians had invaded the Falkland Islands. Nor could it be established that any further contact had been made with Mr Rex Hunt, the Falkland Islands governor, since the radio discussion this morning at 1030 (British time). Radio contact with the Falklands is difficult but many MPs are astonished that the government are apparently still unable to say whether Argentinian forces have set foot on British soil or not.

Meanwhile ministers are standing by in case another emergency cabinet meeting is called. The prime minister will now stay in London all weekend instead of going to Chequers. Britain has been in touch with all her allies about the crisis. But there has been no personal contact so far today between Mrs Thatcher and President Reagan.

Political observers believe the British Govenrnment is deliberately clamping down on information. They say it is inconceivable that they cannot know what is going on in the Falkland Islands. In addition, minister [as received may have to consider freezing Argentinian assets in Britain if an invasion is confirmed.

Cabinet Meeting Described

LD021546 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1518 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Text] Before a business luncheon near Swindon, Wiltshire, Industry Minister Mr Patrick Jenkin, who had been at the cabinet meeting, told reporters: "We are clearly in a military situation and the government is not going to disclose the preparations we are taking. "There are ships at sea and the fleet in this country has been brought to immediate notice for operation. The mood of the cabinet meeting was that this is a very serious situation."

He added: "The President of the United States spoke for over an hour to the president of the Argentine and failed to persuade him to hold back. They have serious internal trouble in Argentina, with riots in many of their cities. "This is a time honoured way of deflecting attention from their problems. I fear we are in for a difficult few weeks."

Mr Jenkin added: "This could have happened at any time in the last 15 years. Argentina has continued to make claims and threatening noises. It would have been totally impracticable for the British to have maintained a force in that area capable of resisting the Argentines."

PAPER CALLS REAGAN'S REPORT TO CONGRESS 'EMPTY'

NC021101 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 2 Apr 82

[From "Our Positions" column: "Assurances Without Content"]

[Text] In his regular bimonthly report to congress, the U.S. President again gives assurance of his government's interest in the Cyprus problem and of the U.S. decision to assist the UN effort for a fair and lasting solution of the problem. However, we regret to observe that so far the U.S. concern for Cyprus and U.S. willingness to assist the United Nations are simply phrases.

The fact that for years now such assurances have been given is neither compatible with the statement -- admittedly correct -- that the Cyprus problem is a question of international priority, nor with the existence of the problem. If the United States really considered the Cyprus problem as a priority question -- both from its own and from the international points of view -- then it would have done something definite to contribute toward progress.

The talks have been going on for years now -- the last phase being conducted with the Waldheim ideas as the focal point for many months now -- but without any substantive progress. The fact that the talks have been going on in a serious manner, as Mr Reagan says, is no proof of progress. In reality, in the case of issues of substance the Turkish side has not moved at all from its intransigent positions. And if the United States is concerned about a solution -- as Mr Reagan asserts -- then it should move and act in the direction of Turkey. In such a case, the U.S. assurances would acquire some content.

U.S. Responsibility

NC020959 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 2 Apr 82 p 3

[From the "Liberal" column: "U.S. Responsibilities Toward the Cyprus Issue"]

[Excerpt] Because presidential reports are not written by the President (he simply affixes his signature to the prepared document) we can now deduce that the State Department people, who also deal with the Cyprus issue, have been increased in number or that they have received instructions to look at their role with somewhat increased attention. If we are not mistaken in our deductions, this is rather comforting under the imperative prerequisite that U.S. leadership will at long last view our problem in a different light than hitherto.

Not even the greatest enemies of U.S. policy deny that this country has to protect important interests in our area. If bitter experience from other areas can serve as a guide in our own case (this bitter experience is now producing fruit in another area vital to the United States, Latin America) it must then also teach that erroneous, anti-people policy will have adverse consequences for the one implementing it.

I do not hesitate to state that U.S. policy was unjust for our people and their cause, a pure case of a people struggling to rid themselves of colonial administration and subsequently wanting to complete their independence, but finding a fanatical opponent in U.S. policy. If today the course we have to cover to reach a mutually acceptable solution is (and we use the words of the U.S. document) "fraught with obstacles which must be overcome," we have a right to point out that Turkey set these obstacles in place and maintained them with unheard-of tenacity. As the U.S. estimate says, these obstacles must be overcome. But the basic role for this falls on the shoulders of the United States, which supports Turkey and allows it to raise obstacles along the course toward a solution of the Cyprus issue. This is how we see things.

REPAIRS FOR USSR SHIPS RESUME AT NEORION

NC011518 Athens NEWS in English 1 Apr 82 p 7

[Text] The repair of Soviet ships has restarted at Neorion Siros. Two Soviet ships are now undergoing repairs at the shipyard of Neorion, the British company Aplenton who are operating the yard, announced. The representative of the yard said that under the agreement that they have they will repair ships that do not have arms or ammunition. So the Soviet fleet's assist ships would be able to come in for repairs. For each repair there is a separate contract and the Russians are always driving a hard bargain. The same source said that they plan to invest 25 million dollars into the shipyard. The employed personnel number 1,200 to 1,300 persons. Aplenton took over the shipyard after the Goulandris Co gave up.

SPOKESMAN COMMENTS ON ANKARA PRESS AEGEAN REPORTS

NC011947 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 1 Apr 82

[Text] Referring to Turkish press reports, the government spokesman stated:

1. The Greek Government has not made any reference to the Bern protocol in any of its demarches.

2. The Greek Government considers carrying out surveys, drilling and digging within the Greek continental shelf of the Aegean as an inalienable Greek right.

3. The pertinent programs for surveys, drilling and digging are being shaped and studied.

Referring to what the Turkish press has been reporting about a Greek-Turkish dialogue, the spokesman said that they are the exclusive comment of the Turkish press, and added that he cannot understand which dialogue the Turkish press has been talking about. The government spokesman added: I again wish to stress that the Greek airspace limit has been 10 miles since 1931, and it must be made clear in all directions that Greece's sovereign rights in the Aegean or anywhere else are not negotiable.

PAPER CHARGES UNDERMINING OF ARMED FORCES

NC310914 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 30 Mar 82 p 1

[Editorial: "What Is Happening in the Armed Forces?"]

[Text] There are unheard-of mass discharges from the armed forces; tapping of the chief of the Naval General Staff's telephone; his forced resignation and the decapitation of the naval command. Why? Is it because he refused to act on the lists, prepared by the party, of names of those who "must" be discharged or promoted? There is a takeover of the Armed Forces Information Service [YENED] by Marxist propagandists and its deliberate utilization in a way aimed at humiliating the armed forces and at diminishing their value in the eyes of the people. There is the disbandment of the National Security Battalions [TEA] while at the same time there are posters on "democratization" in the armed forces. There are articles, "Change in the Barracks Also," a television slogan, "Abolish watertight compartmentalization within the armed forces," a proposal made in the Chamber of Deputies, "Members of the Greek Communist Youth must replace TEA." There is participation by members of the armed forces in party activities. There is an obvious KKE attempt to undermine the armed forces.

At the other end of the scale the chief of the higher military command for the interior and islands talks of examples of lack of discipline. The prime minister and minister of national defense hyprocritically speaks of the need for "discipline" and "respect" for the "seniority structure" within the armed forces. He emphasizes the threat of the armed forces being "undermined" by the "intervention of politics in their function" while his government destroys the "seniority structure" by promoting figures of its choice.

It is clear that something is happening within the armed forces. What exactly is it? Lenin said: "There is a fundamental prerequisite for our survival -- to neutralize the armed forces and the security forces." Ever since that time this has been the immovable goal of the Marxists. This applies in an even stronger way to Greek Marxists because they are faced with a specific fact: each time they attempted to enforce their totalitarianism, they came face to face with the Greek armed forces, which crushed them.

Consequently, they consider the armed forces as their number one enemy. Now, taking advantage of the climate of "change," they are launching their "revanche." In their effort to achieve this, they cultivate the myth that allegedly totalitarian ideas and methods of training and command prevail within the armed forces, that the armed forces are a bastion of reaction and that this bastion must fall. A progovernment newspaper cynically reported that the forced resignation of the chief of the naval general staff was "a political message which must be carefully studied by all officers." They are not satisfied with changes in seniority, the unprecedented discharges, the political appointments. They now also demand "institutional changes" such as: trade unionism within the ranks, abolition of discipline, immunity for the antinational propagandists within the armed forces, uncontrolled access to the military academies, establishment of a "paramilitary" organization by armed Marxists, the "deep purge." This is the root of whatever is happening within the armed forces and this is taking place at a time when the threat from abroad is increasing, while our national territory is being violated on a daily basis, at a time of war preparedness!

The answer of the Greeks is: "Hands off the armed forces!" The only national solution is to protect the armed forces against political-party interference. In order to enforce such a solution there must be cooperation between the president of the republic, the prime minister, the official opposition, political personalities outside the Chamber of Deputies, the armed forces command and wise minds within PASOK -- and they do exist -- no matter how many they number.

GREEK CLARIFICATIONS ON AEGEAN POLICY REQUESTED

NC020806 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 30 Mar 82 pp 1, 14

[Nur Batur report]

[Text] Ankara -- It has been learned that because of the great differences between the reply Athens gave Ankara on Greece's search for oil east of Thasos Island and the statements made in Athens in the past 15 days, Ankara has asked Athens to clarify its attitude on the issue.

A high-ranking Foreign Ministry official has stated: "The Greek Government created the impression in its 13 March reply that it would not search for oil in disputed waters involving the continental shelf, but the statements made in the past 15 days in Athens are in sharp contradiction to the reply. At this stage, Greece has to clarify its attitude."

This is how political circles in Ankara are evaluating the policy the Greek Government has been pursuing since 13 March: "The reason Ankara considered Athens' reply on its oil search east of Thasos Island as positive was Greece's assertion that it would no longer search for oil in the region.

"Greece's search for oil in this region is not only contrary to the Bern agreement but also of such a nature that it could raise tension between Turkey and Greece to its highest level. However, we formed the impression from Greece's reply that it did not want to break its links with Turkey. This in itself led to the creation of an air of rapprochement between the two countries. Nevertheless, Ankara chose to act cautiously and stated that it would watch Greece's attitude very closely. This caution was expressed when we said: 'We hope our impression and evaluation does not turn out to be erroneous.'

"However, the speeches made in the last 15 days by Greek Prime Minister Papandreou and the Greek Government spokesman are in sharp contrast with the reply given to Ankara by the Greek Government on 13 March. The reply is not in harmony with the subsequent speeches.

"The Greek prime minister has maintained the same rigid attitude in his recent speeches, and the Greek Government spokesman has stated that Greece did not promise to suspend its search for oil in the Aegean.

"Another problem that emerged from these statements is that Greece considers its airspace to be 10 miles. All these diclosures and the developments of the past 15 days indicate that there is a contradiction between the 13 March reply of the Greek Government and its present behavior. This contradictory attitude must be clarified."

Ankara has made no statement on whether Greece has suggested a new meeting between the Turkish and Greek foreign ministers to discuss the outstanding issues between the two countries. However, it has been suggested in Ankara that the atmosphere created by Athens' reply might lead to a dialogue. It has also been stated that the Turkish-Greek dialogue might be held during the NATO conference in May, when the two foreign ministers can get together or, it might take place during the NATO summit in June between Prime Ministers Ulusu and Papandreou. It has been stressed, however, that all these possibilities depend on developments. In evaluating the possibilities of a meeting between the foreign ministers or a summit between the prime ministers, political circles stress that Greece's contradictory behavior should not be discounted. The same circles point out that the policy being pursued by Greece may lead to certain developments.

COMMUNIST PARTY STATEMENT ON SOVIET PROPOSALS

TA310947 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 31 Mar 82

[Statement by Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen 29 March -- read by announcer]

[Text] During the NATO meetings, the junta's Defense Minister Bayulken announced that his government supports the U.S. view against the peace proposals of the Soviet Union.

While this announcement was being made, two warships belonging to the U.S. 6th Fleet passed through the Turkish strait on 26 March and went to the Black Sea. The Soviet Union displayed a justified reaction in the face of this overt U.S. provocation. It harshly condemned the United States. It is evident that the existence of the U.S. war fleet can transform the Black Sea into a center of tension, like other regions.

However, a short while ago, in addition to a series of proposals, Soviet President Brezhnev also proposed to keep military fleets away from each other. As is known, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] supported this proposal as well as all the other proposals as a necessity of Turkey's national interests, and especially demanded that the 6th Fleet stop polluting our territorial waters.

The latest 6th Fleet provocation, which aims to confront Turkey with its neighbors in the Black Sea, has clearly proved how right the TCP was in supporting the Soviet peace proposals. The fact that the provocation coincided with the eve of the talks between Turkey and the Soviet Union on the 3-year trade relations constitutes another proof of this. As can be seen, the course of the junta in the wake of U.S. imperialism is contrary to our country's national interests. The disgusting lies that the Soviet Union poses a threat to Turkey have actually been concocted in order to conceal the fact that U.S. imperialism is threatening the socialist countries and the national liberation movements.

What are the warships of the United States, which does not have an inch of shoreline on the Black Sea, doing in our territorial waters? This is a clear show of force for the benefit of the socialist countries. By slavishly bowing down to this aggressive policy of the United States, the junta is also dragging Turkey into tension and the danger of war.

The junta, which is opposing the proposals made by Comrade Leonid Brezhnev, in line with the Reagan administration, is actually pursuing a path contrary to Turkey's national interests. The U.S. policy to further strain and exacerbate the situation in the world and in the Middle East and the Mediterranean totally contradicts Turkey's moves to improve its relations with all its neighbors. Sincere relations cannot be established with the Arab and Iranian peoples through such a policy.

Moreover, there are indications that in the face of U.S. aid, the junta will drag Turkey into becoming the gendarme of the Middle East and the Persian Gulf. The large military airports being constructed in Van, the settling of Afghan counterrevolutionary gangs in Turkey under the guise of refugees, the CIA moves on Turkish soil against Iran and the recent pro-Israel stand at the United Nations constitute some of these indications.

The Turkish people do not want to disappear in a nuclear war. They want to establish peaceful relations based on mutual interests and equality with all their neighbors. The Soviet peace proposals constitute a great opportunity for our people as well as all the peoples in the world. Turkey must exploit this opportunity and not become a tool for the antihuman and aggressive goals of the U.S. imperialists.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

U.S., JAPANESE POLICIES TO BE DENOUNCED

LD302024 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 30 Mar 82

[Excerpts] It is a well-known fact: In order to reach agreement one must avoid subjects which are annoying. This is exactly what the Common Market heads of state and government have done at their meeting in Brussels for the 22d European summit.

Officially, they did not discuss farm prices or Britain's contribution to the Community budget. On the other hand, The 10 did reach agreement on the major current economic problems: They are going to try to harmonize their arrangements to fight unemployment which affects about 10 percent of Europe's working population. Also, at the forthcoming summit of industrialized countries to be held at Versailles in 3 months, the Europeans are going to denounce with a single voice American policy regarding interest rates and Japanese protectionism. Here are President Mitterrand's explanations on these two issues -- Uncle Sam and the Yellow Peril -- at the end of the summit.

[Begin Mitterrand recording] The Community must defend its legitimate interests both regarding Japan when necessary and the United States. Our interests are really the same as regards interest rates and exchange rates; our interests are really the same on many other issues. What unites us by far outweighs what may divide us when we meet with the North Americans, the United States or Canada, and with the Japanese. [end recording]

VAN DER STOEL DOUBTS SALVADORAN CLAIMS ON DEATHS

[Excerpt] The Hague, 24 Mar -- If the investigation into the four journalists' deaths shows that they were murdered, this will have "serious consequences" for relations between the Netherlands and El Salvador, Netherlands Foreign Minister van der Stoel assured the Second Chamber Foreign Affairs Standing Committee this morning.

Van der Stoel declared that he had doubts about the statements from the Salvadoran Government that the four IIKON [Netherlands Christian Broadcasting Company] journalists died in shooting between the army and guerrillas. However, he feared that despite all efforts to clear up the matter question marks would remain and that, despite strong suspicions, it would never be possible to produce definite evidence that the four had been led into an army ambush and murdered.

SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL LEADERS ISSUE RESOLUTION

LD021520 Hamburg DPA in German 1317 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Text] Bonn, 2 Apr (DPA) -- The leadership of the Socialist International [SI] is urging the superpowers to expand the disarmament negotiations and is demanding new steps to end the military conflicts in Central America and to expand economic development in that region. The Presidium of this Western-oriented community of socialist and social democratic parties proposed after 2 days of discussions under the leadership of its president, SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, a comprehensive treaty for Central America and the Caribbean in order to achieve peace, stability, national independence and cooperation in the region. This treaty, a resolution by the SI leadership says, has to include all the states in the region, and especially the United States and Cuba.

According to Brandt, the SI Presidium stressed the significance of the envisaged resumption of the negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on strategic weapons (SALT/START), and also the Geneva talks started by the two superpowers in November on European medium-range nuclear weapons. These negotiations are of decisive importance for the prevention of a disaster for mankind. Without dealing in detail with the latest arms control proposals of the Soviet Union and the United States, Brandt spoke in favor of taking all steps to promote an approach to such agreements. The SI president made clear that his organization wants to influence directly both superpowers towards progess in disarmament.

The SI Presidium expressed its concern at the situation in Central America, marked, it said, by economic recession, violation of human rights and a climate of violence and terror in El Salvador and Guatemala. This and the insecurity in the region provokes a dangerous and unjustified arms race. The "so-called elections" in El Salvador have not brought an end to the terrible destruction of the civil war. The only solution is negotiation, with the participation of all democratic forces, including the Salvadoran opposition movements, the Democratic Revolutionary Front and the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front, which would end the terror and result in justice and peace. As to whether the SI supports the guerilla movement in El Salvador, Brandt said evasively that it is a matter of fighting the terror from the extreme right, which has been taking place for a long time. Every process which may remove the causes of the civil war has to be encouraged.

The party leaders further call for support for the leftwing Sandinist Government in Nicaragua, criticized by the United States, in its obligation to pluralism, social justice, democracy and nonalignment. The SI leadership also supports the Nicaraguan Government in condemnation of any attempt from whatever side to interfere in its independence or to try to destabilize it. It further pledges the Democratic Socialist Party in Guatemala, opposing the governing military, its express support in the development of a true democratic process.

In discussions on East-West relations, the Bonn conference expressly advocates free trade unions in Poland. These are of great importance for the future of the country and the Polish people. Asked about the SI stance on further credits to Poland, Brandt said this has to be seen primarily from the aspect of improving the supply situation of the people. He stressed that in East-West relations economic cooperation cannot be seen solely from the economic viewpoint.

The leaders of all major socialist parties took part in the SI conference, including those from Latin America and Salvadoran opposition leader Guillermo Ungo. Government leaders from Austria, Bruno Kreisky; Denmark, Anker Jorgensen; and Finland, Kalevi Sorsa, were also present, as well as party leader Shimon Peres (Israel) and Lionel Jospin (France).

PLANS FIRM FOR REAGAN TO ADDRESS BUNDESTAG 10 JUN

LD031830 Hamburg DPA in German 1744 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Text] Bonn, 3 Apr (DPA) -- President Ronald Reagan is to address the German lower house (Bundestag) on 10 June. It was learned in Bonn today that lower house President Richard Stuecklen sent the invitation via the Foreign Office to the U.S. head of state this week. The German ambassador in Washington, Peter Hermes, had earlier inquired at the White House whether the U.S. President would accept the invitation. It is thought that the key subject of the speech will be German-U.S. relations and the NATO counterarming decision.

KEIP VIEWS RESULTS OF TALKS IN WASHINGTON

LD040350 Hamburg DPA in German 1719 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Excerpts] Washington, 3 Apr (DPA) -- At the end of his 2 days of talks in Washington, Walther Leisler Keip, deputy chairman of the CDU/CSU Bundestag group, has advocated a "joint strategy" by the United States, West Europe and Japan concerning economic cooperation and the question of credits toward the Eastern bloc. In a talk with German journalists, Kiep said on Saturday that this, apart from East-West questions, was one of the main topics of his discussion with U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig.

The CDU politician called for the earliest possible agreement. As a countermove, the USSR ought to make concessions concerning arms and disarmament questions. The U.S. proposals concerning negotiations on intercontinental missiles would, in Kiep's view, be "very far-reaching" and would be submitted to coincide with the economic and NATO summits in early June.

Concerning FRG-U.S. relations, Kiep said critics have undoubtedly been convinced that there has been no change in the basically positive mood in the Federal Republic toward the alliance. In his views, "the Federal Government has so far not succeeded in making sufficiently clear that the Western alliance is the basis for peace and that there are specific German and European requirements that must be considered within the framework of that policy." Keip confirmed that the U.S. public considers the natural gas pipeline deal with Moscow as finalized, despite its continuing misgivings. The wish to see that deal canceled was not expressed to him. Keip is to return to the Federal Republic on Tuesday.

SWEDISH PRIME MINISTER MEETS CARSTENS, GENSCHER

LD011722 Hamburg DPA in German 1519 GMT 1 Apr 82

[Excerpts] Bonn, 1 Apr (DPA) -- Federal President Karl Carstens and Swedish Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin praised the good and friendly relations between the FRG and Sweden today in Bonn. In a 60-minute talk at the Villa Hammerschmidt, both sides expressed satisfaction that there are no problems in the relationship between Bonn and Stockholm. During the afternoon Falldin had a longer exchange of views with the Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher at the Swedish Embassy, which dealt primarily with East-West relations.

At the center of the talk between Carstens and the Swedish guest were problems of the world economy and international environmental protection. At the meeting with Genscher, defense and disarmament and arms control were discussed.

[Excerpt] Rome, 2 Apr (ANSA) -- United Nations Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar flew in here today for a six-day visit during which he will chair a session on the coordination of U.N. activities and meet with Italian leaders, Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou and Pope John Paul II. The U.N.'s spring sessions coordinating the world body's various activities will be held at the Rome-based Food and Agriculture Organization, one of the U.N.'s specialized agencies.

CYPRUS' KIPRIANOU ARRIVES TO MEET PEREZ DE CUELLAR

AU032005 Rome ANSA in English 1925 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Excerpt] Rome, 3 Apr (ANSA) -- Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou arrived in Rome today from Nicosia and Athens for consultations tomorrow with the secretary general of the United Nations, Javier Perez de Cuellar, on the situation on Cyprus. In a statement delivered at Rome's Leonardo da Vinci Airport, Kiprianou said that his talk with the UN scretary general, in Rome since Friday, "will be devoted to a search for a solution to the Cypriot question, in that efforts conducted thus far have led to limited progress."

After words of praise for Perez de Cuellar -- "A person I know very well because he was on Cyprus for years as the special envoy of Secretary General Kurt Waldheim" -- the Cypriot head of state underscored his desire for "a more active participation" in a settlement from "friendly countries." "For our part", he continued, "we will do everything within our possibilities to find a solution within the United Nations framework." The president of the island republic said that he was, however, "not optimistic" as regards the immediate future because of the policy pursued by Turkey, "a policy linked to separatist positions which are aboslutely unacceptable for Cyprus."

"For this reason, we feel that international activities will be necessary to make the Ankara government understand the need to change its position", he added. Kiprianou insisted that "one thing is essential, therefore, for a settlement of the [words indistinct] and that is that occupation troops must be withdrawn."

Before his departure from Rome on Monday, Kiprianou will go to the Quirinale presidential palace for a meeting with head of state Sandro Pertini.

Report on Talks

NC041915 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 4 Apr 82

[Excerpt] This evening in Rome President Kiprianou had a private meeting with UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar, with whom he broadly reviewed the Cyprus problem. The meeting, which lasted 1 hour and 40 minutes, was held at the UN Information Office.

In a statement after the meeting, the UN secretary general said all problems connected with the Cyprus problem had been discussed widely during the meeting. He added that the meeting had been exceptionally interesting and constructive. I look forward, he said, to another opportunity for a discussion of all the problems that concern us. In reply to a question as to whether he intends to visit Cyprus, Perez de Cuellar said he is always ready to visit Cyprus if there is a possibility for some positive and constructive result.

Asked to comment on Greek Prime Minister Papandreou's proposal for withdrawal of Turkish troops from Cyprus and their replacement by UN forces, with the expenses to be paid by the Greek Government, Perez de Cuellar said everything is under discussion.

The president of the republic expressed his joy and satisfaction with the meeting and said it had been constructive. He discussed, he said, all aspects of the Cyprus problem and we agreed that the intercommunal talks should be accelerated and that all significant issues should be dealt with. President Kiprianou said he had agreed to meet with Perez de Cuellar again. In connection with the possible time for the meeting, President Kiprianou said the meeting may possible take place early in June in New York on the occasion of the discussion of the disarmament issue at the UN General Assembly. Meanwhile, he said, we shall be in contact and we shall continue our consultations.

Kiprianou also said the significant issue of the missing persons had been discussed and that the secretary general had shown special interest. Replying to a question as to whether Mr Perez de Cuellar was optimistic, President Kiprianou said it is not only up to him and the secretary general to solve the Cyprus problem; the position of Turkey, he stressed, should also change. What I can say, he added, is that I perceive a great interest by the secretary general to promote a solution for the Cyrpus problem in accordance with the UN resolutions and the summit agreements.

Further on Talks

AU050844 Rome ANSA in English 0820 GMT 5 Apr 82

[Excerpts] Rome, 5 Apr (ANSA) -- Cypriot President Spiros Kiprianou met for an hour and a quarter Sunday with United Nations Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar in Rome.

All aspects of the situation on Cyprus, partitioned since the Turkish invasion of the island in 1974, were discussed in depth, Perez de Cuellar told newsmen here.

Both men called the talk extremely positive and constructive even though any possible U.N. mediation is still in the exploratory stage.

Later this week Perez de Cuellar will meet in Geneva with the Turkish-Cypriot leader (Rauf Denktas), at the latter's request.

This evening Kiprianou goes to West Germany for talks with the president of the Socialist International Willy Brandt who is studying ways to unblock stalled negotiations between the two Cypriot communities. Kiprianou and Perez de Cuellar are to meet again in New York in June.

The U.N. secretary general said that for the time being it was premature to talk of his going to Cyprus himself. This would only be possible when concrete results could be expected, he said.

The Sunday talks between the U.N. leader and Kiprianou also touched upon humanitarian problems plaguing the island, especially for the 2,000 Greek Cypriots in the Turkish zone who have been missing ever since the invasion.

The U.N. has been the major sponsor of negotiations between the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities for a settlement which would include the recreation of a single state and the withdrawal of Turkish troops from the island.

Before his departure from Rome today, Kiprianou will go to the Quirinal presidential palace for a meeting with head of state Sandro Pertini.

THATCHER ADDRESSES HOUSE ON FALKLANDS CRISIS

LD031150 London BBC Domestic Service in English 1019 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Speech by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher at emergency session of the House of Commons -- live]

[Text] Mr Speaker, sir: The House meets this Saturday to respond to a situation of great gravity. We are here, because for the first time in many years British sovereign territory has been invaded by a foreign power. After several days of rising tension in our relations with Argentina, that country's armed forces attacked the Falkland Islands yesterday and established military control of the islands.

Mr Speaker, yesterday was a day of rumor and counterrumor. Throughout the day we had no communication from the government of the Falklands. Indeed, the last message we received was at 25, 21, 55 hours [as heard] on Thursday night, the 1st of April. Yesterday morning, at 0833, we sent a telegram [laughter in the House] which was acknowledged. At 0845, all communications ceased. I will refer again to this in a moment.

By late afternoon yesterday it became clear that an Argentine invasion had taken place and that the lawful British Government of the islands had been usurped. Mr Speaker, I'm sure that the whole House will join me in condemning totally this unprovoked aggression by the Government of Argentina against British territory. It has not a shred of justification and not a scrap of legality.

Mr Speaker, it was not until 0830 this morning, our time, that I was able personally to speak to the governor, who had arrived in Uruguay, that I learned precisely what had happened. He told me that the Argentines had landed approximately at 0600 Falkland time, 1000 our time. One party attacked the capital from the landward side and another from the seaward side. The governor then sent a signal to us, which we did not receive. Communications, of course, had ceased at 0845. It is common for atmospheric conditions to make communications with Port Stanley difficult. Indeed, we had been out of contact for a period the previous night. The governor reported that the marines -- in his defense, in the defense of Government House -- were superb. They acted, he said, in the best traditions of the Royal Marines. They inflicted casualties, but those defending Government House suffered none. He himself had kept the local people informed of what was happening through a small local transmitter he had in Government House. He is relieved that the islanders heeded his advice to stay indoors. Fortunately, as far as he is aware, there were no civilian casualties. When he left the Falklands, he said the people were in tears. They do not want to be Argentines. He said the islanders are still tremendously loyal. I must say, I have every confidence in the governor and the action he took. [shouting in the House]

I must tell the House that the Falkland Islands and their dependencies remain British territory. No aggression and no invasion alters that simple fact. It is the government's objective to see that the islands are freed from occupation and are returned to British administration at the earliest possible moment.

Mr Speaker, Argentian has, of course, long disputed British sovereignty over the islands. We have absolutely no doubt about our sovereignty, which has been continuous since 1833. Nor have we any doubt about the unequivocal wishes of the Falkland Islanders, who are British in stock and tradition and wish to remain British in allegiance. We cannot allow the democratic rights of the islanders to be denied by the territorial ambitions of Argentina. Over the past 15 years successive British Governments have held a series of meetings with the Argentine Government to discuss the dispute. In many of these meetings elected representatives of the islanders have taken part.

We have always made it clear that their wishes were paramount and that there will be no change in sovereignty without their consent, without the approval of this House. The most recent meeting took place this year in New York at the end of February between my honorable friend, the member for Shoreham, accompanied by two members of the islands council and a deputy foreign secretary of Argentina. The atmosphere at the meeting was cordial and positive, and the communique was issued about future negotiating procedures. Unfortunately, the joint communique, which had been agreed, was not published in Buenos Aires. There was indeed a good deal of bellicose comment in the Argentine press in late February and early March, about which my honorable friend, the minister of state for foreign and commonwealth affairs, expressed his concern in this House on the 3d of March following the Anglo-Argentine talks in New York.

This has not, however, been an uncommon situation in Argentina over the years, and it would have been absurd to dispatch the fleet every time [shouts in the House] there was bellicose talk in Buenos Aires. There was no good reason to think on the 3d of March that an invasion was being planned, especially against the background of the constructive talks in which my honorable friend had just been engaged and to which the joint communique on behalf of the Argentine deputy minister of foreign affairs, with my honorable friend, read. [sentence as heard] The meeting took place in a cordial and positive spirit. The two sides affirmed their resolve to find a solution to the sovereignty dispute and considered in detail an Argentine proposal for procedures to make better progress in this sense.

There had, of course, been previous incidents affecting sovereignty before the one in South Georgia, to which I will refer to in a moment. In December 1976, the Argentinians illegally set up a scientific station on one of the dependencies within the Falklands group, Southern (Fuel). The last government attempted to solve the matter through diplomatic exchanges, but without success. The Argentinians remained there and are still there. Two weeks ago, on 19th of March, the latest in these series of incidents affecting sovereignty occurred. And the deterioration in relations between the British and Argentinian Governments, which culminated in yesterday's Argentinian invasion, began. The incident appeared at the start to be relatively minor, but we now know that it was the beginning of much more. The commander of the British Antarctic survey base at (Pridvicken) on South Georgia -- a dependency of the Falklands Islands over which the United Kingdom has exercised sovereignty since 1775 when the island was discovered by Captain Cook -- reported to us that an Argentine Navy ship had landed about 60 Argentines at nearby (Leith) Harbor.

They had set up camp and hoisted the Argentine flag. They were there to carry out a valid commercial contract to remove scrap metal from a former whaling station. The leader of the commercial expedition, (Davidov), had told our embassy in Buenos Aires that he would be going to South Georgia in March. He was reminded of the need to obtain permission from the immigration authorities of the island. He did not do so. The base commander told the Argentinians that they had no right to land on South Georgia without the permission of the British authorities; they should go either to (Pridvicken) to get the necessary clearances or leave. The ship and some 50 of them left on the 22d of March, and although about 10 Argentinians remained behind, this appeared to reduce the tension.

In the meantime we had been in touch with the Argentine Government about the incident. They claimed to have had no prior knowledge of the landing and assured us there were no Argentinian military personnel in the party. Four our part, we made it clear that while we had no wish to interfere in the operation of a normal commercial contract, we could not accept the illegal presence of these people on British territory. We asked the Argentine Government either to arrange the departure of the remaining men or to ensure that they obtain the necessary permission to be there.

Because we recognized the potentially serious nature of this situation, HMS Endurance was ordered to the area. We told the Argentine Government that if they failed to regularize the position of the party on South Georgia or to arrange for their departure, HMS Endurance would take them off without using force and return them to Argentina. This was, however, to be a last resort. We determined that this apparently minor problem of 10 people on South Georgia in pursuit of a commercial contract should not be allowed to escalate, and we made it plain to the Argentine Government that we wanted to achieve a peaceful resolution of the problem by diplomatic means.

To help in this, HMS Endurance was ordered not to approach the Argentine party at (Leith), but to go to (Pridvicken). It soon became clear that the Argentine Government had little interest in trying to solve the problem. On the 25th March, another Argentine Navy ship arrived at (Leith) to deliver supplies to the 10 men ashore. Our ambassador in Buenos Aires sought an early response of the Argentine Government to our previous request that they should arrange for the men's departure. This request was refused. Last Sunday, on Sunday the 28th of March, the Argentine foreign minister sent a message to my noble friend, the foreign and commonwealth secretary, refusing outright to regularize the men's position. Instead, it restated Argentina's claim to sovereignty over the Falkland Islands and their dependencies. My noble friend, the foreign and commonwealth secretary, then sent a message to United States secretary of state, asking him to intervene and to urge restraint.

By the beginning of this week it was clear that our efforts to solve the South Georgia dispute through the usual diplomatic channels were getting nowhere. Therefore, on Wednesday the 31st of March my noble friend the foreign secretary proposed to the Argentine foreign minister that we should dispatch a special emissary to Buenos Aires. Later that day, we received information -- this was Wednesday -- which led us to believe that a large number of Argentine ships, including an aircraft carrier, destroyers, landing craft, troop carriers and submarines, were heading for Port Stanley.

I contacted President Reagan that evening and asked him to intervene with the Argentine president directly. We promised in the meantime to take no action to escalate the dispute for fear of precipitating the very event [loud uproar; announcer says uproar only from Labor side] that our efforts were directed to avoid.

May I remind honorable gentlemen opposite [uproar] what happened when, during the lifetime of their government, [jeers, cry of "We didn't lose the Falklands"] Southern (Fuel) was occupied. It was occupied in 1976. This House was not even informed by the then government until 1978. This House was not even informed until 1978 when, in response to questioning by my honorable friend, the member for Shoreham, on 24 May 1978, the honorable member for Merthyr Tydfil [opposition leader Michael Foot] said: We have sought to resolve the issue through diplomatic exchanges between the two governments, that is infinitely preferable to public denunciations and public statements when we are trying to achieve a practical result to the problem that has risen.

[Former Foreign Office junior minister Ted Rowlands] (?You are) talking about a piece of rock in the most southerly part of the dependencies, totally uninhibited and smelling of large amounts of accumulation of both penguin and bird droppings. There's a vast difference -- a whole world of difference [cheers] -- between 1,800 people now imprisoned by Argentine invaders and that [words indistinct].

[Thatcher] We are talking about the sovereignty of British territory which was infringed in 1976, about which this House was not even informed until 1978. We are talking, then, about a further incident of which this House, was not even informed until 1978. We are talking, then of a further incident in South Georgia which -- as I have indicated -- seemed to be a minor incident at the time. There's only a British Antarctic survey which is there and a commercial contract to remove a whaling station. I suggest to the honorable gentleman that, had at that time, I'd come to the house and said: We have a problem on South Georgia with 10 people who have landed with a contract to remove a whaling station, had I then gone on to say that we should send Invincible, I should have been accused of war-mongering and saber-rattling. [cheers] The (?connection) did not arrive about the Argentine fleet until Wednesday. They are, of course, very close to the Falklands, which the honorable gentleman cannot and must not ignore, and can sail and reach there very quickly.

Mr Speaker, on Thursday the Argentine foreign minister rejected the idea of an emissary and told our ambassador that the diplomatic channel as a means of solving this dispute was closed. President Reagan had a very long telephone conversation -- some 50 minutes -- with the Argentine president, but his strong representations fell on deaf ears.

I am grateful to him and Secretary Haig for their strenuous and persistent efforts on our behalf. [cheers] Thirdly, on Thursday the United Nations secretary general, Mr Perez de Cuellar, summoned both British and Argentine permanent representatives to urge both countries to refrain from the use or threat of force in the South Atlantic. Later that evening we sought an emergency meeting of the Security Council. We accepted the appeal of its president for restraint. The Argentine said nothing. On Friday, as the House knows, the Argentines invaded the Falklands, and I have given a precise account of everything we knew or did not know about that situation.

There were also reports that yesterday the Argentines also attacked South Georgia, where HMS Endurance had left a detachment of 22 Royal Marines. Our information is that on 2 April an Argentine naval transport vessel informed the base commander at (Pridvicken) than an important message would be passed to him after 1100 today our time. It is assumed that this message will ask the base commander to surrender.

Mr Speaker, before indicating some of the measures the government has taken in response to the Argentine invasion, I would like to make three points. First, even if three ships had been instructed to sail the day the Argentines landed on South Georgia to clear the whaling station the ships could not possibly have got to Port Stanley before the invasion. [jeers] Honorable members may not like it, but that is fact. [indistinct shouts] Second, there have been several occasions in the past when an invasion has been threatened. The only way of being certain to prevent an invasion would have been to keep a very large fleet close to the Falklands, when we are some 8,000 miles away from base. No government has ever been able to do that and the cost would be enormous. Thirdly, [interrupted by indistinct question] -- Endurance is in the area. It is not for me to say precisely where and the honorable gentleman would not wish me to say precisely where -- Thirdly, Mr Speaker, aircraft unable to land on the Falklands because of the frequently changing weather would have had little fuel left and, ironically, their only hope of landing safely would have been to divert to Argentina. Indeed, all of the air, and most sea supplies come from Argentina, which is but 400 miles away, compared with our 8,000 miles. This is the background, Mr Speaker, against which we have to make decisions and to consider what action we could best take.

I cannot tell the House precisely what dispositions have been made. Some ships are already at sea, others were put on immediate alert on Thursday evening. The government has now decided that a large task force will sail as soon as all preparations are complete. [cheers] HMS Invincible will be in the lead. And will leave port on Monday. I stress that I cannot foretell what orders the task force will receive as they proceed, that will depend on the situation at the time.

Meanwhile, we hope that our continuing diplomatic efforts, helped by our many friends, will meet with success. Mr Speaker, the foreign ministers of the European Community member states yesterday condemned the intervention and urged withdrawal. The NATO council called on both sides to refrain from force and continue diplomacy. The United Nations Security Council met again yesterday, and will continue with this discussion today. [laughter]

Honorable members opposite laugh. They would have been the first to urge for a meeting with the Security Council, but (?would not in fact have) called one. [jeers] They would have been the first to urge restraint and to solve it by diplomatic means. They would have been the first to "accuse" us of saber-rattling and war-mongering. We are now, Mr Speaker...

[Moderator] The prime minister is already addressing the House [words indistinct].

[Unidentified speaker] To refer to our many friends, do we have any friends in South America itself?

[Thatcher] Mr Speaker, doubtless our friends in South America will make their view known during any proceedings at the Security Council. I believe that many countries in South America will be prepared to condemn the invasion of the Falkland Islands by force.

Mr Speaker, we are now reviewing all aspects of the relationships between Argentina and the United Kingdom. The Argentine charge d'affaires and his staff were yesterday instructed to leave within 4 days. As an appropriate precautionary and, I hope, temporary measure the government has taken action to freeze Argentine financial assets held in this country. An order will be laid before Parliament today under the Emergency Laws Reenactment and Repeals Act 1964, blocking the movement of gold, securities or funds held in the United Kingdom by the Argentine Government or Argentine residents. [cheers in the House] As a further precautionary measure, ECGD has suspended new export credit cover for Argentina. It is of course the government's earnest wish that a return to good sense and the normal rules of international behavior on the part of the Argentine Government will obviate the necessity for action across the full range of economic relations. We shall be reviewing the situation and we shall be ready to take further steps which we deem appropriate and we'll of course report to the House.

Mr Speaker, the people of the Falkland Islands, like the people of the United Kingdom, are an island race. Their way of life is British, their allegiance is to the crown. They are few in number, but they have the right to live in peace, to choose their own way of life and to determine their own allegiance. [cheers] Their way of life is British. Their allegiance is to the crown. It is the wish of the British people and the duty of her majesty's government to do everything we can to uphold that right. That will be our hope and our endeavor and, I believe, the resolve of every honorable member of this House. [cheers]

Reaction in Commons

LD031126 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1025 GMT 3 Apr 82

[by PA parliamentary staff]

[Excerpts] Parliament met for its historic Saturday session today in an atmosphere of deep crisis to hear the prime minister and the foreign secretary explain their handling of the Falklands debacle. Both the Commons and the Lords chambers were crammed. Lord Carrington said in the upper house that "We meet at a time of great crisis." But he admitted: "We don't have full details of the full circumstances in the islands."

The Argentinian first secretary was listening from the visitors gallery as the foreign secretary spoke. Opposition leader Mr Foot said the Falkland Islanders were "faced with an act of naked, unqualified aggression, carried out in the most shameful and disreputable circumstances."

"Any guarantee from these invading forces is utterly worthless," he said. Such guarantees would be as worthless as the guarantees given by this "Argentina junta" to its people. "Thousands of people, fighting for their political rights in Argentina, have been imprisoned. We cannot forget that fact when our fellow citizens in the Falkland Islands are suffering as they are."

Mr Foot said Britain had "a moral duty and a political duty" to ensure that its association with the Falkland Islands was sustained. "There is no question in the Falkland Islands of any colonial dependence. It is a question of people who wish to be associated with this country, who have built their lives on the basis of association with this country," said Mr Foot.

The Falkland Islanders had an "absolute right to look to us at this moment of desperate plight." The government had been right to take the matter to the United Nations, Mr Foot told MPs. "It was essential to take our case to the UN and present it with all the powers of command of this country," he said.

He said he hoped every other country would act in the same way as the president of France, who spoke out strongly this morning against the action of the Argentines. If the UN did not vote to condemn the invasion, Mr Foot warned: "It would be a serious injury to the UN itself and it would enhance the dangers that similar unprovoked aggression could occur in other parts of the world."

Mr Foot attacked the prime minister, saying her explanations had not been "very full or very clear," he said. "It seems the British Government has been fooled by the way the Argentinian junta has gone about its business," he said.

Mr Atkins had told MPs in yesterday's statement that Britain was "taking appropriate military and diplomatic measures to sustain our rights under international law." Mr Foot told MPs: "It was the Argentine Government that was taking appropriate military and diplomatic measures to enforce their will." Mr Foot demanded to know what had happened to Britain's deterrent force.

Former prime minister Mr James Callaghan had warned recently in the Commons that the Argentines had in the past staged "tactical diversions," he reminded MPs. Mr Callaghan had told MPs he had ordered ships "without fuss and publicity" to support HMS Endurance near the Falkland Islands when there was an Argentinian threat in 1977. Mr Callaghan said he hoped the government was doing the same now.

The Labour Government's tactics appeared to have worked and Mr Foot told MPs he hoped the government would have done a similar thing too. He reminded the house: "The people of the Falkland Islands have an even greater right to say it than we have." The opposition leader said there would have to be a full inquiry into the whole matter "so the evidence can be laid before the people of this country."

Mr Foot said: "I am sure the country is concerned with what we may do to protect those who rightly and naturally look to us for their protection." There were some Tory as well as Labour cheers as Mr Foot said: "So far they have been betrayed -- and the responsibility for the betrayal rests with the government."

The government would have to disprove that charge by deeds and not words. "We should not see foul and brutal aggression successful in our world," Mr Foot said. "If that happens, it can be a danger not merely to the Falkland Islands but to people all over this dangerous planet," the opposition leader added before sitting down to prolonged cheers from Labour MPs.

Chairman of the Tory backbench 1922 Committee, Mr Edward du Cann (Taunton), said the government's assumption that the Falklands problem could have been solved by diplomacy had been "fatuous." He called for a revision of Britain's defense strategy, to loud cheers from both sides. "It is astonishing that for all our defence expenditure, which is huge, and all our capacity for diplomatic activity and intelligence, we appear to have been so woefully ill-prepared."

It was extraordinary that conventional forces had not been put on stand-by. "The rule should be this: The defence of our realm begins wherever British people are. The apparent assumption that the problem could be solved by diplomatic means was surely fatuous. But it surely (?must) be said that this incident calls for a revision of the UK's defence strategy, some aspects of which have made many of us decidedly nervous."

Mr du Cann said it was vital for the government to take prompt action: "Every day now is crucial. For every day the fait accompli is accepted, the harder it will be to remove it. Just ask the Afghans and Poles." Mr du Cann said Suez surely taught Britain that not every ally was staunch when "the call" came. Britain had a duty to rescue its people and uphold its rights.

"Let us hear no more about logistics, how difficult it is to travel long distances. I don't remember the Duke of Wellington whining at Torres Vedras (a battle at a Portuguese town in the Peninsula Wars). We have nothing now to lose except our honour. I am quite clear it is safe in the hands of the prime minister."

Mr Enoch Powell (OUP Down South) said: "There is only one reaction which is fit to meet the unprovoked aggression upon one's own sovereign territory, that is direct and unqualified and immediate willingness expressed by action to use force. The government have set in train measures which will enable them to do that, but there must be nothing which casts doubt on their will and intention to do that."

When the sovereign territory of a country is invaded without warning, without provocation and without excuse there is nothing which requires us to wait upon the decisions or the conditions or the deliberations or the resolution of the United Nations.

Sir Nigel Fisher (C Surbiton) said that we had been pre-empted in the same way as we were in Norway by the Germans in 1940. That led to the fall of the Chamberlain government, he said, to Labour jeers, but he quickly added that he was not suggesting the same would happen to Mrs Thatcher's government.

Sir Nigel said that sanctions should be taken against the Argentinian Government. "The very least we should do is to ensure their exclusion from the World Cup," at which opposition MPs laughed loudly.

But they became serious again as the SDP spokesman, former foreign secretary, Dr David Owen, demanded to know why nothing had been done a month ago when there was ample warning. Dr Owen, referring to yesterday's rumours that defence secretary, Mr John Nott, had offered his resignation, said: "I would expect no other of him. He is a man of honour. I believe it is necessary now for ministers to consider their position."

Dr Owen suggested Britain declare its right to a 200 mile limit around the Falkland Islands and bar Argentine vessels. MPs might be dissatisfied with the government's actions over the last month, but they must sustain the government now, he urged. "There will be no question of anyone in this house weakening the stance of the government." But the prime minister had to "restore" the government and ask why Britain was "placed in the humiliating position it was put in." Dr Owen said: "It would not have been absurd to have sent forces -- it would have been the right decision a month ago."

Former Tory Minister Mr Julian Amery (Brighton Pavilion) said Britain's "defeat" by Argentina had shown the government's mistake in reducing the size of the navy. Britain had suffered the inevitable consequences of ill-preparedness and bad advice. The government should promise "to make the Argentinian dictator disgorge what he has taken -- by diplomacy if possible and by force if necessary." And the government should reconsider the proposed navy cuts.

Another Tory Mr Patrick Cormack (Staffordshire SW) said: "Someone has blundered. I do not know whom. I do not know how. But I have my suspicions. And my suspicions are directly, inevitably and regretfully both at Mr Nott and Lord Carrington.

"The prime minister and her colleagues must look again at the whole defence strategy and capability of this country. The electorate expected rather more of us than what up to now we have delivered. We must not shirk however distasteful the use of force might be, to try and retrieve the situation."

Mr Ted Rowlands, junior Foreign Office minister in the last Labour government, said he found it difficult to understand how the intelligence failed. Mr Nott and Lord Carrington had made a "massive misjudgment" in the handling of the situation in the last three or four weeks. If it turned out that as a result of these misjudgments, the islanders and MPs had been failed, they "should go."

The islanders had already paid a high price for the initial set of blunders. They had lost their freedom for the first time for over 150 years. "The guilty men should not go scot free if we do not retrieve as soon as possible."

There was fury on both sides when High Wycombe Tory MP Mr Ray Whitney, who spent three years as a Foreign Office diplomat in Argentina, said Britain should settle the crisis by negotiation rather than military force. If Britain attempted to land troops in the Falklands they would have to stay there for years, said Mr Whitney.

Another Tory, Mr John Biggs-Davison, threatened to try and force the Commons to go into a secret session if "defeatism of this kind is to be spoken." Mr Whitney said he was not being defeatist, but simply realistic.

Liberal Mr Russell Johnston said: "We have looked weak in the Falkland Islands for a very long time. The Foreign Office has not been the friend of the Falklands. Money has been starved and now we are in a situation in which a vast amount of money will have to be expended."

Tory MP for Bournemouth West, Sir John Eden, said: "I have long suspected that elements within the Foreign Office have been wanting to be rid of what they have regarded as a tiresome problem. The one factor that has so far prevented that from happening has been the resolution of ministers that it should not be so. But there has been a basic weakness within the administration, and the weakness has undermined our negotiating position and deprived us of the possibility of an alternative fall back plan," Sir Anthony said.

And fellow Tory Sir Peter Emery (Honiton) told the Commons that if the troops were not withdrawn within the next 10 or 14 days, "then a state of war should exist between the state of Argentina and the British people."

Winding up for the opposition, Shadow Defence Secretary Mr John Silkin said General Galtieri, the Argentinians' current leader, was "probably the worst of the bunch" of recent Argentine presidents. "He is a man who wears on his chest the medals he won in repressing his own people."

Mr Silkin agreed that diplomatic moves should continue, but "We are being asked to support the prime minister, foreign secretary and defence secretary in what may be a difficult and dangerous operation, when all the indications are that they have blundered and bungled over the Falkland Islands heretofore."

Unpreparedness was a collective decision "of the three most guilty people in the government," accused Mr Silkin. Of the prime minister, the defence secretary and the foreign secretary, he said: "It is these three who are on trial today. It isn't a moment for judgment, it isn't a moment for recrimination, but it is a moment when questions must be put and answered.... The government is on trial, and we are not prepared to give them a blank cheque. It would be foolish to do so, unless she is capable of answering these questions."

To loud Labour cheers and cries of 'Out! Out!,' he said: "If they are not capable of answering these questions, I say to the prime minister, the secretary of state for defence and the foreign secretary, the sooner you get out the better."

Defence Secretary Mr John Nott rose to a chorus of jeers from the opposition and shouts of "Resign." The jeers and heckling continued throughout his speech as Mr Nott defended the government's handling of the crisis. Labour MPs, beside themselves with anger, kept up a barrage of shouts and interruptions. Tory backbenchers for the most part remained silent, with the occasional groan, and many grim expressions.

Britain had wanted to solve the problem without any "sabre-rattling," said Mr Nott, but this only made the opposition even more hostle. Replying to Mr Enoch Powell's implied criticism of the "surrender," Mr Nott said his remarks yesterday as to whether the Royal Marines should surrender meant they should not surrender without a fight.

When he tried to tackle the issue of whether a task force should have been sent sooner, MPs replied in unison: "Yes, yes." The jeers rose to a crescendo as Mr Nott went on: "With the wisdom of hindsight, the despatch of a surface task force sufficient to deter or destroy the Argentinian Navy might certainly have given pause to the Argentinians."

Mr Nott said: It is impossible to know what psychological impact such a force might have had on Argentinian intentions. "But in deterrence terms, had it been successful that large task force would have had to remain perhaps indefinitely in Argentinian waters in detriment to its other tasks.

"We were throughout seeking a peaceful solution through the United Nations and other means." To have sent a naval task force to the islands at a time when Britain might have been going to the UN would have seemed highly provocative.

Mr Nott fought through the mounting uproar of angry opposition and some Tory MPs to defend his actions. His words were drowned by shouts of "Resign, resign," even from his own backbenchers. Sir Frederick Burden (Gillingham) sitting immediately behind the defence secretary, waved his hands at Mr Nott and repeatedly shouted "Resign, resign."

But Mr Nott persisted: "If we were unprepared, how is it that on Monday at only a few days notice the Royal Navy will put to sea with wartime stocks and weapons. I would suggest no other country in the world could react so fast," but this claim met renewed jeers. "We were not unprepared as you suggest," he went on, but as he sought to tell MPs that the carrier Illustrious was undergoing sea trials, his claims were lost in the uproar.

Mr Nott said suggestions that the Royal Navy did not have the true ability to take on the task were "flagrantly untrue." "It amounts to a formidable force which no other nation possesses with the exclusion of the United States and Russia," said Mr Nott. But this did nothing to calm the House, as to more shouts from the opposition of "Resign" and "Out" Mr Nott said the government did not pretend the situation was "anything but extremely grave."

"The resolution of this problem will undoubtedly be all the more difficult since the occupation," he said. "The military problems are formidable, but they are certainly not insoluable." The government intended to solve the problem with continuing diplomacy, he went on: "But if that fails -- and it will probably do so -- we have no choice but to press forward with our plans." The professionalism, preparedness and quality of Britain's armed forces were "unique in the free world," he said.

Mr Nott, whitefaced and shaking, and flanked by the prime minister, who looked shocked, was constantly forced to halt during his speech when his words were drowned by jeers from the opposition. The government would accept criticism, he said, and the support in the official opposition in what they intended to do. "We can at least say to the armed forces of this country we give them our unanimous backing in this House," he said.

The House rose at 2.00 pm.

Nott Interviewed

LD041326 London ITV Television Network in English 1126 GMT 4 Apr 82

[Interview with Defense Secretary John Nott by Brian Walden during a "special extended version" of the "Weekend World" program -- live]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr Nott, I wonder if there is one personal matter that we can get out of the way right at the outset. As you know there have been many rumors that some Conservatives want you to resign, and I noticed that Mr Patrick Cormack has now publicly asked for your resignation, so can we dispose of this first? Have you offered that resignation? Are you going to resign?

[Answer] Well, as soon as a minister loses the confidence of his parliamentary colleagues, he obviously must resign; and I would unhesitatingly do so as soon as I lost the confidence of my cabinet colleagues, my parliamentary colleagues and the prime minister. That goes without saying. But for me to quit my post at this moment would be very damaging indeed for the government; and my job is not just a political job, it is also as chairman of the Defense Council, an operational post and the job in hand is now to deal with this problem. The government must remain united under its present leadership.

[Question] All right, let me now take you to the crux of this situation. In the House of Commons you said a very important statement: If diplomatic means fail, and they probably will, a military solution will be necessary. Can we now discuss those military solutions? Now, one obvious course of action, not necessarily the best but one that has been suggested to us by defense experts, is that we storm the islands. Are you prepared, if the situation arose, to give the order to storm the islands?

[Answer] If it is the only, and necessary, course we will have to adopt that course. It is one of the options that at some stage we will have to consider. But leading up to that moment, we must keep the maximum of flexibility in our plans as to how we achieve the objectives outlined very clearly by the prime minister yesterday.

[Question] Can I ask you then if you regard it as an option that you might have to take, though wishing to maintain flexibility -- can I ask you, do you think we have enough troops to perform that operation if we needed to?

[Answer] It depends on a host of factors -- some of which came out earlier in your program. Clearly, it depends on who has air superiority, who controls the lines of communications, how many troops there are there, what the state of supply arrangements is. All these matters will be relevant at the time, and we will have to consider the position on its merits at that time.

[Question] But you don't turn away from the prospect, even though quite obviously and tragically it is going to involve British loss of life? You do not turn away from the prospect that if the circumstances were right and the need arose, we would storm those islands?

[Answer] We are going to restore British administration to the Falkland Islands. That was the prime minister's commitment, and we mean to stick to it even if we have to fight.

[Question] Well, now we have a problem there of course. The Falkland Islanders are in the hands of not just an Argentinian Government, but a fascist Argentinian Government which does not even have any compunction about murdering its own people. So, it certainly is not going to bother about murdering ours. Now are you prepared in any operation to take a chance and put them at risk?

[Answer] Well we must see in the next few weeks what impact there will be upon the Argentinian junta if public opinion in Argentina finds that they are losing their navy and other matters which the junta depends upon for their position. I think we must see what the impact on Argentina will be of military action against their assets.

[Question] So that -- and it's the tragic choices that have to be taken in war situations -- so that in order to secure their liberation, you are not unprepared to put the Falklanders at some risk, excepting that if you don't take measures of this kind they may never be free of Argentinian tyranny.

[Answer] Well, naturally we will do everything possible not to put citizens, British citizens, on the Falkland Islands at risk. Clearly anything we did would have that as an overriding aim; but it is quite clear to us that the British people on the Falkland Islands do not accept this occupation and they wish to remain under the British flag.

[Question] You rightly said that whether you order the storming or not would depend very much on a number of factors -- supply lines, the situation of air cover. A lot of defence experts believe, and I quite understand why, that it is very foolish to attack an island unless you have done something about the naval forces that may be supporting the military forces there. So let me put to you what I suspect is the really crunch question: Are you prepared to order the British Navy to take action against the Argentinian Navy and sink some of their ships if you think it is necessary?

[Answer] If necessary, yes.

[Question] No hesitation?

[Answer] No hesitation whatsoever.

[Question] When are you prepared to give this order?

[Answer] Well, we must wait to see how the events of the next few days, few weeks, develop. We are still seeking a diplomatic solution. By that I mean can we achieve the return of British administration to the islands by peaceful means, that remains our -- obviously -- our overriding objective. But if we cannot do so and we have to fight, we will.

[Question] Nevertheless, one must be frank. It's been a long time since the British people have had to bite into the bullet and I dare say that there will be a number of people who will say: Ah, now wait a minute. Are we prepared to sink Argentinian vessels if that means causing large-scale casualties first? Are we?

[Answer] Well, I think that there have been some Argentinian casualties on South Georgia already, so I regret obviously to say that there appeared to have been some deaths as a result of this incident already. We do not want to destroy human life, but we must retain our right to protect our own British subjects where they are invaded by an aggressor who has been condemned by the UN, and under the UN Charter it is quite clear that under Article 51 we are entitled to fight in defense of our own territory -- which is what we are in the last resort prepared to do -- and we are putting ourselves in a position to do just that and to win.

[Question] You are convincing me, if I weren't convinced already, that this is no charade; is it? We are not simply sending this fleet, and then going to announce somewhere in the middle of next week that we have struck up a deal with the Argentinians whereby the British flag flies every Tuesday but the islands go over to them?

[Answer] Well, we must retain the support of the Labor Party and of the Liberals and the Social Democrats. Politically, in the country so far as I can judge at this moment, we have the full support of the Labor Party and of the other political parties for this policy; we must retain that support. They made it absolutely clear yesterday that they thought that it was correct that we should return British administration to the Falkland Islands, and I am sure that the Labor Party will stick to that belief over the difficult few weeks that are going to follow. I do not doubt that there will be some people who now withdraw from a belief which they held yesterday and now start outlining all the difficulties, outlining all the reasons why we should not fight, outlining all the reasons why we should just give up our territory. I can see it all developing, but we have made this commitment. We are not putting the largest task force available in the world outside the two major superpowers to sea without the intention, if we have to, of using it.

[Question] Now what do you say then to the leader writers of certain newspapers who have already argued themselves into a position whereby we negotiate the Falklands away?

[Answer] Well, as a politician I am used to leaders in the press, but frankly all of us in government, of whatever party, do our duty based upon the facts which are placed before us at the time. And it is certainly possible to foresee a press campaign which can cause embarassment to the government. But in the last resort, we are the elected government of the British people and whilst we retain the support of Parliament we must maintain our resolve to do what has to be done; and we know the British people are behind us in that resolve.

[Question] On the other hand, those leader writers and others as you say, possibly members of Parliament, do appear to have some strategic logic on their side. They argue that all of this is happening many thousands of miles away from Britain but very close to Argentina, and that therefore even if our initial military operations were extremely successful, we might precipitate ourselves into a conflict where the logistics are all against us -- immensely costly and maybe even a defeat in the end.

[Answer] Well, the strategic and in particular the logistic problems are formidable. The Argentinians are within a few hours and they can have their navy on 72-hour alert; they are 400 miles from the Falkland Islands. To conduct an operation at this distance poses one of the most formidable problems that any country could possibly assume and may I say that those who criticize the government for running down the services, in fact we were spending far more money on the services than we were 2 years ago, must recognize that to be able to take on this task at all indicates quite clearly to the whole world we still possess the most formidable navy and the most professional navy in the world after the two superpowers. No other country could put the Royal Navy to sea within 4 days' notice in the way that it will be putting to sea tomorrow.

[Question] I might ask you one question about the future. As a result of this crisis, do you think there is now likely to be a reversal of the suggested navy cuts?

[Answer] No, because we must retain the capability we now possess of two carriers and a very large support force to conduct this kind of what has been commonly called an out of area operation. We must retain the logistic support, which incidently we have and interestingly enough the Argentinians, although they are much closer to the Falkland Islands, are very short of logistic support. They have to return to base, largely. We must retain this capability through the 1980's and the 1990's and we have two new carriers, Illustrious and Ark Royal, coming forward and they will remain in the fleet so that we still have the capability to conduct this kind of operation. May I point out that still the principal threat to the freedom of the British people does not come from that part of the world, it comes from the Soviet Union. That is the principal threat to our homes and our cities, and so the Royal Navy must be designed for the 1990's in a way which is most able to meet the Soviet submarine threat. So we have to keep both in mind.

[Question] All right, now let me bring you back to the question of our operations against the Falklands. This country has been at peace a very long time. You will recall as I recall that there was a good deal of bellicosity in America about Vietnam until the casualties started to mount, and then quite understandably a peace-oriented nation with its families and its jobs and its pleasures found that particular cost intolerable. If we start piling up casualties in this military occupation, aren't you afraid that a section of British opinion which may be supporting you now will start to turn against it, directly they realize there were sacrifices involved?

[Answer] Well, it we have to fight there will be casualties. I am afraid that is bound to happen. We may even lose some assets, that could conceivably happen, although I hope not. But the difference between our services and those of most other nations in the world, including the Argentinian services, is that we have an all-volunteer navy, army and air force. It is an all-volunteer service and because of that it is the most professional group of servicemen in the world. We will not have any conscripts in this battle, if it comes to that; we will have an all volunteer professional army, navy and air force and I think there is a difference from the kind of example that you give.

[Question] Yes. Do you think it is likely that we are going to get any help from our allies in any of this? Are we going to ask for any help from our allies?

[Answer] We are not assuming that we will receive any military assistance from our allies, no.

[Question] Why are we assuming that we shan't get any?

[Answer] Because, I have always said that in the last resort Great Britain must be responsible for her own defenses. We do not need, in fact we have, I believe, a superiority of equipment. We have superiority of dedication, we have superiority in professional training among our services to the forces that face us, and we must prove that to be the case. But I must insist, I must insist on making the point that if I sound bellicose, I don't wish to suggest for one moment that if we can't find a solution to this matter by peaceful means in the next few weeks, we would of course greatly prefer that to happen. [sentence as heard]

[Question] But you don't think it is at all likely?

[Answer] It doesn't look likely at the moment.

[Question] All right. Well, then now let's move to another possible option, because you want to keep your military options flexible, which might mean that we would need assistance from others. Suppose you decide on the logistic information available to you that you do not think that direct operation against the Falklands would be wise and you decide to go for a blockade. Now in that case, we shall require assistance from other nations, shan't we?

[Answer] No, not necessarily.

[Question] You think we've got enough in this task force to blockade the Falklands if necessary?

[Answer] Yes.

[Question] The general assessment of defense experts that we talked to is that they don't think a blockade is a very good idea, by the way, because it takes so long but they also make the point that they do not think that we have got enough ships in the task force to be able to do it.

[Answer] I see. Well, you know I think we'll anticipate we will expect, we'll be delighted to receive the advice of a great number of armchair strategists over the next few weeks and I am sure much of what we decide when we come to consider the operational options, we'll be criticized; but in the end the chief of staff must make these decisions and must put their recommendations to the prime minister, in particular, and to our other senior colleagues. Decisions will be taken at the highest political level. So far as the option of a blockage is concerned, it is no point in hiding that that would be an option. We, in my judgment, have the ability to conduct such a blockade without any assistance from our allies.

[Question] Do you leave open the option that we might launch some sort of attack, either from the sea or with the marines, on the Argentinian mainland?

[Answer] I am not closing any options, but I wouldn't wish to discuss that particular one. I don't close any options.

[Question] You would never wish to discuss any deployment, I feel sure, and I wouldn't want to press you on it, but you would at least like the Argentinians to know that if it is war we don't rule out anything; we intend to win it.

[Answer] As far as I am concerned as the secretary of state for defense, I have an objective which has been clearly outlined by the prime minister in the House yesterday, and we are closing no options in order to pursue that objective. The decisions, the operational decisions, on the assumption that peace moves are unsuccessful will have to be considered when we are properly deployed.

[Question] I have several times used the world war, always waiting for you to contradict me and say no, no there is no question of that. If there is going to be war, are we going through the proper diplomatic procedures, will there be an ultimatum to the Argentinian Government followed by a declaration of war?

[Answer] Well, what is described as a war and what is described as hostilities is a matter which keeps hundreds of international lawyers busy for great hours of time at their respective universities. As far as we are concerned, at the moment we believe that Article 51 of the UN Charter, which gives complete rights to any nation to act in its own self-defense, is more than sufficient for our needs. And that is the basis upon which we are now proceeding.

[Question] You have taken a posture which could not be clearer, but of course as it were you have cut off the government's line of retreat. You do accept, do you, that in view of what you have said this morning the credibility, indeed probably the existence, of the British Government now depends on carrying out a successful operation to recover the Falklands?

[Answer] I have not the slightest doubt at all that we are putting the Royal Navy to sea with a very large support force, including the marines as you suggest, knowing perfectly well that if we have to fight we will. And there will be no ambiguity about that whatsoever.

[Question] And win?

[Answer] Well, clearly we are not going to fight unless we do win.

[Question] Well, how long is it going to take?

[Answer] I have no idea.

[Question] If you were going in fact to storm the Falklands, presumably -- though it may be difficult to tell me -- presumably you have some idea of how long that particular operation would take.

[Answer] Well, it will depend to some extent on what happens between now and the moment when we are in position, if we do choose to conduct such an operation. And that depends on a whole host of factors which may well change in the next few weeks.

[Question] Mr Nott, there are no doubts in my mind at all about what you are saying, particularly in view of your reply to the last question, but one must accept there are a lost of doubts in the country, a lot of doubts on the Conservative backbenches.

[Answer] May I interrupt you and say that one of the problems of this country is that it doubts everything sometimes and if there was a little bit more national self-confidence, which has been what has really been lacking in this nation, and a little less willingness to criticize ourselves on every occasion and pretend we are much less adequate than we really are, then we would be actually a better nation than we are. Also, yes, I want to see a restoration of national self-confidence and the maintenance of unity here, which I believe today we have.

[Question] Despite what you said, that the Foreign Office is not up to some sort of negotiation that will end in Britain surrendering her sovereignty over the Falkland Islands, can you categorically say that that will not happen?

[Answer] I am afraid that it is always tempting to divine. I know that you are not seeking to do that in a personal sense, but to look at different parts of the government machine, the Foreign Office, the Defense Ministry, the Treasury and imply that they all have different views. There is only one view in this matter, and that is the view of the government as announced by Mrs Thatcher in the House of Commons yesterday and the government has a policy, the government has a view, and you may be able to find a few people who may have different views but it is the government view that matters.

[Question] Well, Galtieri has asked for negotiations. I presume that we do not want to negotiate with him on the surrender of our sovereignty over the Falklands.

[Answer] Well, Mrs Thatcher's undertaking yesterday was absolutely clear. Of course, we would rather sort this very grave problem by diplomatic means. I, as the defense minister, would infinitely prefer a diplomatic solution and a peaceful solution, and I for one moment would not wish -- I would be the happiest person in the world if in a week's time the task force can turn back, but I hope not. [sentence as heard]

Carrington Resigns

LD051204 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1142 GMT 5 Apr 82

[By David Healy, PA political staff]

[Text] Lord Carrington and his team of Foreign Office ministers today resigned over the Falklands crisis. Their resignations were accepted by Mrs Thatcher. Lord Carrington had asked the Foriegn Office news department to announce the news even though the convention is that changes in the government are normally announced from 10 Downing Street.

In addition to Lord Carrington, the lord privy seal and Deputy Foriegn Secretary Mr Humphrey Atkins, and his minister of state, Mr Richard Luce, also resigned.

Lord Carrington's resignation letter to Mrs Thatcher began: "The Argentinian invasion of the Falkland Islands has led to a strong criticism in Parliament and in the press of the government's policy. In my view much of the criticism is unfounded. But I have been responsible for the conduct of that policy and I think it right I should resign."

Only this limited portion of the text of Lord Carrington's letter has so far become available. Defence Secretary Mr John Nott also offered his resignation "as a matter of honour," Downing Street said. But Mrs Thatcher turned it down. She wishes him to remain at his post during the present military operations. Downing Street made it clear that there was no question whatsoever of Mrs Thatcher sacking Lord Carrington and Mr Nott nor delivering a rebuke to them.

In his letter Lord Carrington also said: "We must now, as you said in the House of Commons, do everything we can to uphold the right of the islanders to live in peace, to choose their own way of life and to determine their own allegiance. I am sure that this is the right course and one which deserves the undivided support of Parliament and the country. But I have concluded with regret that this support will more easily be maintained if the Foreign Office is entrusted to someone else."

He also said in the letter: "The fact remains that the invasion of the Falkland Islands has been a humiliating affront to the country."

The prime minister told Lord Carrington in her letter, accepting his resignation "with the greatest reluctance," that she had done her utmost during the weekend to dissuade him from his "unalterable decision." She said the news of his resignation would be received with "a heavy heart" by the cabinet.

In refusing Mr Nott's offer of resignation, Mrs Thatcher told him: "It is vital you continue as secretary of state as our forces prepare for the possibility of armed action. I have the fullest confidence in your ability to carry out the crucial tasks head."

In his brief, hand-written letter to Mrs Thatcher, Mr Nott said: "In view of the public reaction, and now that the task force has sailed, I would like to confirm the message which I have already sent to you that I wish to put my office at your disposal." In her reply Mrs Thatcher said: "I understand entirely the honorable feelings which led you to write as you did. It was the only course open to you. But the Ministry of Defence is not the department responsible for policy towards the Falkland Islands. I wish you to remain at your post."

A Downing Street spokesman said: "The prime minister is clearly working on the reconstruction of the government now. I have no news at the moment as to when the cabinet and government will be reformed. I cannot even say whether it will be today. I know of no other resignations nor of any statement to the House today so far." He indicated that the reconstruction of the government would probalby mean moving other cabinet ministers.

RAO-ROLANDHIS 'NONALIGNED' TALKS BEGIN 2 APR

NC021336 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Text] Indian External Affairs Minister Rao, who is on an official visit to Cyprus, conferred this morning with Foreign Minister Rolandhis, with the Cyprus issue as the main topic. Bilateral and international issues as well as issues related to the Nonaligned Movement were also discussed.

Rolandhis explained to Rao the latest developments in the Cyprus issue and Rao reiterated India's support for Cyprus. It was agreed the two ministers will continue their talks in Kuwait next week and in Havana in May, during meetings of the Coordinating Bureau of the Nonaligned Movement. Rolandhis briefed Rao on the progress of the Madrid Conference on European Security and Cooperation and there was an exchange of views on matters that are creating tension in East-West relations and that affect Europe. Today's talks between the two ministers also covered Middle East and European affairs and matters related to Southeast Asia and the Indian Ocean in particular. Bipartite cultural, economic and commercial issues were also discussed.

At noon Rao attended a working luncheon given in his honor by Rolandhis. Rao also conferred with acting House of Representatives Chairman Papaioannou, with whom he exchanged views on the Cyprus problem and the efforts in hand within the intercommunal talks for solution of the domestic aspect as well as on the further internationalization of the problem. Papaioannou mentioned that in case there is no fundamental progress in the talks, the Cyprus Government will be forced to resort again to the United Nations to ask for help toward success of the talks and for convocation of an international conference which will take up the external aspect of the problem. Papaioannou also expressed to Rao, to the government and the people of India the warm thanks of the government and people of Cyprus for the continuous and conscientious support they give to the struggle of Cyprus.

On leaving the House of Representatives Rao visited the Mahatma Gandhi statue by the House building. Rao also laid a wreath at the statue of Ethnarch Makarios and at the Makedhonitissa monument. Later the Indian minister was received by acting President of the Republic Ladhas.

Rao Urges Continued Dialogue

NC030915 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 3 Apr 82 p 1

[Text] Indian Foreign Minister Mr P. V. Narasimha Rao has urged the Cyprus Government to continue to try and settle the Cyprus problem by the intercommunal dialogue, despite the bleak prospects. Mr Rao pledged continued Non-aligned support in the search for a settlement. The Indian foreign minister was replying to a toast from his Cypriot counterpart, Mr Nikos Rolandhis at a dinner given in his honour. Mr Rolandhis hinted that the talks might have to be interrupted because of their sterility.

"The dialogue," Mr Rolandhis said, "has unfortunately faltered in the last fifteen months. No results have been achieved and, I would think in the course of the next few weeks, the political leaders of this country will be asked to decide whether it is advisable to continue the dialogue or whether another course should be pursued."

In his cautious reply the Indian foreign minister said: "You referred to when you might have to decide if there is any point in continuing these talks and whether the time has come to think on other lines. I have no comment on that, except to say that I am sure that all avenues could be examined. In the long run one has to find a way, however difficult the task may be, however uneven that way might be. So, I hope and pray that in spite of the very bleak prospects these avenues of dialogue will continue, because there is no other way.

"The Non-aligned way is the same way. We are trying the same between Iran and Iraq. Even when, after several visits, we find ourselves almost at our wits end as to what is to be done, we just cannot give up," Mr Rao said. "This is the position. These are our problems. No one else is going to solve them for us. We have to solve them ourselves and this is one of the points of prestige of the (Non-aligned) Movement."

Both Mr Rolandhis and Mr Rao underlined the close ties between the two countries. "There is a great disparity between India and Cyprus in terms of size, importance and influence in international affairs, but I believe that this disparity is counterbalanced by part in another field: in our pursuit of principles," Mr Rolandhis said.

Rolandhis on Troop Presence

NC030916 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 3 Apr 82 p 1

[Text] Turkey's military presence in Cyprus is a NATO presence, Foreign Minister Mr Rolandhis says. His remarks were made during his speech at the dinner for Indian Foreign Minister Mr Rao.

Mr Rolandhis said: "We have a dialogue between the two communities in Cyprus in an effort to resolve what we call the internal aspect of the Cyprus problem, differences of constitutional and territorial nature. Of course these differences do not consitutte any absolution for Turkey for what she did to Cyprus, especially if one takes into account the fact that the Turkish presence, personnel and weaponry in Cyprus, is a NATO presence on the territory of a non-aligned country. And this certainly constitutes an affront, and I would say even a provocation, to the whole of our (Non-aligned) Movement."

Rao Press Conference

NC031917 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1730 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Excerpt] Indian Foreign Minister Rao completed his 3-day official visit to Cyprus and departed the island this afternoon. In a statement he said India will continue its efforts for the promotion of the cause of Cyprus and the Cypriot people and for the achievement of a solution that will safeguard the unity, sovereignty, territorial integrity and nonalignment of Cyprus.

Indian Foreign Minister Rao began his contacts today with a meeting with the representative of the Greek Cypriot side to the inter-Cypriot talks, Ioannidhis. During the meeting Ioannidhis briefed the Indian foreign minister on the course and development of the intercommunal dialogue. Rao stressed again his country's support for the efforts for a just solution of the Cyprus problem which will safeguard Cyprus' unity, sovereignty, territorial integrity and nonalignment. The Indian foreign minister also had a meeting with the committee of relatives of undeclared prisoners and missing persons. The committee's members briefed Rao on their decision to strengthen and intensify their activities aimed at publicizing more fully the issue of the missing persons in the international arena in pursuit of a quick solution.

Rao also received a group of the pan-Cypriot refugee committee. During the meeting the group told Rao the positions and course of the committee in the struggle for the recognition of the refugees' rights to return to their homes and properties. Rao assured them that India's support for a just solution of the Cyprus problem will continue and even intensify. The Indian foreign minister received a delegation of the Karpas coordinating committee and of the Karpasha Greek women's association. The delegation briefed Rao on the tragic situation prevailing in the Karpas and the pressures the Turkish occupation authorities are exercising to force the last Greeks in the area to abondon it.

After completing his contacts, Rao gave a press conference during which he referred to the conclusions of his 3-day official visit to Cyprus. The Indian foreign minister described as very useful the talks he had with Foreign Minister Rolandhis and expressed the hope that Cyprus' close relations with India will continue. In reply to questions by journalists, Rao stated that his country, as a member of the nonaligned contact group, will continue its efforts for the promotion of Cyprus' and the Cypriot people's cause for a unified country. In reply to a question concerning Cyprus' demilitarization, Rao said the declarations of the Nonaligned Movement already contain such a provision.

In reply to a question on the proposal for an international conference on the Cyprus problem, Rao stressed that it would not be correct to express personal viewpoints, given the fact that India is a member of the nonaligned contact group. India, he stressed, supports the peaceful settlement of all differences through negotiations. For this specific issue, Rao said, I cannot make any comment because it is an issue of assessment, an issue of what can be done at a given moment.

POLICE THWART PLAN TO ATTACK ISRAELI EMBASSY

NC030624 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 3 Apr 82 p 1

[Text] According to information received by the security authorities, an Arab organization was to attack the Israeli Embassy in Nicosia about 20 days ago. Following receipt of this information, security measures were taken to foil any attack against the embassy, which would have unpredictable consequences for Cyprus.

Recently the alien department has deported from Cyprus a number of persons of Arab extraction, having declared them personae non gratae. Following recent reports of plans to murder an Iraqi merchant and to attack the Israeli Embassy, the presence of these persons in Cyprus was considered suspicious. The names of these persons have been put on the police "stop list" and they will not be allowed to enter Cyprus.

According to reports, recently various persons of Arab extraction in particular have been trying to persuade industrialists and merchants not to do business with merchants from Israel. A senior government official, who was asked to confirm the information about the attack on the Israeli Embassy, said that at times various reports that concern the presence of persons of Arab extraction in Cyprus are received with regard to various activities and thus the authorities are compelled to take certain preventive measures.

PLO Denies Report

NC040710 Nicosia ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 4 Apr 82 p 12

[Excerpt] A spokesman for the PLO mission in Nicosia commented on yesterday's press reports on alleged plans by an Arab organization to attack the Israeli Embassy in Cyprus. The spokesman stated:

"The PLO does not have information about plans by an Arab organization to attack the Israeli Embassy or about whether any Arab has been deported from Cyprus. A PLO representative confirmed this to the police today. It is well known that Cyprus and the PLO maintain very close friendly relations and that the Palestinian people have unlimited respect for the Cypriot people. Such activities as those the said press reports allege, although totally untrue, do not constitute the policy or practice of the PLO or of its member organizations, particularly when it concerns Cyprus territory. Those who carry out such activities have no relation with the PLO, and they are enemies not only of the Cypriot but also of the Palestinian people. We would not be surprised if such press reports prove to provocations to degrade the Palestinian people, as they are represented by the PLO, in the eyes of one of their best friends, the Cypriot people."

SPOKESMAN REPLIES TO AEGEAN PROSPECTING REPORTS

NC031231 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Text] The government spokesman has made the following statement concerning reports that the Greek ambassador in Ankara, Papoulias, has conveyed a Greek Government message to the Turkish Government on prospecting in the Aegean: No Greek Government message whatsoever exists which refers to or recognizes an agreement between Greece and Turkey on exploitation of the Aegean continental shelf. Consequently any reference to violation or nonviolation is, out of necessity, a figment of the imagination. Press reports on this, the government spokesman concluded, are absolutely inaccurate.

KIPRIANOU, PAPANDREOU MAKE STATEMENTS AFTER TALKS

NC021555 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 2 Apr 82

[Yiannakis Kareklas report from Athens -- recorded]

[Excerpts] A private meeting between President of the Republic Kiprianou and Greek Prime Minister Papandreou was held in a cordial atmosphere. The meeting was held in the Greek prime minister's home at Kastri and lasted 50 minutes. The Greek prime minister briefed the president of the republic on the contacts and initiatives he had on the Cyprus problem, specifically within the EEC framework. Generally summarizing, the positions of Kiprianou and Panandreou on the issue of the intercommunal talks are as follows: Despite the lack of progress in the intercommunal dialogue, the talks must continue. In case no progress is achieved, it should be studied whether the Cyprus problem should be discussed at the General Assembly, the appropriate time for this and the specific goal.

Regardless of whether the dialogue is continued or not and regardless of whether the Cyprus problem is discussed at the UN General Assembly, the intensification of international mobility, within the UN framework, in all directions and by all possible ways is necessary and mandatory. After all, both the initiatives of the president of the republic and the initiatives of Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou fall within this plan, which emphasizes the need for Cyprus' demilitarization.

As is well known, in 1978 President Kiprianou, speaking at the UN General Assembly on disarmament, stressed this need and demanded Cyprus' complete demilitarization and suggested the strengthening of the UN international peace force in Cyprus. Greek Prime Minister Papandreou repeated the same position during his contacts in Brussels in reply to questions by West German Chancellor Schmidt; that Greece is ready to undertake all expenses in case the UN peace force is strengthened in Cyprus following the withdrawal of the occupation forces.

Generally it can be stressed that the president's talks with the Greek prime minister have taken place within a truly cordial and constructive atmosphere, during which the coordination and cooperation of the two sides was reaffirmed. In a statement after the meeting, the Greek prime minister expressed his joy and satisfaction at the meeting he had with President Kiprianou at a time, he said, when the Cyprus problem indeed has new momentum. Referring to his talks in Brussels, the Greek prime minister said he had the opportunity to reposition the Cyprus problem to Greece's EEC partners. Referring to the meeting President Kiprianou will have with Mr Willy Brandt, he said the chairman of the West German Social Democratic Party is offering his good offices in order to promote the Cyprus problem's repositioning so that we may be able, he said, to lay the foundations for a different course which will promise a fair solution of the Cyprus problem.

In a statement, President Kiprianou said his talks with the Greek prime minister, after his visits to Rome and Frankfurt, will be of substantive significance so that we may, he said, chart our further course. President Kiprianou said he briefed the Greek prime minister on the course of the inter-Cypriot talks and on the fact that no progress has been achieved. Neither I nor Papandreou, he said, oppose the dialogue or its suspension, but, he added, there should exist various other simultaneous initiatives which will facilitate the Cyprus problem's advancement.

These initiatives, he said, are already being undertaken by Greek Prime Minister Papandreou, who has repositioned the Cyprus problem, especially in the European area, in the sense that there is occupation in Cyprus which impedes progress, something that certainly has always been stressed by us; that it is impossible to solve the Cyprus problem under any circumstances without the withdrawal of foreign troops. The Cyprus problem, he said, basically is an issue of invasion and occupation. Already, thanks to various initiatives by Greek Prime Minister Papandreou, that we absolutely support and are absolutely attuned with, a much greater mobility exists in the Cyprus problem.

Concluding, President Kiprianou reiterated the Greek prime minister's statement during his historic visit to Cyprus that indeed we are detecting facts and elements which justify greater optimism in the Cyprus problem.

PAPANDREOU, VRHOVEC NOTE MUTUAL FRIENDLY TIES

NC031415 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Text] At 1100 today Prime Minister Papandreou received Yugoslav Federal Secretary of Foreign Affairs Vrhovec, who is in Athens on a 2-day official visit. Speaking to newsmen after the meeting, the prime minister made the following statement: I would like to express my great joy and satisfaction concerning the visit of the federal secretary of foreign affairs of friendly neighboring Yugoslavia, to which we are joined by many joint experiences and struggles. This is the moment for us to stress the truly important role Yugoslavia paid and is paying in the international arena under the leadership of the great leader Tito, who charted a new path for mankind, national independence and self-government, which means the direct participation of the people in all decisions that concern them. I am glad, therefore, for the opportunity that is being given to us to further strengthen our already friendly relations with Yugoslavia.

The Yugoslav federal secretary of foreign affairs stated: I thank you very much, Mr Prime Minister, for the polite words of welcome you have expressed, as well as the clarity with which you presented your views on the two countries' relations. The relations between our peoples and countries are traditionally good. We, for our past, always pay attention to these relations. My arrival here as well as your imminent visit to my country constitute yet another, stronger confirmation of this friendship as well as the obligation, a duty on our part, to do everything for the further strengthening of our relations and mutual cooperation.

This will be beneficial to our peoples and countries and will strengthen our important joint contribution toward world peace and stability in this area as well as the good neighborly relations.

The Yugoslav federal secretary of foreign affairs, who will leave at 1800 for Belgrade, was received by President Karamanlis shortly before noon today.

Statement on Visit

NC032002 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Excerpt] In a statement released at the end of Yugoslav Federal Secretary for Foreign Affairs Vrhovec's official visit, it is stated that an in-depth examination of the two countries' relations was carried out and that the desire was stressed to develop a spirit of friendship, equality and mutual respect. They agreed to continue efforts for the extension of cooperation in the fields of commerce, economy, transportation, sciences and cultural relations.

During the review of the international situation, the foreign ministers of Greece and Yugoslavia reaffirmed both countries' adherence to the principles of equality, independence, national sovereignty, territorial integrity, noninterference in domestic affairs in any form, not resorting to violence or the threat to use violence and the right of every country to free development. In examining the situation in the Balkans, the two ministers stressed the importance that they give to developing neighborly relations and cooperation among all the Balkan states in the bilateral and multilateral fields so that the Balkans can be transformed into a zone of trust, cooperation, security and peace. This can be achieved through strict respect of the principles of the Helsinki Final Act.

In examining the wider situation, the two sides expressed their concern that the Cyprus issue has not been resolved, something that constitutes a threat to the area's peace and security. They agreed that the total demilitarization, the ending of the military occupation of a great part of the island and the withdrawal from it of all foreign troops, as provided in the UN resolutions, as well as respect for independence, territorial integrity, sovereignty, unity and the nonalignment of the Republic of Cyprus constitute a prerequisite for a lasting and just solution of the problem.

The two ministers favored the consolidation of cooperation and security in Europe. They stressed the need for adopting measures to achieve a general and total disarmament under strict and effective international control. They also affirmed the conviction that resolving differences among states must take place through peaceful means and not by resorting to violence or to the threat to use violence, as provided in the UN charter. The visit and the talks were held in a friendly, cordial atmosphere and an identity of views was confirmed.

KKE CENTRAL COMMITTEE STATEMENT ON PASOK POLICY

NC032058 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Excerpt] A KKE Central Committee decision was released today which, among other things, stressed the following: The government policy in the 5 months PASOK has been governing the country is characterized by denials and contradictions and, despite some measures of a general democratic character, the government has not promoted the change that the country needs. Certain measures were adopted that contribute to the creation of a democratic climate in our country's life. Nevertheless, the government is not proceeding with implementation of its basic declarations.

In the economic sector the government is basing itself on the so-called private initiative and declares that it does not intend to hurt it. In foreign policy the government has taken certain positive steps, but it has indefinitely committed to the future the issues of the withdrawal from NATO and teh abolition of the foreign bases. On the EEC issue the government is limiting itself to claiming certain improved arrangements within the framework of our country's total participation.

EVREN VIEWS NATIONAL ISSUES IN SPEECH IN BURSA

TA031742 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Speech by head of state Gen Kenan Evren in Bursa 3 April -- recorded]

[Excerpt] As you all know, our administration has up to now received with good will the steps taken by our European friends regarding Turkey. We have told them that since we are within the same bloc and alliance, come and see for yourselves the situation in Turkey and meet with whomever you wish. However, these comings and goings reached such a point that the visitors started intentionally to view the situation from a wrong viewpoint and to adopt a tendency to try to control the situation in our country. This is tantamount to disregarding the honor and dignity of the Turkish people. We could in no way tolerate such an attitude. Turkey could never again return to the period of capitulation and protection. This nation knows that it has suffered during that period. When we realized that our tolerance, showed through good will, led to this attitude, we let them know, in my statement issued on the occasion of the new year, that our doors are closed to their like.

It is quite strange and also a bitter consolation that those who were chanting slogans of "full independence" in the streets and squares have thrown themselves onto the bosoms of these countries. They attempted to sell the independence of the Turkish nation -- gained by Ataturk -- because of their ideology. Unfortunately some within Turkey joined in this move. We could not tolerate such acts and we have not done so. A nation's sovereign rights cannot be sold for money. As always, the Turkish nation can not sacrifice its independence and sovereignty. This independence and sovereignty was attained through a lot of bloodshed. It suffered a lot to achieve its independence gained by Ataturk. If a nation must live in slavery it is better for it not to exist at all.

We believe that we are part of the European community. We consider ourselves Europeans. We also know that the major condition for belonging to this community is having a democratic administration. However, we say that we have returned from the brink of a civil war. Give us some time. When the time comes we will transfer the administration to an administration that will come to power through normal elections to be held in accordance with the timetable announced. However, they do not want to understand this. Let me tell you what they want. I will tell you a few of the things they want.

As you know, there is a DISK trial going on in Istanbul. They want us to release the 52 DISK administrators who are on trial. We did not arrest the 52 DISK administrators; they were arrested by our independent judges and courts. They were not arrested because of union activities; they were accused of other crimes. They will account for all these crimes.

Now let me tell you a second thing they want. They want us to immediately release political prisoners. What they call political prisoners are those who have violated Articles 141 and 142 of the Penal Code. In other words, those who have engaged in communist organizations. All these are considered political prisoners, and their release is requested.

They also say they do not believe Turkey will return to a democratic system. How are they supposed to believe if there are some among us who still do not believe? Those inside who do not believe send messages expressing their views. Thus they tell us: If there are those among you who do not believe, neither do we. They also denounce the executions and the arrest of innocents. Let them go on denouncing. Now many countries have abolished the death sentence in Europe. A human rights declaration has been signed. We also signed it, they say. However, the human rights declaration does not ban the death penalty. It is up to every country to decide. The declaration says death penalties permitted by law and decided by the courts can be executed. In spite of this they keep on asking us why we have the death penalty in Turkey. Do we ask them why they do not have the death penalty in their countries? Believe me, many sound people in these countries regret the fact that the death penalty has been abolished. You should not doubt it. However, they cannot reinstitute the death penalty; they want to reintroduce the death penalty.

The resolution by the European Parliament was adopted by 51 members within the 434-member parliament. Some 434 persons have to attend a meeting, but only some showed up. It is just our previous parliament, where no one used to show up. Thus they adopted this resolution with 51 persons, and 45 voted in our favor. There were 8 abstentions. If we do not abide by this resolution, Turkey will be expelled from the European Parliament. This is the resolution adopted by 51 persons. As we have already stated, we are a European country. We are at the same time a Middle East country. If our European friends adopt such a resolution with the votes of these 51 parliamentarians, let them do so. It is their business. They are the ones who will be responsible for such a resolution.

On Political Parties

TA031547 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1535 GMT 3 Apr 82

[Text] Bursa, 3 Apr (AA) -- In a major policy speech in Bursa Saturday, Turkey's head of state General Kenan Evren said there were still some people in Turkey who longed for the pre-takeover days of 1980. He warned them that they were strong enough to deal them such a blow that they would never recover. He also lashed out against the Council of Europe, and said some elements in the West were mistakenly believing that they could exert pressure on Turkey. This was a false hope, he stated. On the subject of Turkish workers in several Western European countries, General Evren said some host governments were trying to force them out, but Turkey was taking all the measures necessary to foil such attempts.

General Evren also bitterly attacked the former leaders of Turkey's dissolved political parties, warning them that they could hope for no rehabilitation as the nation was fed up with them. He said some political leaders were hoping for a come-back either through personal friendships with several Western politicians or through their connections in Turkey, but these were also false hopes. Turkey would never let them rule again as they were the primarily responsible parties that pushed Turkey to the brink of civil war before the takeover of September 12, 1980. He recalled that as the armed forces, (?they) had submitted a memorandum to the president of the day in late 1979. But then, none of the major political parties appeared ready to accept the letter as addressed to them.

He said none of the political parties gave a helping hand to the military before September 1980 in its drive against anarchy and terrorism. And all political parties tried to shift the blame to one another. He said despite the sincere desire of the armed forces to bring about a national reconciliation, party leaders refused to abide by a letter they signed a month after September 1980 to avoid engaging in politics. He cited two cases. One involved a political leader who wrote for a political magazine for a brief period. He said this politician violated Decree 52 of the ruling National Security Council by making a political statement on the past and future of Turkey. The other tried to create the impression that the Turkish Armed Forces had failed to combat with political terrorism before the takeover of 1980 as they had then been armed with the same martial law powers.

All these were lies, General Evren said as he announced that the armed forces asked for emergency powers more than several occasions before the takeover, but were always denied such powers because of political plots and clashes. He said in 1978 the armed forces advised the government of the day to proclaim martial law in Kars, but this was ignored. It later recommended more stringent measures to cope with mounting anarchy, but this was also turned down. The armed forces were left alone in their important mission to fight anarchists and terrorists, General Evren told a huge crowd in Bursa.

KREISKY SUGGESTS SI CONFERENCE IN VIENNA

AU021408 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 2 Apr 82 p 2

[Dispatch by DIE PRESSE correspondent Erwin Maerki]

[Excerpts] Bonn -- At the Bonn meeting of the Socialist International (SI) on Thursday Chancellor Kreisky invited the socialist party leaders to Vienna for a conference. At this conference, to be held in September, problems of the world economy and ways of coping with them are to be discussed. In his talk behind closed doors with his FRG counterpart, Helmut Schmidt, on Thursday afternoon on the periphery of the SI meeting, Kreisky discussed the situation of the SPD, the question of the Rhine-Main-Danube canal and Al-Qadhdhafi's visit to Vienna.

After this talk Kreisky indicated that he intends to support his FRG counterpart in every respect, both internationally and vis-a-vis Schmidt's own hesitant party. He declared that he fully endorsed Schmidt's political views and described the FRG chancellor as a guarantor for the functioning of the East-West dialogue, being firmly anchored in the West but nevertheless also a partner for talks with the East.

According to Kreisky, the Bonn government -- as has been reported -- is no longer interested in completing the Rhine-Main-Danube canal, but will continue to discuss this question with Bavaria which is in favor of continuing the project. Schmidt told his guest that he was outvoted in the cabinet on this question.

Earlier, Kreisky had outlined his fundamental views on the deteriorating East-West relations following the Soviet invasion in Afghanistan and the crisis in Poland. He advocated that the East-West arms limitation negotiations be accompanied by talks at the political level.

CALVO-SOTELO BACKS ARGENTINA, DEPLORES FORCE

NC041054 Paris AFP in English 1030 GMT 4 Apr 82

[Text] Algeciras, Spain, 4 Apr (AFP) -- Argentina's dispute with Britain over the Falkland Islands and Spain's claim to the British colony of Gibraltar were "different and distant" and conclusions should not be drawn "from one to the other," Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo said here. The Spanish press has drawn parallels between the two situations, while admitting that the Gibraltar problem was more complex. The Centrist DIARIO 16 headlined this weekend: "Argentina Recovers Its Gibraltar." Argentina took military control Friday of the Falkland Islands, a British dependency in the South Atlantic.

Spain had chosen to negotiate to settle its differences with Britain over Gibraltar, which has been under the British crown since 1713, Mr Calvo-Sotelo said yesterday during campaigning in southern Spain for the Andalucian parliament elections on May 23. "This path (negotiations) leads to the recovery of Gibraltar by Spain and we will not have long to wait," Mr Calvo-Sotelo said. Officials of the two countries will resume talks on April 20 at Sintra, Portugal, the day when the fence separating The Rock from Spain will be re-opened ending 14 years of blockade by Spain.

Spain has since Friday admitted the validity of Argentin'a claims on the Falkland Islands but deplored the use of force.

MINISTRY PROTESTS TO USSR ON ESPIONAGE CASES

NC041342 Paris AFP in English 1327 GMT 4 Apr 82

[Text] Bern, 4 Apr (AFP) -- The Swiss Government has formally protested to the Soviet Embassy here over the cases of two Soviet diplomats who "abused Swiss territory for espionage purposes," the Justice and Police Ministry announced today.

A ministry communique said that one of the diplomats, the aide to the Soviet Embassy's military attache, had been found in mid-March to be engaging in "espionage against foreign states." Police found foreign military documents in his possession, but as he was protected by diplomatic immunity, he was not detained and left the country two days after the incident, the communique said.

The other diplomat, a secretary at the Soviet Consulate in Geneva, was also found in possession of compromising documents and left the country after Swiss authorities requested that he be recalled to Moscow. According to the communique, the diplomat had used small gifts and cash to bribe a young Swiss national into attempting to obtain a post in the Swiss Foreign Ministry for espionage purposes.

No identities were revealed in the communique, which added that 238 cases of espionage have been uncovered in Switzerland since 1948, two-thirds of them involving agents working for the Eastern bloc.
